3, 4. "When I kept silence." Now, that is sometimes a good thing to do, and David more than once practiced it wisely (Ps. xxxviii, 13; xxxix, 1, 2), but when, as in this case, there was sin to be confessed, it was no time to keep silent, and he here tells us of his sufferings on account of his sinful silence as a warning to us. "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper, but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy." "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." (Prov. xxviii, 13; I John i, 9.) The word "Selah" at the close of verses 4, 5, 7, is used about seventy times in the Psalms and nowhere else in the Bible except in Hab. iii, 3, 9, 13. It signifies "a pause," and may indicate a pause in the music, or a pause in the singing, while the music continues, we shall certainly be making practical and profitable use of it if, wherever we find it, we pause and meditate upon what we have just read.

5. "I acknowledged, * * * thou forgavest." Some one has said that sin unconfessed, like a gathering wound, swells and torments, but the lance gives relief; sincere confession is the lance which brings the peace of forgiveness.

6. "For this shall every one that is godly pray unto Thee." Every sinner rejoicing in the forgiveness of sins is an encouragement to others to come and obtain the like blessing; every Christian who has had the joy of salvation (which they had for a time lost by transgression) restored to him is an encouragement to other backsliders to return. Are we so rejoicing in a possessed and assured salvation that others are, because of our joy, seeking the Lord also? There is a time when He may be found.

7. "Thou art my hiding place." Notice the word "thou" three times in this verse: it is God Himself who is our hiding place, preserver and deliverer.

8. "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go." Evidently the Lord is now speaking in reply to David, for no one can instruct and teach like Him, and no one is capable but Him. He has not promised that we shall have no trouble, that we shall never pass through fire or water; on the contrary He has told us that "In the world we shall have tribulation," and that "all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution" (John xvi, 33; II Tim. iii, 12), but He has promised to be with us in the trouble, and thus lead us, while He preserves us from being in any way injured by it. The word here translated "instruct" signifies to make successful or prosperous, as in Josh. i, 7, 8; I Kings ii, 3, where it is so translated; but the more common Old Testament word for instruction signifies chastisement; it therefore becomes us, if we sincerely desire to be led by Him, to believe that He does lead us, and in what seems oftimes to be the most adverse circumstances, we should hear Him say "I am the Lord thy God who teacheth thee to profit, who leadeth thee by the way that thou shouldest go" (Isa. xlviii, 17).

"I will guide thee with mine eye." Notice the marginal reading, which seems equal to saying, "I will tell you how to go and then watch you to see that you keep in the right way," or as it is plainly stated in Isa. xxx, 21, "Thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it, when ye turn to the right hand and when ye turn to the left." With such great and precious promises how quiet we should be.

9. "Be ye not as the horse or as the mule." It is manifest in every day life that the biggest mule is not always the one in the traces, and that a horse often knows more than his driver. Balaam's ass saw more than its master, and opened its mouth to some purpose, but the rule prevails that horses and mules have not the wisdom of men and must be restrained and guided by bit and bridle. Now, when men and women, and particularly Christians, need to be restrained by the bit and bridle of circumstances, which are God's providences, instead of meekly and trustingly following their Shepherd, it is anything but creditable to them, and does no honor to that beautiful name by which they are called.

10. "Many sorrows shall be to the wicked, but he that trusted in the Lord, mercy shall compass him about." Sorrows touch the righteous as well as the wicked, but the sorrows of the righteous are blessings in disguise, for the loving hand of the Lord is in every one of them, and no matter what they look like they are all goodness and mercy, so that the believer may truly say in all his sorrows: "Sorrowful, yet alway rejoicing." (II. Cor. vi, 10.)

11. "Be glad in the Lord, and rejoice ye righteous." Not circumstances nor feelings, not things around us nor within us, not what we do nor what is done for us, but the Lord Himself, and the Lord alone, is to be our salvation, our joy, our strength, and that at all times.

"Shout for joy all ye that are upright in heart." We may be glad and rejoice in a very quiet way, but here is authority to make our joy known, the inhabitant of Zion is exhorted to cry out and shout because the Holy One of Israel is in the midst (Isa. xii, 6); and when the Lord reigns supreme and alone in any heart it will be hard to suppress a real "Hallelujah!" As it is only those who come without guile who can receive forgiveness, so it is only the upright or sincere who can truly rejoice in the Lord.

A Woman's Discovery.

"Another wonderful discovery has been made and that too by a lady in this country. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus write W. L. Hamrick & Co., of Shelby, N. C. —Get a free trial bottle at

CLEOPATRIA.

AT THE dawning of the next day I was awakened by a priest of the Temple, who brought word to me to make ready for the journey whereof my father had spoken, inasmuch as there was an occasion for me to pass down the river to Anu-r el Ra. Now, this is the Heliopolis of the Greeks, whither I should go in the company of some priests of Ptah at Memfi who had come hither, to Abouthis so I say, the body of one of their great men in the tomb that had been prepared near the resting place of the blessed Osiris. So I made ready, and the same evening, having received letters and embraced my father and those about the Temple who were dear to me, I passed down to the banks of Sihor, and we sailed with the south wind. As the pilot stood upon the prow and with a rod in his hand bade the sailor men loosen the stakes wherewith the vessel was moored to the banks, the old wife, Atoua, hobbled up, her basket of simples in her hand, and calling out her farewell, threw a sandal after me for good chance, which sandal I kept for many years. And so we sailed, and for six days passed down the wonderful river, making fast each night at some convenient spot. But when I lost sight of the familiar things that I had seen day by day since I had eyes to see, and found myself alone among strange faces, I felt sore at heart, and would have wept had I not been ashamed. And of all the wonderful things I saw I will not write here, for, though they were new to me, have they not been known to men since such time as the gods rule in Egypt? But the priests who were with me showed me no little honor, and expounded to me what were the things I saw. And on the morning of the seventh day we came to Memfi, the city of the White Wall. Here for three days I rested from my journey and was entertained of the priests of the wonderful Temple of Ptah the Creator, and shown the beauties of the great and marvelous city. Also was I led in secret by the High Priest and two others into the holy presence of the god Apis, the Ptah who deigns to dwell among men in the form of a bull. The god was black, and on his forehead there was a white square and on his back was a white mark shaped like an eagle, and beneath his tongue was the likeness of a scarabæus, and in his tail were double hairs, and between his horns was a plate of pure gold. I entered the place of the god and worshiped while the High Priest and those with him stood aside and earnestly watched. And when I had worshiped, saying the words which had been told unto me, the god knelt, and lay down before me. And then the High Priest and those with him, who, as I heard in aftertime, were great men of Upper Egypt, approached wondering, and, saying no word, made obeisance to me because of the omen. And many other things I saw in Memfi that are too long to write of here.

On the fourth day came some priests of Annu to lead me unto Sepa my uncle, the High Priest of Annu. So, having bid farewell to those of Memfi, we crossed the river and rode on asses two parts of a day's journey through many villages, which we found in great poverty because of the oppression of the tax gatherers. Also, as we went, I for the first time saw the great pyramids that are beyond the image of the god Horemku (the Sphinx), and the temples of the Divine Mother Isis, Queen of Memnonia, and the god Osiris, Lord of Rosatou, of which Temples, together with the Temple of the worship of the Divine Menka-ra, I, Harmachis, am by right divine the Hereditary High Priest. I saw them and marveled at their greatness and at the white carven limestone and red granite of Syene that flashed in the sun's rays back to Heaven. But at this time I knew naught of the treasure that was hid in Her, which is the third among the Pyramids—would I had never known of it!

And so at last we came within sight of Annu, which after Memfi hath been seen is no large town, but stands on raised ground, before which are lakes fed by a canal. Behind the town is the great temenos (inclosure) of the Temple of the God Ra.

At the pylon we dismounted, and beneath the portico were we met by a man not great of growth, but of noble aspect, having his head shaven, and with dark eyes that twinkled like the further stars.

"Hold!" he cried, in a large voice that fitted his weak body but ill. "Hold! I am Sepa, who opens the mouth of the gods!"

"And I," I said, "am Harmachis, son of Amenemhat, Hereditary High Priest and Ruler of the Holy City Abouthis; and I bear letters to thee, O Sepa!"

"Enter," he said. "Enter!" scanning me all the while with his twinkling eyes. "Enter, my son!" And he took me and led me to a chamber in the inner hall close to the door; and then, having glanced at the letters I brought, he of a sudden fell upon my neck and embraced me.

"Welcome!" he cried; "welcome, son of my own sister and hope of Khem! Not in vain have I prayed the gods that I might live to look upon thy face and impart to thee the wisdom that, perchance, I alone have mastered of those who are left alive in Egypt. Few there are whom it is lawful that I should teach. But thine is the great destiny, and thine shall be the ears to hear the lessons of the gods."

And once more he embraced me and bade me go and bathe and eat, saying that on the morrow he would speak with me further.

And of a truth he did, and at such length that I will forbear to set down all he said both then and afterward, for if I did so there would be no papyrus left in Egypt when the task was ended. Therefore, having much to tell, and perchance but little time to tell it, will I pass over the events of the years that followed.

For this was the manner of my life. I rose early, I attended the worship of the Temple, and I gave my days to study. I learned of the rites of religion and their significance, and of the beginning of the gods and the beginning of the Upper World. I learned of the mystery of the movements of the stars, and of how the earth rolls on among them. I was instructed in that ancient knowledge which is called magic, and in the way of interpretation of dreams, and of the drawing nigh to God. I was taught the language of symbols and the outer and inner secrets thereof. I became acquainted with the internal laws of good and evil, and with the mystery of that trust which is held of man; also I learned the secrets of the pyramids—which I would that I had never known. Further, I read the records of the past, and of the acts and words of the ancient kings who were before me since the rule of Horus upon earth; and I was made to learn all craft of state, the lore of earth, and with it the records of Greece and Rome. Also I learned the Grecian and the Roman tongues, of which indeed I already had some knowledge—and all this while, even for five years, I kept my hands clean and my heart pure, and did no evil in the sight of God or man; but labored heavily to acquire all things, and to prepare myself for the destiny that awaited me.

Twice every year came greetings and letters from my father, Amenemhat, and twice every year I sent back my answers asking if the time had come to cease from labor. And so the days of my probation sped away till I grew faint and weary at heart, for being now a man, ay, and learned, I longed to make a beginning of the life of men. And oftimes I wondered if this talk and prophecy of the things there were to be was but a dream born of the brains of men whose wish ran before their thought. I was, indeed, of the royal blood, that I knew; for my uncle, Sepa, the Priest, showed me the secret record of the descent, traced without break from father unto son, and graven in mystic symbols upon a tablet of the stone of Syene. But of what avail was it to be royal by right when Egypt, my heritage, was a slave—a slave to do the pleasure and minister to the luxury of the Macedonian Lagides—ay, and when she had been so long a serf that, perchance, she had forgot how to put off the servile smile of bondage and once more to look across the world with freedom's glorious eyes?

And then I bethought me of my prayer upon the pylon tower of Abouthis and of the answer to my prayer, and wondered if that, too, were a dream.

And one night, as, weary with study, I walked within the sacred grove that is in the temenos of the Temple, and thought such thoughts as these, I met my Uncle Sepa, who also was walking and thinking.

"Hold!" he cried, in his great voice; "why is thy face so sad, Harmachis? Hath the last problem that we studied overwhelmed thee?"

"Nay, my uncle," I answered. "I am overwhelmed, indeed, but not of the problem; it was a light one. My heart is heavy within me, for I am aweary of life within these cloisters, and the piled-up weight of knowledge crushes me. It is of no avail to store up force which can not be used."

"Ah! thou art impatient, Harmachis," he answered; "it is ever the way of foolish youth. Thou wouldst taste of the battle; thou dost weary of watching the breakers fall upon the shore, thou would plunge therein and venture the despe of the war. And so thou wouldst be going, Harmachis? The bird would fly the nest as, when they are grown, the swallows fly from beneath the eaves of the Temple. Well, it shall be as thou desirest; the hour is at hand. I have taught thee all that I have learned, and methinks that the pupil hath outrun his master." And he paused and wiped his bright, black eyes, for he was very sad at the thought of my departure.

"And whither shall I go, my uncle?" I asked, rejoicing; "back to Abouthis to be initiated in the mystery of the Gods?"

"Ay, back to Abouthis, and from Abouthis to Alexandria, and from Alexandria to the throne of thy fathers, O Harmachis! Listen, now; things are thus: Thou knowest how Cleopatra, the Queen, fled into Syria when that false eunuch Pothinus set the will of Auletes at naught and raised her brother Ptolemy to the sole lordship of Egypt. Thou knowest also how she came back, like a Queen indeed, with a great army in her train, and lay at Pelusim, and how, at this juncture the mighty Cæsar, that great man, that greatest of all men, sailed with a weak company hither to Alexandria from Pharsalia's bloody field in hot pursuit of Pompey. But he found Pompey already dead, having been basely murdered by Achillas, the General, and Lucius Septimius, the chief of the Roman legions in Egypt; and thou knowest how the Alexandrians were troubled at his coming and would have slain his lictors. Then, as thou hast heard, Cæsar seized Ptolemy, the young King, and his sister Arsinoe, and bade the army of Cleopatra and the army of Ptolemy, under Achillas, which lay facing each other at Pelusim, disband and go their ways. And for answer Achillas marched on Cæsar and besieged him straitly in the Bruchium at Alexandria, and so, for awhile, things were, and none knew who should reign in Egypt. But then Cleopatra took up the dice and threw them, and this was the throw she made—in truth it was a bold one. For, leaving the army at Pelusim, she came at dusk to the harbor of Alexandria, and alone with the Sicilian Apollodorus entered and landed. Then did Apollodorus bind her in a bale of rich rugs, such as are made in Syria, and sent the rugs as a present to Cæsar. And when the rugs were unbound in the palace, behold! within them was the fairest girl on all the earth—ay, and the most witty and the most learned. And she seduced the great Cæsar—even his weight of years did not avail to protect him from her charms—so that, as a fruit of his folly, he well-nigh lost his life and all the glory he had gained in a hundred wars."

"The fool!" I broke in, "the fool! Thou callest him great, but how can the man who hath no strength to stand against a woman's wiles be truly great? Cæsar, with the world hanging on his word! Cæsar, at whose breath forty legions marched and changed the fate of peoples! Cæsar, the cold! the far-seeing! the hero! Cæsar, to fall like a ripe fruit into a false girl's lap! Why, in the issue, of what common clay was this Roman Cæsar, and how poor a thing!"

But Sepa looked at me and shook his head.

"Be not so rash, Harmachis, and talk not with so proud a voice. Knowest thou not that in every suit of mail there is a joint, and woe to him that wears it if the sword should search it out. For woman, in her weakness, is yet the strongest force upon the earth. She is the helm of all things human; she comes in many shapes and knocks at many doors; she is quick and patient, and her passion is not ungovernable like that of man, but as a gentle steed that she can guide e'en where she will, and as occasion offers can now bit up and now give rein. She hath a captain's eye, and strong must be the fortress of the heart wherein she finds no place of vantage. Doth thy blood beat fast in youth? she will outrun it, nor will her kisses tire. Art thou set toward ambition? she will unlock thy inner heart, and show thee secret roads that lead to glory. Art thou worn and weary? she hath comfort in her breast. Art thou fallen? she can lift thee up, and to the illusion of thy sense gild defeat with triumph. Ay, Harmachis, these things she can do, for Nature ever fights upon her side; and the while she does them she can deceive and shape a secret end in which thou hast no part. And thus woman rules the world. For her are wars; for her men spend their strength in gathering gains; for her they do well and ill, and seek for greatness and find forgetfulness. And all the while she sits like yonder Sphinx, and smiles; and no man hath ever read all the riddle of her smiles or known all the mystery of her heart. Mock not! mock not! Harmachis; for strong indeed must be he who can defy the power of woman, which, pressing round him like the general air, is oftimes most present when the senses least discover it."

I laughed aloud. "Thou speakest earnestly, O, my uncle Sepa," I said; "almost might one think that thou hadst not come unscathed through this fierce fire of temptation. Well, for myself, I fear not woman and all her wiles; naught know I of them, and naught do I wish to know; and I still hold that this Cæsar was a fool. Had I stood where Cæsar stood, to cool its wantonness that bale of rugs should have been rolled adown the palace steps, even into the harbor of mud."

"Nay, cease! cease!" he cried aloud. "Evil is it to speak thus; and may the gods avert the omen and preserve to thee this cold strength whereof thou boastest! O man, thou knowest not!—thou in thy strength and beauty that is without compare, in the power of thy learning and the sweetness of thy tongue—thou knowest not! The world where thou must mix is not a sanctuary as that of the divine Isis. But there—it may be so! Pray that thy heart's ice may never melt, so shalt thou be great and happy and Egypt be delivered. And now let me take up my tale—thou seest, Harmachis, even in so grave a story woman claims her place. The young Ptolemy, Cleopatra's brother, being loosed of Cæsar, treacherously turned on him. Thereon Cæsar and Mithridates stormed the camp of Ptolemy, who took to flight across the river. But his boat was sunk by the fugitives who pressed upon it, and such was the miserable end of Ptolemy.

"Thereon, the war being ended, Cæsar appointed the younger Ptolemy to rule with Cleopatra, and be, in name, her husband, though she had but then borne him a son, Cæsarion, and he himself departed for Rome, bearing with him the beautiful Princess Arsinoe to follow his triumphs in her chains. But the great Cæsar is no more. He died as he had lived, in blood, and right royally. And but now hath Cleopatra, the Queen, if my tidings may be trusted, slain Ptolemy, her brother and her husband, by poison, and taken the child Cæsarion to be her fellow on the throne, which she holds by the help of the Rome legions, and, as they say, of young Sextus Pompeius, who hath succeeded Cæsar in her love. But, Harmachis, the whole land boils and seethes against her. In every city the children of Khem talk of the deliverer who is to come—and thou art he, O Harmachis. Almost is the time ripe. The hour is nigh at hand. Go thou back to Abouthis and learn the last secrets of the gods, and meet those who shall direct the bursting of the storm. And then act, Harmachis—act, I say, and strike home for Khem, and rid the land of the Roman and the Greek, and take thy place upon the throne of thy fathers and be a King of men. For unto this end wast thou born, O Prince!"

CHAPTER V.

OF THE RETURN OF HARMACHIS TO ABOUTHIS; CELEBRATION OF THE MYSTERIES; CHANT OF ISIS, AND THE WARNING OF AMENEMHAT.

ON THE next day I embraced my uncle, Sepa, and with an eager heart departed from Annu back to Abouthis. And, to be short, thither I came in safety, having been absent five years and a month, being now no more a boy but a man full grown, and having my mind well stocked with the knowledge of men and the ancient wisdom of Egypt. And once again I saw the old lands and the known faces, though of these some few were wanting, having been gathered to Osiris. Now, as I came nigh to the temenos of the Temple, having ridden across the well-tilled fields, the priests and the people issued forth to bid me welcome, and with them the old wife, Atoua, who, but for a few added wrinkles that Time had cut upon her forehead, was even as she had been when she threw the sandal after me five long years agone.

"La! la! la!" she cried; "and there thou art, my bonny lad; more bonny even than thou wert! La! what a man! what shoulders! and what a face and form! Ah, it does an old woman credit to have dandled thee! But thou art over-pale; those priests down there at Annu have starved thee, surely! Starve not thyself; the Gods love not a skeleton. 'Empty stomach makes empty head,' as they say at Alexandria. But, this is a glad hour; ay, a joyous hour! Come in—come in!" and as I lighted down she embraced me.

But I thrust her aside. "My father! where is my father?" I cried. "I see him not!"

"Nay, nay, have no fear," she answered; "his Holiness is well; he waits thee in his chamber. There, pass on. O happy day! O happy Abouthis!"

And so I went, or rather ran, and reached the chamber of which I have written, and there at the table sat my father, Amenemhat, even the same as he had been, but very old; and I ran to him, and kneeling before him kissed his hand, and he blessed me.

"Look up, my son," he said, "and let my old eyes gaze upon thy face, that I may read thy heart."

So I lifted up my head, and long and earnestly he looked upon me.

"I read thee," he said at length; "pure thou art and strong in wisdom; I have not been deceived in thee. Oh, lonely have been the years; but I did well to send thee hence. Now, tell me, tell me of thy life, for thy letters have told me little, and thou canst not know, my son, how hungry is a father's heart."

And so I told him; far into the night we sat and communed with one another. And in the end he bade me know that I must now prepare me to be initiated into those great mysteries that are learned of the chosen of the Gods.

And so it came to pass that for a space of three months I prepared myself according to the holy customs. I ate no meat. I was constant in the sanctuaries and in the study of the secrets of the Great Sacrifice and of the passion of the Holy Mother. I watched and prayed before the altars. I lifted up my soul to God; ay, in dreams I communed with the Invisible, till at length earth and earth's desires seemed to pass from me. I longed no more for the glory of this world, my heart hung above it as an eagle on his outstretched wings, and the voice of the world's blame could not stir it, and the vision of its beauty brought no delight. For above me was the vast vault of Heaven, where in unalterable procession the stars pass on, drawing after them the destinies of men; where the Holy Ones sit upon their burning thrones and watch the chariot wheels of Fate as they roll from sphere to sphere. O hours of holy contemplation! who having once tasted of your joy could wish again to grovel on the earth? O vile flesh! to drag us down. I would that thou hadst been altogether fallen from me, and left my spirit free to seek Osiris!

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

Village of Tecumseh, Mich.
Council Room, Sept 30, 1889.

Special Session.

Present:—President Heesen, Messrs. Ames, Elliott, Heck, James, Smith and the recorder. Absent, Kennedy.

The president stated that the session had been called to consider the marshal's report on sidewalks and the marshal's request for extention of time for collection of taxes.

The marshal reported that he had been unable to collect all of the taxes, whereupon the marshal's warrant for collection of taxes was, on motion, extended to November 1st, 1889.

The marshal further reported that the following persons have not built their sidewalks as ordered: Henrietta Keyser, estate of Richard Ford, James Mitchell, estate of M. Henry, Mrs. Hiram Westcott, E. M. Gray, B. Allen, John McLain, Mrs. A S Doty.

The council then passed the following resolutions:—

Resolved:—That the Common Council of the Village of Tecumseh do hereby require that a new sidewalk be constructed along that portion of the south line of Cummins street in this village, which lies along and adjoining the north line of that parcel of land situate in the Village of Tecumseh, County of Lenawee, and State of Michigan, known and described as follows, viz:—Bounded north by Cummins street, east by Maiden Lane, south by corporation line and west by Mrs Dickson's lot. Recorder.

OUR COUNTRY'S FUTURE,

Or Great National Questions, is the title of Mr. Habberton's new book treating of some of the more important social, political and business questions of the day. The work embodies the opinions of more than one hundred of national leaders and is, on this account, of much more than ordinary interest. Not only in what he has written but also in bringing together the opinions of such eminent men as Bishop Foss, President Harrison, Ex-President Cleveland, Cardinal Gibbons, Dr. Wayland Hoyt, Talmage, Conwell, Bishop Potter, Powderly and others concerning these vital topics of the day, Mr. Habberton has done the public a good service. We understand that the book is to treat of marriage, divorce, the rum power, labor, annexation, our coast defences, speculation, sorrows of the city poor and other topics that would naturally have a bearing on the present and future prosperity of our people.

This volume will give the reader a vast amount of information on all these subjects that are so frequently coming up in the newspapers and periodicals; and the man who reads it understandingly will find himself well informed on all these important questions of the day. Not only this but he will have his information from the most reliable source. The authorities quoted are eminent in Church and State. They have devoted years to the study of these subjects and their suggestions and notes of warning should be carefully read and heeded by all who are interested in the continued stability and prosperity of our country. We know of no other book that will contain so much late reliable information on these topics.

Mr. Habberton is a popular author and bright journalist and all in all, this volume will be found exceedingly interesting and suggestive. Sold only by subscription.

Frank David-on, auctioneer.

A Wonderful Recovery.

Mre. Goo. P. Smoote, a highly cultivated and estimable lady of Prescott Ark., writes under date of April 22: "During the summer of 1887 my eyes became inflamed, and my stomach and liver almost hopelessly disordered. Nothing I ate agreed with me. I took chronic diarrhoea and for some time my life was despaired of by my family. The leading physicians of the country were consulted, and the medicines administered by them never did any permanent good, and I lingered between life and death, the latter being preferable to the agonies I was enduring. In May, 1888, I became disgusted with physicians and their medicines. I dropped them all, and depended solely on Swift's Specific (S. S. S.), a few bottles of which made me permanently well—well from them until now."

GOSSIP ABOUT THE NEXT CONGRESS.

Some Predictions as to the Business That Will Keep the Statesmen Awake Nights —The Contest for the Speakership—Tanner Has Another "Go" at the Pension Question — The Investigators' Report — Gen. Logan's Statue—A Negro Bishop's Advice to His Race.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 21.—As members-elect to the Fifty-first congress reach the city gossip respecting the organization of the next house of representatives naturally increases. The consensus of opinion among members-elect now here indicates that the speakership will go either to Reed of Maine or McKinley of Ohio. Burrows of Michigan, and Cannon of Illinois are on the ground, however, and, it is said, will at least make the contest interesting before balloting begins. At this writing it would be a very difficult undertaking to pick out the stronger candidate from the first two named. Maj. John M. Carson, of The Philadelphia Ledger, appears to have already practically captured the clerkship of the next house. In his modest way Maj. Carson has been working all summer, and it is claimed by his friends that he has pledges sufficient to elect on the first ballot. Col. Swords appears to have no rival for the position of sargeant-at-arms, while there are several candidates for the offices of doorkeeper and postmaster.

Looking for a Lively Session.

There are not many senators and representatives in Washington now, but most of those here expect a very interesting and busy session of congress during the coming winter. The tariff, trusts, the civil service law, the inter-state commerce law, the educational question, a national election law, and subsidies will be among the subjects that will engage the attention of congress. What are recognized as the great questions of the day will for the most part be presented as party measures, and are likely to render the coming session a very important one. Senator Dolph thinks congress will take no step backwards in the matter of legislation on inter-state commerce or civil service reform. Both the inter-state commerce law and the civil service law, he thinks, will probably be amended, but not so as to destroy their efficiency. Wherever amendments are made to either will be for the purpose of eradicating defects disclosed by experience, and to make them more effective.

The Race Question and the Tariff.

The race question, he says, will undoubtedly be discussed in connection with the contested election cases and independently of them. It is a live question, and will not down at any bidding. He feels confident that the tariff will be revised and the source of the revenue diminished. Some measure not very dissimilar to the senate bill will be passed. It is possible, he thinks, that some bill upon the subject of trusts will be passed, but the subject must be dealt with in the main, the senator says, by the states. The power of congress over this subject is so limited as to render of little value any law which it may pass to prevent or control trusts in the states.

Browne of Indiana thinks a revision of the revenue system the most important question awaiting the action of congress, and favors a repeal of the tax on tobacco, on alcohol used in the arts, and a reduction of the tax on sugar. "Something will probably be done regarding the seal fisheries, and also the Canadian fishery dispute. These questions, however, will not divide the parties. I have no doubt there will be some amendment to the inter-state commerce law, and congress will unquestionably legislate on the subject of trusts, if it is possible to define a trust in such a way as not to interfere with legitimate business."

Disabled for Business.

Several years ago my health failed me and I was compelled to give up my business. I was in constant agony caused from excruciating pains in my back, liver, and stomach. I tried every medicine I could hear of, but without receiving any relief. My attention was then called to S. S. S. I tried five bottles of it, and received the most gratifying results. I am today as healthy and sound a man as you will find anywhere, and I owe it all to the curative properties to be found in Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) R. L WOMACK Morgantown, N. C.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Those on the sick list are on the gain.

R. S. Houseman has moved in with G. W. Clark. He has rented his farm to Ed. Smith.

Fred Knapp, of Adrian, agent for the Western Fire Insurance Co., was in the village, Thursday, of last week, looking up their interests here.

Frank Zimmernan, of Augusta, was in the village last week looking up a site for a handle factory.

William and Mrs. W. R. Wilson visited relatives at Adrian over the Sabbath.

G. P. Waring was in Adrian Tuesday, on business.

Rev. J. A. Lowry spent the fore part of the week in Ohio.

Minnie Montgomery, of Tecumseh, spent Sunday as the guest of Marcie Kelley.

Ezra Smith and bride, of St. Johns, visited relatives here several days last week. We understand they will make their home in Alabama.

There was a very good attendance at the L. C. S. held at Mrs. Wm. Riggs on Friday evening.

Jennie Osgood closed her fall term of school in the Harrington district, Friday.

Chas. Hiscock closed his fall term of school in the Easlick district on Friday evening.

There was not a large attendance at the entertainment given at Cottage Hall by the W. C. T. U. on Tuesday evening. The program was very interesting and successfully carried out.

Brose Arner was an Adrian visitor, Wednesday.

On Friday evening, this week, the Library Circle will meet at the Library building. Program will consist of a sketch of J. G. Holland; a review of his works and selections from his letters and lectures, which will interest all who come. Begins at 7:30 promptly.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Mrs. J M. Kerridge, of Adrian, came to see Mrs. Harriett Lancaster who remains very low.

Thursday night of last week the barn belonging to L. A. Johnston burned to the ground with contents, including a horse and colt. Mr. Johnston saved a wagon. It must have been set on fire, The barn stood near the house, which was saved. Our $500 fire engine stood housed during the fire, said house being rented solely for its benefit. Mr. Johnston's loss will be about $400. Had the fire broken out late at night the result must have been quite different as everything was dry as tinder and the wind high.

William Muir has moved into Mrs. Pomeroy's house.

C. S, Burroughs' gum factory is in full blast and the goods are sent out as soon as made. Call for Cuba chewing gum.

Ed. Seamark has two children down with scarlet fever in a mild form.

David Brooks is quite sick with typhoid fever.

Ben Ellis, of North Adams, is clerking for E. W. Freese & Son. Joe Cummings is about to leave. We are glad to see Ben back again, but are sorry to lose Joe's smiling face.

The ladies of the Baptist church will hold a supper and entertainment at the Town Hall on Thursday evening November 7. A fine program is arranged consisting of musical and literary selections rendered by the best home and neighboring talent. The Adrian college quartette will render some of their choicest selections. Supper with chicken pie will be served from 5 to 7. Entertainment will begin at 8. Supper 10c. Entertainment 15c. All are invited.

A. B. Van De Mark has been on the sick list for a few days, but is on the road to health now.

C. F. Clark and Mrs. Laura Tuttle have been over to Ann Arbor to see Mrs. Louise Clark and daughter.

John Davis has the mumps. They are going the rounds.

A general house cleaning has commenced, inaugurated by our health board. More is needed. People ought to clean their premises without being invited.

Our Creamery man, J. T. Clark, has commenced the erection of a creamery to accomodate his large and increasing business. It will be a model when completed, It is to be two stories high and cement, iron, brick and slate used in its construction; it will be fire proof. There is to be an underground cable to his cow barn to transmit power from the engine, for the purpose of grinding feed, cutting corn stalks, etc. We are glad to see this evidence of Mr. Clark's prosperity and enterprise. Push gets there every time; while the laggard is always waiting for something to turn up and has not energy to grasp it when it does.

LAKE RIDGE LACONICS.

The fall term of school closed Friday and the winter term commenced this week Monday, with George Miller in the chair.

Corn husking is well under way and about half a crop.

Wheat seeding stopped by 'default' with about half the acreage, and "the oldest inhabitant is stuck" on this being the worst fall for seeding ever known.

The telegraph is working nicely under Bowen's supervision. The main trouble was weak batteries. Now if operators will keep their ground wire off and keys closed there will be no further trouble. We notice in the Adrian Times that the trouble was at Lake Ridge. Not much; the line is working splendidly at Lake Ridge and Bowen has not been this side of Ridgeway.

Grandma Easlick was 80 years old the 25th. So friends and neighbors to the number of thirty repaired to the old home for dinner, and by supper time the number increased to over sixty. Many substantial tokens of esteem were manifest, and like all similar gatherings everybody enjoyed themselves.

"Alec" is "awake" to the impropriety of nosing in other folks' business. He is not local correspondent at "Macon Center," nor is he a member of of county committee on institutes, nor was he a member of the local committee on publication, etc., and it would be natural to suppose that those having the matter in charge would carry the same to a successful finish. Then it is usual in great county demonstrations for the local press to provide a special reporter.

If the temperance Editor of the Adrian Press, and our temperance Congressman had advertised to meet in joint discussion on the political farce of "cheap free whiskey for revenue only," or "high licensed whiskey for protection to the consumer and laborer," the local press would have furnished an expert short hand reporter, and come out with a column editorial on the merits and demerits of the respective sides, all in the interest of the spoils system; but a great institute embracing the best talent of the best county in the state, in council on the most blighting and loathsome curse ever visited upon any people, entailing an annual expense of billions of dollars and millions of immature deaths, blocking up the channels of moral, mental, physical and financial progress among the masses, is barely worthy of notice—and when taken to task, unloads on a local correspondent of another vicinity. Yes, "Alec" laid "awake" nights in anticipation of a mes-age—by mail or wire—requesting him to repair to the institute with a short hand reporter (Lake Ridge has short hand reporter) and give a full account of the proceedings from start to finish.

ONSTED ODDS.

Bert Kimball arrived last Friday home from Washington Territory.

C. W. Faling of Jonesville, was a guest of the family of M. O. Aldrich over last Sunday.

Are there many apples being shipped from here this year? Well, we should say there was.

Mrs. Isaac Russell of Alma, Gratiot Co. Mich., has been visiting friends in this viciniety and Hillsdale county lately.

The latest marriages of this locality are Mr. Fred Stoddard and Miss Eda Kimball, also, Mr. Eugene Pawson and Miss Ella Hawkins.

Fred Onsted and Ella Riley accompanied their sister and aunt, Mrs. Isaac Russell, to her home at Alma, Mich., last Saturday.

Elmer Stoddard returned to his home in Olivet, Eaton Co., last Monday, after a visit of five weeks among relatives in this vicinity.

Dyke Daniels has put down a new side-walk in front of his village property, which adds greatly to its looks and value.

E. A. Taylor sports a new carriage whenever he rides out now.

That new boy at Fred Glenns, which came along on Friday of last week, causes grandpa Glenn to walk a little on the time plan, and grandmas face is all smiles when one addresses her as grandma Glenn, and aunt Phebe Glenn puts on the airs of an old maid.

Fitch Aldrich has moved from Mrs. Howard's house into Charlie Hawkins house in the Rigdon neighborhood.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

The Patrons of Industry are pondering on the bean question and wondering which will be in the greatest demand the coming season—black or white! It being rather chilly in Holloway for the above named organization, it has adjourned for two weeks from last Thursday night to meet at the town house.

The Public Hall Association is still booming, and having reached a solid basis, will meet Thursday night, Oct. 31st. to appoint a building committee which will draft specifications and advertise to receive bids for the construction of the building.

M. H. Bowen is shipping baled hay.

Mrs. L. M. Belden is visiting the home of her parents in Ohio, intending to spend a couple of weeks there.

Mrs. Barret is again with her daughter, Mrs. George Hoxie.

Joseph Campbell and wife, of St. Johns, have been making their old home and friends a visit.

The familiar form and features of Ezra Hoxsie, of New York, are again visible on our streets.

This part of the county must have been well represented at the meeting of the Farmer's Mutual Insurance Co., at Adrian on Monday last, judging by the number of people flocking that way.

Erskine Wilson went to Ohio on Friday last with 500 sheep.

The unusual sight of two large loads of household goods passing through this village on the Sabbath aroused the query as to whether the law evader was in the land or not.

The Wabash R. R is preparing for the short days, and their increasing number of dark hours, by whitewashing its crossing fences.

The father and sister of Mrs. C. E. Begel have been visiting relatives at this place.

The Adrian Weekly Press, Oct. 25, 1889, says: "Dr. Begel, of Holloway, as a man of parts and adaptations. His best hold is medicine, but he knows how to preach. This comes handy; for when the patient dies, the doctor can also preach the funeral sermon, and charge the whole up in one bill, with but little extra bookkeeping. Thus, as he administers to both body and soul, it is a smart chap who can keep out of his hands entirely." What a glorious and victorious task the Dr. would have ahead of him if Bros. Stearns and Philander would but place themselves within the range of his varied ministrations; i. e. first, to save them, then kill and bury.

Miss May Rogers made a trip to Toledo last week, visiting and returning with Miss Eva Fowler who has been stopping in that city for several weeks.

Geo. Kelley, who is reading law with Salsbury & O'Mealy at Adrian, is at home for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, who have resided in this neighborhood for about a year, will take their departure next week for Auburn, Indiana, their former place of residence. The many friends they leave behind them will regret their leaving and wish them success in the Hoosier state.

Eight years ago I had a bunch come in my breast which caused me much pain and suffering. I had it examined by physicians who called it cancer. I was advised by a friend to use Mixer's "Cancer and Scrofula Syrup" which I did, and I had used it but a short time when the pains were gone and the bunch gradually passed away. And I have never been troubled since. I did not doctor in any other way, except by using Dr. Mixer's medicine. I am now sixty years old and enjoy good health all of which I attribute to this valuable blood purifier. Mrs. Adelaide Dwight, Tecumseh Mich, October 29th. 1889. For sale by druggists.

100 Ladies Wanted,

And 100 men to call on any druggist for a free trial package of Lane's Family Medicine, the great root and herb remedy, discovered by Dr. Silas Lane while in the Rocky Mountains. For diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys it is a positive cure. For constipation and clearing up the complexion it does wonders. Children like it. Everyone praises it. Large size package, 50 cents. At all druggists'.

The HERALD and Detroit Free Press, both papers, or the HERALD and Detroit Tribune, both papers, four months for 50c. Good gracious, what cheap reading.

BEGGS' CHERRY COUGH SYRUP.

The Cronin trial has been formally begun. The Chicago newspapers will be in clover for at least six months to come.

The Patrons of Industry now number 75,000 in the state of Michigan, and the order is increasing at the rate of 1000 a day.

If it is true that President Harrison has gone back on Chairman Quay, there will be more discord than ever in the Republican temple of music.

The Independent Republicans in Virginia have placed a state ticket in nomination and they propose to make it hot for Gen. Mahone from now until election day.

Gov. Foraker, of Ohio, has taken to his bed, having been prostrated by the severe work of the campaign. Campbell is making a brilliant fight, and his chances are improving every day.

Pres. Eliot, of Harvard university has been a student of political economy all his life. He has now left the Republican party, because he believes its high tax policy will ruin the country.

Tanner is not the first man who has discomfitted his enemies with a jawbone. Tanner is out of the Pension office, but Tannerism is still on deck. The character and antecedents of the new commissioner indicate that fact.

New York has finally adopted a plan for soliciting subscriptions for the World's fair. Meanwhile a meeting of 4000 Chicago women was held in that city last week and steps were taken to raise a ladies' fund to help along the Chicago boom.

Is it not reasonable to suppose that by the election of Harrison last fall the tariff was saved? Then why is it that since that event, more strikes have occurred among laboring men in protected industries than ever before in the same length of time?

Secretary Halford has retired from his position as private secretary to the President on account of ill health. "Lige" was a faithful secretary, but his physical health was not rugged enough to meet the exacting cares of the office. It will be a long time before another Dan Lamont fills that place.

The Republican organs are considerably exercised over the fact that the colleges are becoming so largely tinctured with the free trade heresy. We can remember back twenty-five years when the colleges were as badly tinctured with the anti-slavery heresy. The Democratic old fogies of that day regarded "college heresy" with the same holy horror that the Republican old fogies do at the present time. And the "college heresy" of to-day will get there in time.

Judge Cooley returned to his home in Ann Arbor a few days ago prostrated from overwork, and it is now feared that he will not be able to resume his place at the head of the commerce commission. His attack was of a paralytic nature, and symptoms of paralysis have continued to increase since he left Washington. Judge Cooley's permanent disability or death at the present juncture would be a national misfortune.

"That dreadful young Mr. Low," says the Boston Herald (Ind.) "who is called to Columbia college is a tariff-reformer also. It is difficult to see what our high-protectionist friends are to do, unless they get Wanamaker and some others to raise a fund and start a new college in Pennsylvania, where nothing but strictly Pennsylvanian teachings shall be allowed. We believe there is not one college of importance now left in the land in which Pennsylvania political economy is taught."

The State Farmers' League in Massachusetts, lately formed to secure the election of a governor and legislature who will favor a bill prohibiting the coloring of oleomargarine to resemble honest butter, appear to be in earnest. The candidates for governor have been asked to commit themselves, and Dr. Blackmer and William E Russell have come out on the side of the farmers, while Mr. Brackett has so far failed to respond. It is said that 20,000 farmers are actively concerned in this matter, and it may result in the election of a Democratic governor.

TARIFF REFORM NOT DEAD.

At the annual meeting of the Democratic societies of Pennsylvania held last week, the President of the Sate League, Ex Gov. Chauncey F. Black gave a ringing speech. It is another evidence that the leaders of the Democracy intend to take no backward step on the great question of tariff reform. The banner has been nailed to the mast and it will stay there. Gov. Black said:

"We followed in the hot conflict of 1888 a brave and stainless leader to moral and popular victory, though to electoral defeat. A pure-hearted disciple of Jefferson, his definitions of Democratic doctrine were as sound and precise and well nigh as comprehensive as those of the immortal founder himself. His appeal was to the mass; his challenge to the class. He fell, cut down by venal treachery at vital points and overwhelmed by the tide of monopoly's corruption. But the standards are there still. More than a hundred thousand majority of the American people repaired to them with renewed courage and fresh hope, in the election of last year, and, notwithstanding the tainted victory which brazen monopoly bore away from that field, new standards are daily planted beside the old ones, and streams of sturdy new recruits take permanent place beneath them.

"We know no differnces, no dissensions. In the Democratic societies, indeed in the Democratic party, properly speaking, there can be none. Our fundamental doctrines are the same, yesterday, to-day and forever. As to tariff taxes, for instance, discriminating against many industries to artificially stimulate a few, pillaging the mass to enrich a class, no Democrat ever, as an original proposition, believed their imposition consistent with a Republican system. 'It is,' cried Thomas Jefferson, the first Democratic President, 'a question whether we are to live under a limited or unlimited government,' and after the lapse of a century come ringing down to us the answering words of Grover Cleveland, the last Democratic President, 'Unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation.' Congress has power to tax only for the support of government, economically administered, within plain, specified, constitutional limits, and a seizure of the property of the people, by the exercise of the power of taxation, for any but a public and general purpose, is an unconstitutional and monstrous abuse.

"The Democratic societies must, by the very law of their existence, by the principle implied in their name, by the inspiration of their historic faith, carry forward to the final and complete triumph of the people the struggle for tariff-tax reform, to which they were summoned by Grover Cleveland, reform for the relief of the American tax payer, for the emancipation of American labor, for unrestricted access to the material of American industry.

This great assemblege, the greatest of its kind ever seen in the State, is sufficient evidence that the Democratic societies of Pennsylvania will omit no part of their duty. Not only will they stand shoulder to shoulder with their brethren in the Union, but they will, in due time, see to it that our own imperial commonwealth is rescued from the tyranny of monopoly in coalition with a corrupt political party. If this shameless combination has written its ruthless decrees upon our statute book, let us proceed, in order, to wipe them off and to replace them with equal and just laws, framed in the interest of the whole people; to provide for the freedom and safety of labor and the payment of wages in cash; for a State constabulary which shall represent, if commissioned at all, the majesty of the Commonwealth and no private interest; for a revision of taxes, distributing the burdens alike upon all classes enjoying the protection of the State; for a pure and secret ballot, the right preservative of all rights—keeping in constant and steady view the ideal of true Democracy, sketched by Jefferson himself—'A wise and frugal government which shall restrain men from injuring one another, shall leave them otherwise free to regulate their own pursuits of industry and improvement, and shall not take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned.'

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic researches, however, has proven this to be a fact, and result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to the applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet of this new tr atment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 303 west King street, Toronto, Canada. [Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully.

AN AMERICAN COMMERCIAL UNION.

About thirty years ago Stephen A. Douglas, then U. S. Senator from Illinois, wrote a pamphlet on "An American Continental Commercial Union." It has just been published by his brother-in-law, J. Madison Cutts of Washington. It furnishes timely reading at the present day, and affords striking evidence of the remarkable political sagacity and foresight of the Illinois statesman. In commenting thereon, the Chicago News says:

"Senator Douglas proposed "an American continental commercial union or alliance." It was to embrace all "the political communities on the American continent and the adjacent islands, from the frozen ocean to the Isthmus of Panama into one general union for commercial purposes only, without disturbing, changing, or interfering with their respective forms of government, their political relations, or their internal politics." It would remove every restraint upon commercial and social intercourse between the United States and the British possessions on the North, and Mexico, Cuba, and the Central American States on the south. Senator Douglas's idea was to secure to the States of this alliance the benefits of territorial expansion without the recurrence of its dangers, and he pointed to the operation of the German Zollverein as an illustration of its practibility. It remains to be determined, however, whether the scheme of Senator Douglas is any more practicable now than in 1860. It is not proposed to make the present proposition hemispherical. Hence it can not be a continental one. Then, again, our tariff of 45 to 50 per cent. stands in its way in two important points. We can not sell to these states as cheaply as Europe and Asia because of that tariff. Nor, because of it, can we buy their wheat, their corn, their wool, their lead, and their copper. So that, in reality, the success of any Pan-American Zollverein depends almost wholly on a radical revision of our tariff, to which the party in power is utterly opposed.

RESTRICTIONS ON TRADE.

The Tribune in a recent editorial rejoices in the fact that a Canadian manufacturer has been compelled by our restricted tariff to establish a branch in this country. The Tribune regards this as a serious loss to Canadian farmers and laborers and a corresponding gain to ours. But restrictions on trade do not always work as in the case referred to by the Tribune. The largest seed house in our city has a branch in Windsor, Ont., one of our largest iron works established branches in Canada and a Detroit boiler maker has a branch shop there. These firms have all been compelled to establish branches in Canada on account of trade restrictions. They would no doubt prefer to supply the Canadian trade from Detroit and give employment to Detroit labor, rather than employ foreign "pauper laborers." The establishment of these branches in Canada deprived our people of so much employment and our farmers of a portion of the promised home market for which they have paid so dear. Restrictions on trade may benefit a few individuals, but cannot benefit the whole people. If a protective tariff makes any trade more profitable than it would be under free trade, then it must make every other trade less profitable. In the words of a Republican United States Senator whose orthodoxy the Tribune will not question, "Every advance toward a free exchange of commodities is an advance in civilization, every obstruction to free exchange is born of the same narrow, despotic spirit which planted castles upon the Rhine to plunder peaceful commerce; every obstruction to commerce is a tax on consumption; every facility to a free exchange cheapens commodities, increases trade and production, and promotes civilization. Nothing is worse than sectionalism within a nation, and nothing is better for the peace of nations than unrestricted freedom of commerce with each other." WM. G. BROWNLEE in Detroit Free Press.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this receipt in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. Noyes, 149 Powers block, Rochester, N. Y.

Be Sure

If you have made up your mind to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla do not be induced to take any other. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a peculiar medicine, possessing, by virtue of its peculiar combination, proportion, and preparation, curative power superior to any other article. A Boston lady who knew what she wanted, and whose example is worthy imitation, tells her experience below:

To Get

"In one store where I went to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla the clerk tried to induce me buy their own instead of Hood's; he told me their's would last longer; that I might take it on ten days' trial; that if I did not like it I need not pay anything, etc. But he could not prevail on me to change. I told him I knew what Hood's Sarsaparilla was. I had taken it, was satisfied with it, and did not want any other.

Hood's

When I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I was feeling real miserable, suffering a great deal with dyspepsia, and so weak that at times I could hardly stand. I looked, and had for some time, like a person in consumption. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me so much good that I wonder at myself sometimes, and my friends frequently speak of it." MRS. ELLA A. GOFF, 61 Terrace Street, Boston.

RAUM'S FIRST SPECIAL CASE.

The Widow of a Veteran of 1812—The Commissioner a Wounded Vet.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 26.—Commissioner Raum yesterday made special a case which is of more than usual interest. It is that of a lady who was born under the administration of Gen. Washington and is now 93 years of age. She is entitled to a pension as the widow of a soldier of the war of 1812, but has never before made an application. The statement of the case was presented to Gen. Raum by her son, and the commissioner concluded that this was a case which might properly be made special.

The commissioner himself is entitled to a pension. He is a wounded soldier of the late war, but has never filed an application for a pension. While his case would no doubt receive careful attention at present from the pension office officials, he has no idea of trying to get a place on the pension list.

McPherson Is in the Race.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 26.—The United Press is in receipt of a communication from Mr. Edward McPherson, of Pennsylvania, who is an applicant for the clerkship of the house of representatives. The letter incloses a paragraph contained in the United Press dispatches of the 20th inst., stating that "Maj. John M. Carson appears to have practically captured the clerkship of the next house. It is claimed by his friends that he has pledges sufficient to elect on the first ballot," etc. Mr. McPherson, referring to this dispatch, says: "I have been making a canvass of the Republican members for the clerkship of the house. I deny the claim of Maj. Carson's friends that he has pledges sufficient to nominate on the first ballot, and I propose to test this issue in a manly way in the Republican caucus, which alone can settle it."

A Rumor That Halford Will Resign.

WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 26.—It is said that United States District Attorney D. S. Alexander, of Buffalo, will resign in order to become private secretary to the president in place of Mr. Halford, who, it is reported, is obliged on account of poor health to resign.

FOUR MEN CRUSHED TO DEATH.

Frightful Accident to a Party Which Played Cards Under a Car.

PITTSBURG, Oct. 28.—While playing cards under a freight car on a siding at Irving, thirty miles east of here on the Pennsylvania railroad at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon an engine backed up against the train of cars, crushing to death James Thompson, Thomas Thompson, Robert Robinson, and Sampson Emmons, and fatally injuring Ben Stubbs. Thomas Thompson was married and leaves a widow. The others were single and about 30 years of age.

FOUND A DYNAMITE BOMB.

A Party of Schoolboys Meet with a Frightful Accident.

FRANKLIN, Pa., Oct. 26.—A terrible accident happened on the Galloway farm near here last evening. A party of school boys found a bomb loaded with giant powder which they attempted to open, when it exploded. Ten of the boys were terribly hurt. John Fitzgerald's arm was blown off and his body horribly mutilated. He will die. Four others, named Patterson, O'Connor, Rogers and Hudson are in a very precarious condition. The others will recover.

The Parnell Commission Again.

LONDON, Oct. 25.—The Parnell commission met again yesterday, and after Mr. Biggar had spoken briefly, Michael Davitt made a long speech to the commission, in which he reviewed his career in politics in behalf of freedom for Ireland, and expressed his opinions regarding the course of successive English governments in that country. Much of the speech was devoted to denunciation of Delaney, one of the Trevelyan and Burke conspirators, who was brought from prison in Ireland to testify for The Times, and who, he said, had wilfully perjured himself. Davitt said he believed he had converted Patrick Ford, of The New York Irish World, to a belief in constitutional methods. The assertion made by Le Caron that there were 300,000 men in readiness to invade Canada from the United States was underestimated, as the Fenians alone numbered a million. Among the spectators in court was Le Caron.

In Bad Sanitary Condition.

INDIANAPOLIS, Oct. 24.—The state board of health has received reports from nearly all the teachers in the state regarding sanitation and ventilation in school houses. In most cases window ventilation is all that is provided, and the heating is arranged so that the children in one part of a room suffer from heat while in another they shiver with cold. Outhouses and wells are constantly found in alarming proximity to each other, and both are used for years without being cleaned.

A Judge's Scathing Remarks.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Oct. 25.—Judge Solders Friday sentenced Charles Roberts to fifteen years in the penitentiary for criminally assulting an 11-year-old girl in July last. In pronouncing sentence the judge said: "Roberts, you are in society a hyena—a bloodhound on the track of innocent girls. It is well for you that your crime is not, as it once was in England, punishable by death. If it were, I should sentence you to the block."

Evansville Strikers Beaten.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., Oct. 26.—The strike of the Louisville and Nashville switchmen in this city ended yesterday. When new men that had been brought here from East St. Louis, Ills., took the places of the strikers, the latter withdrew from the fight, allowing the loaded freight cars which have been held by them in the yard for four days to move out.

Smashup of Freight Trains.

MASON CITY, Ia., Oct. 28.—A damaging collision of freight trains occurred on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road between Garnes and Britt Thursday night. The engineers and firemen saved themselves by jumping. Both engines and several freight cars were wrecked. The accident was due to a misunderstanding of orders.

HANKS ACCUSES SULLIVAN.

Reported at Chicago that Alex. Sullivan is Implicated in the Bribery.

CHICAGO, Oct. 16.—The Herald says that Bailiff Hanks' examination in the grand jury room yesterday occupied nearly an hour and contained some startling statements. The bailiff said that when negotiating with Graham he was assured by the latter that the money with which to bribe jurors would be furnished by Alexander Sullivan. The bailiff also confessed that during the trial he kept up the drooping spirits of Beggs, Coughlin and O'Sullivan by delivering to them verbal messages of cheer from their friends on the outside, for which service he was paid handsomely by Graham. He said he frequently told Coughlin, who was his especial charge, that Alexander Sullivan was looking after his interests, and that no harm would come to him or his companions if they only preserved a bold and defiant front.

Another Important Arrest.

CHICAGO, Oct. 17.—Henry M. Stoltenberg, private secretary and stenographer for Alexander Sullivan, was arrested last evening for alleged complicity in the jury bribing in the Cronin case. It is believed that Stoltenberg acted as the confidential agent or messenger who carried messages to John Graham and Fred Smith, who were arrested a few days ago for jury bribing.

Stoltenberg's arrest is by all odds one of the most sensational episodes of the entire case, for it brings the investigation into the office of the man who has been popularly supposed to be the controlling spirit of all that has happened. Judge Longenecker declined to state last night whether or not Stoltenberg had admitted anything during his brief interview, and when he was pressed hard for a statement he also declined to deny that he had been placed in possession of new and important facts.

Stoltenberg was taken before the grand jury Thursday, and, after his examination, was released.

THE EPISCOPAL CONVENTION.

Report on the Color Line—Progress of the Liturgical Revision.

NEW YORK, Oct. 19.—At yesterday morning's session of the Protestant Episcopal convention in New York the committee on canons reported that it was inexpedient at present to establish a missionary episcopate for the colored people, even were the church justified by its laws in recognizing the separate races. A decision on the question was postponed

Effects of Modern Life.

Eminent authorities unanimously agree that the high pressure methods of modern life are rapidly making us a race of helpless invalids—subject to all manner of nervous affections, headaches, insanity, dizziness, neuralgia, backache, hysteria, nervous troubles of the heart, stomach, kidneys, brain, etc. Ladies and gentlemen who are thus afflicted, or who are compelled to keep late hours, do much mental or physical work, who worry or fret about business or domestic troubles, should remember that no other remedy in the world will so spedily cure these diseases, remove worry and the blues, induce tranquil sleep, relieve pain, or build up the brain and nervous systems, as Dr. Miles' great discovery, the Restorative Nervine. It contains no opium or morphine. Trial bottles free at Baker & Hall's Drug Store.

FOR THE MONEY THERE WAS IN IT.

Consternation Created Among the Prohibitionists of Dubuque, Iowa.

DUBUQUE, Iowa, Oct. 18.—Some time ago a prohibition spy was sent here to obtain evidence against saloon keepers selling liquor in violation of the prohibitory law. Thursday the cases in which he was interested were called for trial. After the trial of the first case had proceeded for some time one of the attorneys for the defense offered the following letter in evidence:

"DUBUQUE, Iowa, Morch 7.—GENTS OF PERSONAL LIBERTY ASSOCIATION, Dubuque: I have bean having a talk with the detective that has been in your town and got evidence againse you folks for violator of injunctus. He has evidence agan about 100 of you: he says he don't care about the bisness only the money there is in it. He has to go on the stand at the next term of court or some time soon: you might get him to go away if use him all right. His name is Joseph Mercer.

"A FRIEND."

The attorneys for the prosecution were dumfounded. They read the letter and were obliged to admit that the handwriting was that of Mercer, the spy who had been in their employ. None of the cases were disposed of. The reading of the letter has created consternation among the few Prohibitionists in the city.

KING OF THE BLOOD

The Most Thorough Purifier of the Blood Yet Discovered.

Cures all Humors, from a common tion to the worst Scrofula.

It purifies the Blood.
It invigorates the Liver.
It regulates the Bowels.
It strengthens the stomach.
It gives vivacity in place of lassitude; cheerfulness in place of gloom, and robust vigor in place of debility.

Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Disordered Liver, Constipation, Nervous Affections, General Debility, in short all the numerous diseases and discomforts caused by impure blood are speedily conquered by this powerful corrector, the chief and sovereign of all ancient or modern medical discoveries—KING OF THE BLOOD.

Its name is its best description as it is a royal dispenser of the blessings of health and vanquishes the foes that lurk in the blood.

It banishes PIMPLES, SALT RHEUM, SCALY ERUPTIONS, ULCERS, SCALD HEAD, FEVER SORES, and all SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

It checks CONSUMPTION in its early stages. It has frequently cured it when advanced.

It disperses TUMORS and CANCERS without the Surgeon's knife.

It cures DROPSY, general or partial.

It cures FEMALE WEAKNESS and DISEASE.

It reduces in a safe and effectual manner all swellings, external or internal.

It eradicates the effects of Venerial Disease and Mineral Poisons and establishes a sound constitution.

Many certificates, much further information and full directions to accompany, will be found in the pamphlet, "Treatise on Diseases of the Blood," in which each bottle is enclosed.

Price $1 per bottle containing 12 ounces, or 50 doses. Sold by druggists or medicine.

If your druggist does not happen to have it on hand, request him to order a supply of it for you and it will be cheaper than for you to order direct of us, and less trouble.

LONG LIFE.

There is nothing in the world more generally desired than long life, yet the majority of people put off caring for their health—not because they are really careless, but because we live our lives at such a pace we have not time to give the subject sufficient thought untill we recive a reminder in the shape of a severe illness.

Then, too, we are constantly bewildered by the various schools of medicine, and the physicians who represent them, and often blunder in our choice of a doctor.

If people only knew that the very best health-keeper, life-preserver, and disease preventer that has yet been discovered, is simered down into a concentrated and very palatable form in the shape of New Style Pleasant Taste Vinegar Bitters, they would not hesitate a moment to try it.

But they do not know. How can they know, when so many not only worthless, but positively injurious drugs are constantly flooding the market under various names and guises, that the New Style Vinegar Bitters is as bad as any of them.

They do not know, of course, unless they have courage to try the New Style. It straightens out a tangled-up system in a very short while, and those who buy it once buy it always.

Why dont you try it, reader? It is sent out by a responsible house, and is exactly as represented. It costs but one dollar for a very large bottle. Try it at once and you will never be so glad of anything in your life. Your druggists may not have it, but he will order it for you. Be sure it says New Style Pleasant Taste on carton and bottle before you take it. Try it, and you will feel happier than if you had found a gold mine—of health.

Free from alcohol and opium; composed of expensive herbs and roots, with a fine, delicate flavoring.

Dr. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such, that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

A $20 A Day Man!

A VOICE from Ohio. Here is portrait of Mr. Garrison, of Salem, Ohio. He writes: "Was at work on a farm for $20 a month. I took hold of your agency for E. C. Allen & Co's books and publications and often make $20 a day." (Signed) W. H. GARRISON.

William Kline, Harrisburg, Pa., writes: "I have never known anything to sell like your album. Yesterday I took orders enough to pay me over $25." M. J. Elmore, Bangor, Me., writes: "I take an order for your album at almost every house I visit. My profits often amount to $20 for a single day's work." Others are doing quite as well; we have not space to give extracts from their letters. Every one who takes hold of this grand business goes up grand profits.

Shall we start YOU in this business, reader? Write to us and learn all about it for yourself. We are starting many; we will start you if you don't delay until another gets ahead of you in your part of the country. If you take hold you will be able to pick up gold fast. BRITTON BUDGET.

Ed. Bauchman and his new wife are visiting friends in Milan.

Elmer and Will Osgood and their wives attended a surprise party at their fathers home in Morenci, on Wednesday evening, 23d.

Neal Exelby, who was quite seriously hurt by the upsetting of a load of hay one day last week, is again able to be out.

Conference at the Christian church next week.

Osgood Bros. are turning out the cider at the rate of fifty barrels per day.

Chas. Dubois and Steve Ball have returned from their Kansas trip. Charlie brought home a lot of buffalo scalps that he captured while west. Come off, Charlie, e'ms jack rabbits' ears.

Home missionary ladies society are painting, papering and otherwise repairing and improving the church.

Those boys who were playing ball in the street last Sunday, did not seem to have much respect for themselves or the village.

Ezra Smith and wife, a newly married couple of St. Johns, Mich., have been visiting at Sam Kniffin's, the past week.

Mrs. Oirth and son, who have been visiting Dr. Hendershot and wife, returned to their home in Dunkirk, O., last Friday.

John Hoagland is moving from Summit City to Britton. We understand he will live over Osborn's store and work in Kniffin & Co's mill.

A room in the Daykin building is being fitted up for the post office, and after it once gets moved into its new quarters it is to be hoped that it will be no longer necessary to keep a bell on it in order to find it.

The hoop and saw mill of Kniffin & Co., Beasley's planing mill, the feed and cider mill of Osgood Bros., and the fruit drying establishment of Bowerman and Rogers have made business lively in Britton for some time; and what these institutions have done for the village during the past three months, would be done all the year round by a grain warehouse and custom grist mill. With the coming of these two institutions the now empty stores would be occupied and the population of the village would double in an incredible short time, and Britton would soon be the most prosperous village in Lenawee Co. On the other hand, if a little enterprise on the part of some of our monied men, is not soon manifested, Britton will get to be a moss-covered back number, in very short order. This is solemn truth. Gents. A little capital properly invested now will keep the ball rolling. No better location in the county for a good, smart town than right here. Just about centrally located with relation to Adrian, Milan, Dundee and Tecumseh, easy of access by rail from four directions, what else is wanted? Just this, and you can easily supply the want. Place in the village of Britton everything that the people for eight miles around Britton need, and a boom will surely follow. Money that you have already invested will then begin to yield you some return.

One of those happy occasions which always makes us feel that it was good for us to be there, was the marriage of Mr. Ed. Bauchman and Miss Carrie Britton at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Britton, on Wednesday evening, 23d. The ceremony was performed at six o'clock Rev. Jas. Wright officiating. M. D. Britton, brother of the bride, and Miss Anna Smith of Macon, acting as groomsman and bridesmaid. The bride wore blue satin trimmed in cream colored goods of same nature, which was very pretty and becoming. Although a very few invitations were extended outside the family connections, the number of gues's reached nearly 150 people. Immediately after the interesting ceremony and congratulations the guests were conducted to G. A. R. hall, which had been transformed into a huge dining room for the occasion. Five large tables were spread and loaded down with one of the finest repasts for which Mrs, Britton is noted. Everything passed off in a most happy manner. Carrie was one of our best and brightest girls, and Ed. a popular and esteemed young man, and our wishes were that each may havedrawn a prize. The feelings entertained by the guests are somewhat evinced by the number of beautiful presents. The bridegroom plays a leading horn in the Britton Cornet Band and this organization made it a point to be at the wedding. After playing a few selections they laid down their instruments and marched into the presence of the newly wedded pair and presented Ed. with a new Eb, a real dandy; drum major, D. R. Wiggins, making a neat little speech as he handed over the token. A list of presents and donors, as near as could be made out, would read something like this:

Mr. and Mrs. J. Britton, pair gold bracelets, bible and $5.00 bill.

Grandma Britton, set gold band china.

Mary Bowerman, silver berry spoon.

J. G. Miller and wife, silver castor.

Geo. Hawks and wife, glass berry dish.

One Fact.

Is worth a column of rhetoric, said an American statesman. It is a fact, established by the testimony of thousands of people, that Hood's Sarsaparilla does cure scrofula, salt rheum, and other diseases or affections arising from impure state or low condition of the blood. It also overcomes that tired feeling, creates a good appetite, and gives strength to every part of the system. Try it.

There is no person who can read Dr. Mixer's valuable home testimonials in this issue and fail to be convinced of the great merit of "Mixer's Cancer and Scrofula Syrup." Dr, Mixer will receive patients at the Lilley House Saturday November 2nd. Consultation free.

FRANKLIN UNION LITERARY AND LYCEUM.

The East Franklin Union Literary and Lyceum met at the residence of Mrs. A. D. Hunt, Oct. 25th. Notwithstanding the darkness of the night, the house was well filled, a number of visitors being present. There was nothing unusual in the miscellaneous business of the meeting, with the exception of a vote to have the young people do the debating at every alternate meeting, which will be a great benefit to them. The following program was well rendered:

Dec.—Newell Wisner.
Rec.—Addie Lamkin.
Dialogue—Alma Whelan, Anna and Rena Allen.
Dec.—Herbert Munger.
Rec.—Nina Allen.
Dialogue—Mrs. A. B. Wisner and Mrs. G. W. Allen.
Dec.—Willard Hunt.
Biography—Mrs. S. N. Munger.
Recess.

Then followed the discussion of the question, Resolved, That the many mechanical inventions are a detriment to the laboring classes, Ed. Spaulding, aff., and G. W. Allen, neg. It was decided in favor of the neg.

We had the pleasure of listening to some very interesting remarks from Mr. Hunt, of Coldwater, father of A. D. Hunt. He is in his 94th year, and it is seldom a man of his age can get up in a meeting of this kind and floor most of the other debaters, as he did. The meeting then adjourned to meet Nov. 8 at Lorenzo Billington's. A good program has been prepared for the occasion. Question—Resolved, That lawyers and doctors do more harm than good. Leon Allen, aff.; Clarence Wisner, neg.

FARMERS' SOCIAL CLUB.

The next meeting of the Farmers' Social Club will be held at Mrs. John Fisher's, Friday evening, Nov. 8th. Program:

Inst. music—Ora Gillespie.
Song—Ladies' quartette.
Paper—Ida Rector.
Selection—Etta Coddington.
Sel.—Mrs. John Fisher.
Inst. music—Eva Recter.
Sel.—Will Fisher.
Quotations—All members.
Report—School children.
Song—Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Lester and Etta Coddington.
Question—Is it advisable for the members of the farmers' clubs to unite with the Patrons of Industry?

It is expected that the selections, quotations, etc., be taken from the writings of the Carey sisters.

There are many people in Adrian who know of Mrs. Frankie Smith's great suffering some nine years ago, when she had the cancer on her nose and which destroyed her nose and a part of her face. When in this condition, I took her into my home to keep her out of the poor house. About this time Dr. Mixer visited Adrian, and hearing of the case came to see her, and let her have some of his Cancer and Scrofula Syrup. She continued in the use of it, and to my positive knowledge the medicine cured her entirely. She now wears an artificial nose and is well and healthy. Also my daughter, Mrs. Joseph Sharlow, had an abscess come on her thigh, which gathered and broke. It ate away the flesh very rapidly, and caused her untold sufferings for three years. She visited the physicians at Ann Arbor, Detroit, Toledo and this place. All told her that her limb must come off or it would cause her death, as it could not be cured. She at last commenced to use "Mixer's Canger and Scrofula Syrup," and using fifteen dollars worth she was restored to perfect health. This was eight years ago, and she has not been troubled since. I think these two cures are the most remarkable ones that I ever knew,

A PROMISING LIFE GONE OUT.

Will Robbins is dead. These sad words fell upon our ears as we entered the office on Monday morning. It can not be true, we thought. And yet, it was true. Will had filled the position of traveling salesman for several years for the firm of J. F. Scott & Co., wholesale jewelers, of New York city. He was taken sick about ten days ago at Peoria, Ill., with an attack of acute pneumonia, and in less than one week after he called a physician, the disease had wrought its work and his life had gone out.

Will was born January 20, 1860 in this village. Here his boyhood was spent. He attended our school, passed through a full course of study in the High School, and graduated with the class of 1877, which up to that time was the banner class. Shortly after his graduation, in August 1877, he entered the HERALD office as clerk and local reporter, which position he held until September 1878. His habits of industry and faithfulness to duty were fully displayed during his services here. The local columns were always bright and newsy and the local department of the HERALD was never more efficiently managed than during the year of his service. In the fall of '78 he obtained a place with a jewelry firm at Cleveland, Ohio, and for several years thereafter he was in their employ, his duties being mostly upon the road. About five years ago he went to St. Paul, Minn., where he remained a few months. He then entered the employ of the New York firm, for whom he was traveling when the final summons came. His stricken mother was summoned to his death bed, but arrived too late to see him alive. His father and sister met her at Adrian, and brought the remains to Tecumseh. The casket was conveyed to O. B. DeWolf's and there the funeral rites were held on Tuesday afternoon. Rev. W. H. Babbitt gave a few heart touching words of consolation to the mourners and the Presbyterian choir rendered beautiful music. The casket was then consigned to the tomb in the family lot in our evergreen cemetery.

Death is always a sad event. But when a young and hopeful life, blossoming into sturdy manhood and entering the realm of future usefulness and promise, is cut short in its career, it becomes doubly sad. Will possessed all the elements of character to become a strong and influential citizen. He had gained a fine start in business and was destined to make his mark in coming years. Will's old Tecumseh friends attended the funeral and they were all mourners there. It seems like a dream. A bright life has gone out like a tale that was told.

GONE TO REST.

Almeda M. Collar was born in the township of Macon, May, 9th, 1846. Her childhood was passed in that town and her whole life was spent in this vicinity. She was a bright scholar, and one of our society belles in her girlhood, being richly endowed with personal beauty and social accomplishments. On her 20th birthday, May 9, 1866, she was united in marriage to Alanson B. Bangs, at the M. E. church, in this city, and the couple began life's journey together on a part of the old farm in Raisin. Twenty three years have passed since then and during this time Mrs. Bangs was the light of a happy home, an affectionate wife and a fond mother. Three children blessed the union, one of which died in infancy. Two sons remain besides the husband to mourn the death of their best and truest earthly friend. Last winter she was taken ill and for nearly ten months had been a great sufferer, but she bore her afflictions with christian fortitude and resignation, and although wishing, for her family's sake, to remain, yet willing to embark for the other shore. After her marriage her life was bound up in the household of which she was mistress, and in that little circle the noblest traits of woman were exemplified in her daily life. She was patient, self sacrificing, generous, affectionate To the husband and sons who tarry here below, the warmest words of praise will but faintly describe her character.

The funeral obsequies were held at the M. E. church on Saturday afternoon, October 19, and in accordance with a request of the deceased, the sermon was preached by her uncle, Rev. Frank Bangs, of Eaton Rapids. A large concourse of friends and neighbors attended the services, and a lengthy procession followed the casket, with its precious burden, to the tomb.

Card of Thanks.

We wish to express to our many tried and true friends in old Tecumseh our heartfelt thanks for their generous assistance and sympathy in this day of affliction and trial.

Tormenting Pains.

I had an attack of rheumatism that clung to me with persistence for nearly four years, defying all the remedies prescribed by physicians, and numbers of other medicines which I took. I was continually troubled with tormenting pains. I finally concluded to give up all other treatment, and went to the drug store of Dr. J. C. Franklin, in this city; here, I purchased a bottle of S. S. S. After taking several of which, I was perfectly cured. I have been well of the disease since last January. I consider S. S. S. a blessing to all afflicted with rheumatism. S. E. JORDAN,

TWO BUSINESS CHANCES.

That Tecumseh is in need of more manufacturing establishments is a fact that requires no demonstration. No argument whatever is necessary to prove it. There are two chances of this character now in sight, either or both of which can be obtained by proper effort.

Harry Lee owns the letters patent on a folding and extension table, which has been tested and found to be an excellent invention. The tables are made of various sizes, from a small light stand to the largest size extention dining table. The small folding table is the best and easiest and simplest folding table we ever saw. The extension article is constructed on a new plan, the center of the tab being stationary, and the two ends are arranged to draw out. These ends are provided with legs, which makes the table perfectly solid when drawn to its full length. The dining room of the new Hotel Emery at Adrian is furnished with these tables and landlord Emery is very much pleased with them. Mr. Lee has been manufacturing them in a small way for several months, and has sold quite a number of the folding tables. He is now prepared to organize a company and start the manufacture of them on a large scale provided a proper bonus is raised to assist in erecting the necessary buildings. Two thousand dollars will be sufficient to start the enterprise on a proper basis. If our citizens take hold of this matter promptly, this business establishment will remain here in Tecumseh where it rightfully belongs.

Here is chance No. two. A Mr. Zimmerman of Augusta, was in town last week with a view to establishing a handle factory here. He is an expert in that line of business and is a hustler too. He proposes, for a bonus of about one thousand dollars, to start a good factory here and to put in at the same time the necessary steam power and machinery to run an electric light plant.

These are both good business chances. What will our citizens do to hold them? Shall we grasp them at once while they are within reach, or shall we let them slip through our fingers? Fuller information in regard to both of these enterprises can be obtained by consulting S. W. Anderson.

Auction Sale.

Fred Goede will sell at public auction on the Mrs. Matthews farm, three miles west of Tecumseh village, on Thursday November 7th, at 12 sharp the following property: four year old Gelding, one mare in foal, one spring colt, four yearlings, one spring calf, two cows, lumber wagon, set double harness, Burtch plow, set scotch grags, 5 acres corn fodder, etc., Usual terms of sale. THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH., OCT. 31, 1889

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

F. A. Lawrence is in Tecumseh, assisting at his clothing store.

Mrs. Ed. Baird, of Dayton, O., is visiting her mother in the village.

Harry Dann, of Chicago, is in the village, and expects to remain until December.

E. H. Rankin, formerly manager of the Tecumseh Mfg Co., was in the village last week.

Robt. Stretch was in town the first of the week, having come home to attend Will Robbins' funeral.

Alf, James, Jr. and Mrs. Sam James of Detroit, came out last Tuesday to attend Will Robbins' funeral.

Mr. Jerry Blessing and Miss Mary McKendry of this village, were united in marriage last Thursday evening.

Andrew Hood has been visiting friends in Tecumseh and Deerfield for the past week. He now lives in Detroit.

We are glad to learn that A. D. Hall is rapidly recovering from the injury he received last week, and will soon be out again.

The next meeting of the Royal Arcanum will be held Tuesday evening Nov. 5. A full attendance is desired to witness an initiation.

Gus Wright and Webb Frazer went to Devils lake Tuesday on a hunting and fishing expedition and will remain till Saturday.

The judgment of $500 rendered in the circuit court against Wm. T. Thorpe in favor of Chas. Beneway has been affirmed in the supreme court.

G. W. Mead has gone on the road, taking orders for L. L. May & Co., the St. Paul nurserymen. His first trip will be through Hillsdale county. Success to him in his new venture.

Jas. Elliott is building a barn on the property he recently purchased north of his blacksmith shop, formerly known as the Sarah James place. He intends to move there in the spring.

A traveled corn doctor puts it in this wise: "Detroit for fresh air, Saginaw for whiskey, Grand Rapids for shavings, Ionia for pale bricks, Jackson for girls, and Adrian for cripples.

A lot of Lon Chapman's old friends and neighbors from the village went out to his place yesterday and gave him a surprise. The company took eatables with them and a bountiful oyster dinner was served. Most of the guests tarried a portion of the afternoon and enjoyed a pleasant social visit.

The "house warming" at Wm. C. Heck's new residence last Friday evening was a most enjoyable affair. From seven till ten o'clock the house was thronged with guests. The refreshments were ample and served in a very complete and tasty manner. Such social events form an oasis in the routine of every day life, which ought to come more frequently.

The Prohibs of Macon wish to thank the county committee and all those persons who in any way took part in making the institute such a grand success. The Prohibition club will hold a social at the home of Chas. Skinner, Wednesday eve., Nov. 6. A cordial invitation is extended to all. Election of officers will take place.
J. W. BAKER, Pres.

M. P. Brown has sold out his photograph business to Walter L. Heck, and will give possession next Monday. Mr. Brown first opened a photo gallery on the 14th day of February, 1874, succeeding Mrs. M. J. Clement, and has been in the business continually since. His confinement to indoor work has begun to tell on his health, and his object in selling out is to get into some outdoor employment. He holds his real estate and will continue to manage his music and machine business.

The annual meeting of the Farmers' Mutual Insurance Co., of Lenawee Co. was held Monday at Adrian. The company is in good condition and has insurance risks to the amount of $10,374,000, an increase of over $200,000 during the year. Fifty three losses paid last year called for $10,163. Farmers received their insurance for about $1.20 per $1,000. The total membership is 6,162. G. R. Allis has been secretary for 13 years, but was defeated for re-election by Geo. Cochrane, of Palmyra, formerly county treasurer. Z. Cook was continued as president.

On Friday, Nov. 1st, the pupils of the central building will hoist their flag, the exercises to be held on the lawn on south side of the building, beginning at 3 p.m. There will be appropriate music by the school under the leadership of Miss Dora Grayson. A short history of the flag will be given by four pupils, followed by short addresses from patriotic citizens—Dr. L. G. North, Geo. S. Tiffany, J. D. Shull, Rev. Joslin, S. C. Stacy and others. We hope our citizens will encourage the pupils in their patriotic endeavors, by favoring them with a large attendance.

Will Anderson has got something new on the 4th page this week.

Have you Salt Rheum or any blood disease? Dr. Mixer can cure you.

Mrs. Jas. Aten is visiting with her sisters in Detroit and Oakland Co.

Miss Grace Heck gives a hallow'een party this evening to her numerous young friends.

Rufus Stacy, of East Buffalo, made a day's visit at the old home in Newburg last week.

Mrs. Wm. A. Wood, of Lorain, O., has completed her Tecumseh visit and left for home this morning.

A perusal of our Lake Ridge correspondence will convince the most skeptical that Alec is awake this week.

Thirty-three couples attended the dance at Armory hall last evening, and successfully inaugurated the season. A pleasant time was had.

Commencing Nov. 1, we will close our stores at 7:30 each evening except Saturday nights and week preceding holidays. ANDERSON & CO.

Horace Weller has returned from his St. Louis trip. He enjoyed his visit very much, but thinks Michigan is good enough for a home.

Lew Acker, of Detroit, has taken a chair in Snedecor's barber shop. He is an experienced workman and Frank is now well prepared to accomodate all customers.

Commencing Monday Nov. 4th. 1889, the post office will be open from 7.00 a. m. until 7.30 p. m. Saturday evenings until 8.00 P. M.
L. LOANA STACY, P. M.

Henry Heesen, of the firm of H. Brewer & Co., is spending the month of October at the Atlanta exposition, exhibiting the brick and tile machinery of the firm.

There will be a special meeting of Beers' Corps, No. 177, Tuesday evening, Nov. 5, at 7 o'clock. A full attendance is desired.
ROSA MILLS, Corps Pres.
MARY E. TURNER, Sec.

W. L Heck will take possession of Brown's photo gallery Monday next, vacating his rooms over Wright's store. Success to him. Walter is stepping up in his business, and stepping down at the same time.

A social dance will be given at Conlin's hall, Tipton, tomorrow night, Nov. 1. Music by Baker & Smith's orchestra. F. Billington acts as purse holder, while Knowles & Wells will manage the floor. A good time is assured.

On the first of November, Lloyd Brezee will again embark in the newspaper business, and will start a new paper called the "Chicago Chaff." It will be a weekly society journal. Brezee will hoop'er up to the Chicago elite, you bet.

The ladies of the Baptist church will hold their regular monthly social in the church parlor, Thursday, Nov. 7. Business meeting at 4. Supper served at 5 o'clock by Mrs. Sheldon's committee. All are cordially invited.

A Sunday School Institute will be given by the Cambridge Sabbath School at the M. E. Church in Springville on Wednesday, Nov. 6th. commencing at one o'clock P. M. A fine program has been prepared, and the institute will be well worth attending. Take along your Gospel hymns.

"Constipation." Do you know the meaning of this word from experience? Do you know the results that come from it? Do you think liver and stomach is the cause of it? If you do, just get another interpretation of it next Monday Nov. 4th, from Dr. Bennett at the Lilley House, then see what you think of it. Guess you will change your mind.

Yesterday afternoon, Mr. H. Stretch, of Raisin, had backed his team up to the side walk on Railroad st., to put a load of potatoes in the Lilley House cellar, when the train came along. One of his horses took fright at the cars and dropped dead in the harness, and all efforts to resuscitate him failed. It was a clear case of death from fright.

Wolcott Marsh intends to keep up with the march of improvement. He is now having his Railroad st. meat market painted and thoroughly renovated and has built an addition in which to store meat. He keeps the finest line of fresh and salt meats in town, and will make a specialty of grinding sausage to order this winter. When his improvements are completed he will have one of the neatest markets in the village, and the public are invited to call and inspect.

Drs. Mixer and Sons, Hastings Mich. It gives me pleasure to speak in commendation of your "Cancer and Scrofula Syrup" and of the great good it has done my son. Six years ago he was troubled with scrofula, his face broke out with pimples and pustules. His eyes were badly enflamed and very weak, and by using your blood medicine he was cured so that he has not been troubled since. I know your C. and S. S. to be a most valuable remedy and I can cheerfully recommend it to all my friends. Mrs. A. Hardenburg, Tecumseh, Mich, Oct. 30th, 1889. For sale by druggists.

A POULTRY SHOW.

Dr. Chas. Waldron, of Tecumseh, is president of the Southern Michigan Poultry association and C. D. Keyes, of Clinton, is secretary. On Tuesday they went to Adrian to perfect arrangements for a winter show of poultry, which will be held at Dean's opera house, Jan. 7 to 10.

This will be the first public exhibition made by the society, and the outlook is for a very successful four day meeting. Fancy birds will be brought from Detroit, Ypsilanti, and a number of outside cities.

Mr. Charles McClave, of New London, O., a professional judge of fine poultry, has been secured to examine and decide the merits of the several displays.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.

Having purchased M. P. Brown's photo gallery, I will move into his rooms on Nov. 4. I still retain the rooms now occupied by me, but will do operating in Mr. Brown's gallery. This enables me to furnish the public with a better class of work than heretofore. I intend to make a specialty of life-size photo work and all kinds of enlarged pictures. You will also find a good line of picture frames, and in fact anything connected with my line of business. Hoping to be able to retain Mr. Brown's trade, I will endeavor to please the public and furnish them with a class of work second to none in Southern Michigan, and at reasonable prices. Thanking one and all for their past favors, I hope to retain their further patronage. Call and see me in my new quarters.
W. L. HECK.

N.B.—Mr. Brown will be at the gallery a short time to assist in anything that needs attention from his old customers.

Rock Lump Salt for Sale.

I will have a car load of the celebrated Retsof Lump Salt in a few days. It is pure rock salt and stock will do much better when salted with it, as they eat only what they need. It will go four times as far as common salt. I sell it for 75c a 100 pounds. I also have it prepared for curing meat, and as there is no lime in it the meat does not spoil. It is now used by all large meat packers. Try it.

LET RIGHT PREVAIL

The Struggle in the Cronin Trial Has Commenced.

FIVE ACCUSED MEN IN THE DOCK.

State's Attorney Longenecker Makes His Arraignment of the Prisoners, and States What He Proposes to Prove—Taking of Testimony Begun—Vigilante Arrayed Against Regulator in Louisiana—A Mother and Son Under Arrest for Attempted Murder.

CHICAGO, Oct. 25.—The Cronin trial began in earnest yesterday. Long before Judge McConnell took his place on the bench the court room was crowded with spectators, among them many ladies, and the audience exhibited the most intense interest in the opening speech of State's Attorney Longenecker. The preliminaries were rapidly disposed of, the jury took their places and in the midst of a dead silence Mr. Longenecker arose and began his statement. He was interrupted two or three times by the attorneys for the defense with objections to the line of his remarks, which they claimed were not in order in an opening statement, and the judge seemed to accept their views, but declined to interfere, stating that whatever the state said at this time it said at its own peril. He had exceptions recorded, however, as they were noted by Attorney Forrest.

Points from Longenecker's Statement.

Mr. Longenecker told the jury that the state would prove that Dr. Cronin was assassinated; that the murder was the result of a conspiracy, and that the five defendants—Coughlin, O'Sullivan, Beggs, Burke, and Kunze—were the actual perpetrators of the crime. (Woodruff is to be tried separately.) He admitted, in effect, that the evidence to be introduced is mostly circumstantial, and showed wherein circumstantial evidence was as reliable as direct. He reviewed the history of Camp 20 Clan-na-Gael, and the connection therewith of the celebrated "triangle"—Alex. Sullivan, Boland, and Feeley—and said that to these the members were sworn to yield obedience rising above all law, all order, and all public policy. The clan, however, as an organization was not on trial.

Motive For the Murder.

In looking for a motive for crime Mr. Longenecker said the state had its most difficult task, generally, but in this case the motive was apparent. Dr. Cronin was a bitter opponent of the triangle. He had denounced it for sending men to England to use dynamite, and then leaving them to their fate, and their women and children to poverty; nay more, for, as he alleged, conspiring with British officials to make the capture of the dynamiters certain by sending descriptions of them to Scotland Yard, so that their fate was certain. In order to break the force of the doctor's charges they had denounced him as a traitor to the Irish cause, and finally procured his expulsion from the clan.

The Time of the "Removal."

Coming down to the time of Dr. Cronin's murder the state's attorney said it would be proved that Beggs had declared in writing that Cronin's criticisms must be stopped; that Burke rented the Carlson cottage; that O'Sullivan made a contract with Cronin to treat his employes in case of accident, notwithstanding he had never had an accident at his ice house, the object being to have means whereby Cronin could be decoyed to his death; that Coughlin hired the rig in which Cronin was driven to the Carlson cottage and that Kunze was a habitue of the room on Clark street opposite Cronin's down-town office and was also the man who drove Cronin to the cottage.

Close of the Address.

In concluding, Mr. Longenecker said that if, after hearing the evidence, the jury had the slightest doubt of the guilt of the prisoners, they should give them their freedom, but if, on the other hand, they were satisfied that they were the murderers, then he should demand that the highest penalty of the law be inflicted.

The state's attorney went into the details of the alleged conspiracy very minutely and covered the ground fully. His speech was delivered very impressively, and was listened to attentively by all, and by none more closely than the four men whose lives depend on the issue of the trial.

Witnesses for the State.

Counsel for the defendants waived their opening speeches, and the examination of witnesses was commenced without delay. Capt. Villiers, of the Lake View police, told of the finding of the bloody trunk and the identification of the body by the doctor's most intimate acquaintances. E. Rosch, the employe of the department of public works who discovered the body in the catch basin, gave his testimony. He was sharply cross-examined by Mr. Forrest, for the defense, with the view of securing an admission that the cuts and bruises on the body might have been occasioned by rough treatment while taking it out of the catch-basin. The effort, however, was futile.

All the other witnesses were dismissed with a nominal cross-examination, the defense apparently having decided to admit that the body was that of the physician. At 4:40 o'clock court adjourned.

Second Day's Proceedings.

CHICAGO, Oct. 26.—The trial of the men accused of the murder of Dr. Cronin was resumed yesterday morning before another packed audience. The day was devoted mainly to clinching the identification of the corpse found in the Lake View manhole. This was done by the most conclusive testimony. Men who had known the doctor for years came forward and swore positively that it was his corpse that had been so foully disposed of. But probably the most convincing testimony was given by his dentist, Dr. Lewis. This gentleman had done a great deal of work in his line for Dr. Cronin, and among other things had made a plate for him. The plate taken from the murdered man's mouth was produced in court and upon being shown to Dr. Lewis he swore positively that he made it for Dr. Cronin. Forrest objected to the admission of the plate in evidence, but the objection was overruled.

Some Ghastly Testimony.

Whatever doubts had existed regarding the fact that Dr. Cronin was killed within a short time after leaving the Conklin residence were set at rest when Dr. Egbert, assistant county physician, produced a number of jars containing the contents of the stomach of the murdered man. The food, he said, had carcely commenced to digest, and had been taken into the stomach less than three hours before death. The jury glanced at the contents of the jars, while the people in the court room craned their necks to get a look at the receptacles. The witness went on to minutely describe the condition of the body. All the internal organs were in excellent condition, and there was not the slightest evidence of disease, internal or external, although the brain and its covering were terribly decomposed.

Dr. Egbert then proceeded to describe the wounds on Cronin's body. There was a wound two inches long and a half inch wide at the corner of the left eye; while near by, the skull was again fractured and a small portion chipped away. Near the left temple was a wound two inches long and extending to the skull. Back of this was another almost the same size, while back of the left ear was a ragged wound that joined the other two. On the left of the back of the head there was another ugly wound, two and a quarter inches long and a quarter inch wide, in the center of which was a flap of the skin of the scalp. This had been beaten into the thin layer of flesh on the skull by the force of the blow, and was attached to the remaining skin at the upper portion of the wound. The lungs were free from water, despite the fact that the head was below the surface when found, and, as the physician testified in the most emphatic manner, there was not the shadow of a doubt that Dr. Cronin's death was caused by the wounds he received.

Couldn't Shake the Evidence.

Judge Wing and Mr. Forrest took turns in cross-examining the witness for nearly two hours with the view of securing an admission that the wounds upon the body might have been occasioned by rough usage while getting it out of the vault. Dr. Egbert insisted, however, that they were inflicted prior to his death, and his testimony in other particulars remained unshaken.

EXCEPTION TO THE RULE.

A Feature of the Cronin Trial That Caused a Sensation.

CHICAGO, Oct. 28.—The Cronin trial is loaded with sensations. Hardly has the sound of one died away before another breaks loose. So that when one took place in the course of proceedings Saturday, it was looked upon as pretty much a matter of course, although it involved the ending of the trial and the release of the prisoners. The peculiar feature of the matter was that for the first time, probably, the attention of a court was called to the impossibility of inforcing a well-known rule of legal practice. Dr. Moore was on the stand as an expert and his testimony was in the nature of corroboration of that of Dr. Egbert, given Friday, as to wounds on Dr. Cronin's head, and their necessary result—that of death. When the cross-examination was taken up by Forrest he asked witness whether he had read the testimony of Dr. Egbert in the morning papers, and Dr. Moore answered that he had. Forrest thereupon moved that Moore's testimony be stricken out and Judge McConnell sustained the motion.

The Rule and Its Purpose.

Judge McConnell's ruling was in conformity with the rule excluding witnesses in any case from a court room while the testimony in the case is being given. Of course such a rule can have but one object, and that is to prevent one witness from hearing what another witness testifies to and apparently, also, from knowing what is testified in order that there may be no collusion between witnesses. But the daily papers now print verbatim reports of every particle of testimony introduced in the case, so that any one who can read can thoroughly inform himself on the subject—can make a study of it, if he desires. It he can not read some one who can may post him, and collusion between witnesses becomes a simple matter.

Effect of the Decision.

The ruling was hardly out of the judge's mouth when Lawyer Hynes was on his feet with the exclamation: "This case may as well be adjourned at this moment." There was no doubt of it, no necessity for the wordy war that took place between the opposing counsel; the judge and everybody else could see that the state had no case if those who had read the testimony as printed in the papers could not testify. It would be impossible without imprisoning them to prevent the witnesses from knowing what went on in the court-room. Mills, in opposing the motion, said, regarding the rule excluding witnesses from the court: "No restriction was placed on the witnesses, save that they should not be in the court-room or hear the proceedings. No suggestion was made restricting the witnesses from reading the newspapers."

Forrest's Reply to Mills.

In answering Mills' remarks Forrest said that the purpose of the order was well known. It was to keep witnesses from knowing the testimony of each other on the branch of a case in which they are to testify; and he vigorously urged the judge to stand by his ruling. But the judge was not prepared to take the responsibility of killing the case, and he promptly rescinded the ruling and admitted the testimony. He said: "The rule of exclusion evidently is for the purpose of preventing the witnesses who are excluded from knowing what the witness on the stand said, either for the purpose of affirming or contradicting their testimony. But that rule was probably conceived at the time when most of the rules pertaining to the jury were conceived—before the newspapers took such pains to publish all the proceedings—and I can easily see that if I should enforce the rule in its old spirit criminal trials and a great many civil cases could not be proceeded with—it would be impossible."

The Livery Man's Testimony.

This incident being ended everybody held his breath as Judge Longenecker said "Call Patrick Dinan." The proof of the death of Dr. Cronin and that it was the result of murder was in, and now the state was going on to show who killed him. Dinan is the man from whose stable the rig was hired that carried Dr. Cronin to his violent death, and Dinan was the man who was to prove Dan Coughlin's connection with that part of the conspiracy. In brief, he said that Coughlin called at the stable on the afternoon of the day of the murder and told him to let a man who would call that evening have a rig. The police officers frequently did this and it was thought nothing of. About 7 o'clock that evening the man called and was given a white horse and top buggy, the side flaps of the top being wanting, to which the man objected, but finally took the rig and started north—in the direction of Cronin's office. On May 6 Dinan saw Coughlin and the detective told him that he (Coughlin) and Dr. Cronin were not on good terms, and therefore he requested Dinan to say nothing about the matter. Later Coughlin told Dinan that his friend who took the rig had gone to New Mexico. Still later Coughlin told Dinan that he was a weakener, and that if he (Coughlin) had any dirty work to do he would not let him into the secret. The above in brief was what Dinan testified, and at the close of his evidence court adjourned for the day.

A Royal Wedding.

ATHENS, Oct. 28.—Yesterday was a most beautiful one, the sun shining as it shines only in Greece, and all the elements seeming to concur in happy auspices of the wedding of Princess Sophie, of Germany, to the duke of Sparta. A gorgeous procession, escorted by an imposing array of cavalry, left the royal palace at 11 o'clock.

During the ceremony in the Greek church Prince Henry of Prussia and Princes Victor and George of Wales alternately held the bride's coronet while the czarowich, Prince Waldemar and Prince George of Greece held the coronet of the bridegroom.

DAVID'S REBELLIOUS SON.

LESSON V, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 3.

Text of the Lesson, II Sam. xv, 1-12. Commit Verses 4-6—Golden Text, Ex. xx, 12—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

After the everlasting covenant made with David concerning his son and kingdom, as recorded in our last lesson, in this book (chap. vii), we read of David's great prosperity, subduing all his enemies round about and reigning over all Israel, executing judgment and justice unto all his people (viii, 12-15). Then, in his prosperity, comes his awful sin, by which he gave great occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme; which is followed by the record of his son Amnon's sin and his death at the hands of his brother Absalom, followed by the flight of Absalom to his maternal grandfather, the king of Geshur, where he abode three years in banishment from his father and his home (chaps. xi-xiii).

1. "And it came to pass after this, that Absalom prepared him chariots and horses and fifty men to run before him." The words "after this" seem to refer to the events of the chapter immediately preceding, which are briefly these: Joab, David's sister's son, commander-in-chief of the army, seeing that David's heart was toward Absalom, sent for a wise woman of Tekoa, whom he instructed what to say, and sent her unto the king to plead for the restoration of the banished Absalom. She pleaded successfully, and Absalom was restored to Jerusalem, but saw not the king's face for two years (xiv, 28), at the end of which time, through the further pleading of Joab, the king received him, "and the king kissed Absalom;" with these words the previous chapter closes, and thus we are introduced to the lesson of today.

2. "And Absalom rose up early, and stood beside the way of the gate." The gate of an eastern city was a place of public resort and deliberation, and also a place for the administration of justice, and of audience for kings and rulers and ambassadors. "Rose up early" is an expression signifying great earnestness.

3, 4. "Absalom said moreover, Oh that I were made judge in the land." The title of our lesson is, "David's rebellious son," and his name is mentioned thirteen times in our lesson. Everything seems to go by contrast in reference to him; his name signifies "Father of Peace," but what a father of lies and disturber of peace he proved to be; then as to his personal appearance, there was not a finer looking man in all Israel (xiv, 25); but God, who looks on the heart and not on the outward appearance, saw anything but beauty there. His hair, which he must have been very proud of, and which he had cut only once a year, weighed, when polled about seven and a half pounds Troy (a shekel being about nine pennyweights) (xiv, 26); but this, his pride, was the cause of his death (chap. xviii, 9).

5, 6. "So Absalom stole the hearts of the men of Israel." By fair words to every man who came to the king for judgment, by taking them by the hand and kissing them, he thus won their hearts to himself. David's kiss to Absalom was of the same nature as the father's kiss to the prodigal son (Lu. xv, 20); but these kisses of Absalom were more of the nature of the kiss of Judas when he betrayed our Lord Jesus Christ, for every one of them was a stab at his father's heart. The Lord says concerning Israel: "I have nourished and brought up children and they have rebelled against me" (Isa. i, 2); but in His case it was disobedience and rebellion against the most loving, wise and patient treatment. We know that David had one son whom he never even displeased by asking him, "Why hast thou done so?" (I Kings i, 6) and that son brought him much trouble; now if he brought up Absalom after the same pattern, he was only suffering for his own neglect, but if this conduct of Absalom was notwithstanding wise and loving training on David's part, then David had fellowship with God on the line of Isa. i, 2; but the latter seems doubtful from Prov. xxii, 6: "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old he will not depart from it." The conduct of Absalom is followed after by many today who "by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple" (Rom. xvi, 18); and such are found in the pulpit as well as out of it; oh, that all hearers would test all they hear by the Word of God and believe nothing that accords not therewith.

7. "Let me go and pay my vow, which I have vowed unto the Lord, in Hebron." Thus said Absalom to David the king, probably after four years instead of forty as in this verse (see R. V. margin); but what a liar he was and how desperately wicked!

8. "If the Lord shall bring me again indeed to Jerusalem, then I will serve the Lord." This, he said, was the vow which he had made to the Lord while in his banishment in Syria. Let any father or mother who have ever rejoiced over the conversion of a wayward son say what must have been David's feelings on hearing these words from his much loved but heretofore erring Absalom. Oh that he had only meant it, but alas that the heart can become so hard that it can put on religion for a cloak and think to deceive even God Himself.

9. "And the king said unto him, Go in peace." Believing him to be sincere he gives him a father's blessing and bids him go in peace; but there was no peace in that fond heart, covered by so fair an exterior and such plausible words, for "There is no peace, saith the Lord, to the wicked" (Isa. lvii, 21). Peace was within his reach, as it is within the reach of every one who has ever heard of the Prince of Peace, but it can only become the possession of those who are truly penitent and sincerely submit to Him as their Saviour and Lord. Hebron signifies fellowship; there the Lord appeared to Abram, and there Caleb, who followed the Lord fully, slew the giants and provided a city of refuge for others (Gen. xiii, 18; Josh. xiv, 13; xx, 7).

10. "Absalom reigneth in Hebron." No sooner does he leave his father's presence, with that father's last words to him as words of peace, than he sends spies through all Israel who at a given signal are to cry, "Absalom reigneth in Hebron," which was virtually saying, "I hereby rebel against my father and drive him from his throne;" so David understood it, for he said unto all his servants, "Arise, and let us flee, for we shall not else escape from Absalom," and the servants said, "Behold thy servants are ready to do whatsoever my lord the king shall appoint." (verses 14, 15).

11. "They went in their simplicity and they knew not any thing." This is written of the two hundred men out of Jerusalem who went with Absalom. If we would follow Jesus in this spirit, simply trusting, not knowing nor desiring anything but His will, what blessed people we would be and what glory He would get through us; but to follow a leader like Absalom thus blindly is sure perdition.

12. "The people increased continually with Absalom." How thoughtlessly the crowd will follow a popular leader. How multitudes turn away from the God of truth and His dear Son to listen to an Ingersoll.

SECOND POINT. You should read THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS because you have the time to read it. There is a paper published in Australia which is as large as a blanket. This wouldn't suit you. You want a newspaper at once convenient, complete and condensed, and still you don't want to overlook anything of real importance. You don't want your neighbor to say to you, "Did you read so-and-so in to-day's paper? and be obliged to answer, "No, I didn't see that," and then have him ask you, "What paper do you read?" This will never happen to you if you read THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS.

Remember—Its circulation is 220,000 a day—over a million a week—and it costs by mail 25 cts. a month, four months $1.00,—one cent a day.

CLEOPATRA.

Being an Account of the Fall and Vengeance of Harmachis, the Royal Egyptian,

The months of probation passed but too swiftly, and now the holy day drew near when I was in truth to be united to the universal Mother. Never hath Night so longed for the promise of the Dawn; never hath the heart of a lover so passionately desired the sweet coming of the bride; as I longed to see Thy glorious face, O Isis! Even now that I have been faithless to Thee, and Thou art far from me, O Divine! my soul goes out to Thee, and once more I know— But as it is bidden that I should draw the vail and speak of things that have not been told since the beginning of this world, let me pass on and reverently set down the history of that holy morn. For seven days had the great festival been celebrated, the suffering of the Lord Osiris had been commemorated, the passion of the Mother Isis had been adored, and glory had been done to the memory of the coming of the Divine Child Horus, the Son, the Avenger, the God-begot. All these things had been carried out according to the ancient rites. The boats had floated on the sacred lake, the priests had scourged themselves before the sanctuaries, and the images had been borne through the streets at night. And now, as the sun sank on the seventh day, once more the great procession gathered to chant the woes of Isis and tell how the evil was avenged. We went in silence from the Temple, and passed through the city ways. First came those who clear the path, then my father, Amenemhat, in all his priestly robes and the wand of cedar in his hand. Then, clad in pure linen, followed I, the neophyte, alone; and after me the white-robed priests, holding aloft banners and the emblems of the Gods. Next came those who bear the sacred boat, and after them the singers and the mourners; while stretching as far as the eye could reach marched all the people, clad in melancholy black because Osiris was no more. In silence we went through the city streets till at length we came to the temenos of the Temple and passed in. And as my father, the High Priest, entered beneath the gateway of the outer pylon, a sweet-voiced woman singer began to sing the Holy Chant, and thus she sang:

"Sing we Osiris dead,
Lament the fallen head:
The light has left the world, the world is gray.
Athwart the starry skies
The web of Darkness flies,
And Isis weeps Osiris passed away.
Your tears, ye stars, ye fires, ye rivers, shed.
Weep, children of the Nile, weep, for your Lord is dead!"

She paused in her most sweet song, and thereon the whole multitude took up the melancholy dirge:

"Softly we tread our measured footsteps falling
Within the Sanctuary Sevenfold:
Soft on the Dead that liveth are we calling!
'Return, Osiris, from thy Kingdom cold!
Return to them that worship thee of old.'"

The chorus ceased, and once again she sang:

"Within the court divine
The Sevenfold-sacred shrine
We pass, while echoes of the Temple walls
Repeat the long lament,
The sound of sorrow sent
Far up within the imperishable halls,
Where, each in other's arms, the Sisters weep,
Isis and Nephthys, o'er His unawaking sleep."

And then again rolled out the solemn chorus of a thousand voices:

"Softly we tread our measured footsteps falling
Within the Sanctuary Sevenfold;
Soft on the Dead that liveth are we calling:
'Return, Osiris, from thy Kingdom cold!
Return to them that worship thee of old.'"

It ceased, and sweetly she took up the song:

"O dweller in the West,
Lover and Lordliest,
Thy love, thy sister Isis calls thee home!
Come from thy chamber dun,
Thou Master of the Sun,
Thy shadowy chamber far below the foam
With weary wings and spent
Through all the firmament,
Through all the horror-haunted ways of hell,
I seek thee near and far,
From star to wandering star,
Free with the dead that in Amenti dwell.
I search the height, the deep, the lands, the skies.
Rise from the dead and live, our Lord Osiris, rise."

"Softly we tread, our measured footsteps falling
Within the Sanctuary Sevenfold;
Soft on the Dead that liveth are we calling:
'Return, Osiris, from thy Kingdom cold!
Return to them that worship thee of old.'"

Then, in a strain more high and glad, the singer sang:

"He wakes—from forth the prison
We sing Osiris risen,
We sing the child that Nout conceived and bare.
Thine own love, Isis, waits
The Warden of the Gates.
She breathes the breath of Life on breast and hair.
And in her breast and breath
Behold! he wakeneth,
Behold! at length he riseth out of rest;
Touched with her holy hands,
The Lord of all the Lands,
He stirs, he rises from her breath, her breast!
But thou, fell Typhon, fly,
The judgment day draws nigh,
Fleet on thy track as flame speeds Horus from the sky."

"Softly we tread our measured footsteps falling
Within the Sanctuary Sevenfold;
Soft on the Dead that liveth are we calling:
'Return, Osiris, from thy Kingdom cold!
Return to them that worship thee of old.'"

Once more, as we bowed before the Holy, she sang, and sent the full breath of her glad music ringing up the everlasting walls, till the silence quivered with her round notes of melody, and the hearts of those who hearkened stirred strangely in the breast. And thus, as we walked, she sang the song of Osiris risen, the song of Hope, the song of Victory:

"Sing we the Trinity,
Sing we the Holy Three,
Sing we, and praise we and worship the Throne,
Throne that our Lord hath set—
There peace and truth are met,
There in the Halls of the Holy alone!
There in the shadowings
Faint of the folded wings,
There shall we dwell and rejoice in our rest,
We that thy servants are!
Horus drive ill afar!
Far in the folds of the dark of the West!"

Once more, as her notes died away, thundered forth the chorus of all the voices, and then the chanting ceased, and as the sun sank the High Priest raised the statue of the living God and held it before the multitude that was now gathered in the court of the Temple. Thereupon, with a mighty and joyful shout of "Osiris! Our hope! Osiris! Osiris!" the people tore the black wrappings from their dress, revealing the white robes they wore beneath, and, as one man, they bowed before the God, and the feast was ended.

But for me the ceremony was only begun, for to-night was the night of my initiation. Leaving the inner court I bathed myself, and, clad in pure linen, passed, as it is ordained, into an inner, but not the inmost sanctuary, and laid the accustomed offerings on the altar. Then, lifting up my hands to Heaven, I remained for many hours in contemplation, striving by holy thoughts and prayer to gather up my strength against the mighty moment of my trial.

Slowly the hours sped in the silence of the Temple, till at length the door opened and my father, Amenemhat, the High Priest, came in, clad in white, and leading by the hand the Priest of Isis. For himself, having been married, he did not enter into the mysteries of the Holy Mother.

I rose to my feet and stood humbly before the twain.

"Art thou ready?" said the Priest, lifting the lamp he held so that its light fell upon my face. "Art thou ready, O thou chosen one, even to see the glory of the Goddess face to face?"

"I am ready," I answered.

"Bethink thee," he said again, in solemn tones, "this is no small thing. If thou wilt carry out this thy last desire, understand, O Royal Harmachis, that now this very night must thou for awhile die in the flesh, what time thy soul shall look on spiritual things. And if thou diest and there shall be any evil thing found within thy heart, when thou comest at last into that awful presence, woe unto thee, Harmachis, for the breath of life shall no more enter in at the gateway of thy mouth. Utterly shalt thou perish as to thy body, and what shall befall thy other parts, if I know I may not say. [According to the Egyptian religion the being man is composed of four parts: the body, the double or astral shape (ka), the soul (bi), and the spark of life sprung from the Godhead (khou).] Art thou, therefore, pure and free from the thought of sin? Art thou prepared to be gathered to the breast of Her who was and is and will be, and in all things to do Her holy will; for her, while she shall so command, to put away the thought of earthly woman; and to labor always for Her glory till at the end thy life is absorbed in Her eternal life?"

"I am," I answered; "lead on."

"It is well," said the Priest. "Noble Amenemhat, we go hence along."

"Farewell, my son," said my father; "be firm and triumph over the things spiritual as thou shalt triumph over the things earthly. He who would truly rule the world must first be lifted up above the world. He must be at one with God, for thus only shall he learn the secrets of the Divine. But beware! The gods demand much of those who dare to enter the circle of their Divinity. If they go back therefrom they shall be judged of a sharper law, and be scourged with a heavier rod. As their glory is, so shall their shame be; for it is no light thing, having cast off thy mortal garb, to soil the raiment of the Spirit in fleshly mire. Therefore, make thy heart strong, O Royal Harmachis! And when thou speedest down the ways of Night and enterest the Holy Presence, remember that from him to whom great gifts have been given shall gifts be required again. And now—if, indeed, thy heart be fixed—go whither it is not as yet given to me to follow thee. Farewell!"

For a moment, as my heart weighed these heavy words, I wavered, as well I might. But I was filled with longing to be gathered to the company of the Divine ones, and I know that I had no evil in me, and desired to do only the thing that is just. Therefore, having with so much labor drawn the bow-string to my ear, I was fain to let fly the shaft. "Lead on," I cried, with a loud voice, "lead on, O holy Priest! I follow thee!"

And we went forth.

CHAPTER VI.

OF THE INITIATION OF HARMACHIS; OF HIS VISIONS; OF HIS PASSING TO THE CITY THAT IS IN THE PLACE OF DEATH; AND OF THE DECLARATION OF ISIS, THE MESSENGER.

IN SILENCE we passed into the shrine of Isis. Dark it was and bare—only the feeble light from the lamp gleamed faintly upon the sculptured walls, where, in a hundred effigies, the Holy Mother suckled the Holy Child. The Priest closed the doors and bolted them.

"Once again," he said, "art thou ready, Harmachis?"

"Once again," I answered, "I am ready." He spoke no more; but, having lifted up his hands in prayer, led me to the center of the Holy, and with a swift motion put out the lamp.

"Look before thee, O Harmachis!" he cried; and his voice sounded hollow in the solemn place.

I gazed and saw nothing. But from the niche that is high in the wall, wherein is hid the sacred symbol of the Goddess, on which few may look, there came a sound as of the rattling rods of the sistrum. And as I listened, awestruck, behold! I saw the outline of the symbol drawn as with fire upon the blackness of the air. Above my head it hung, and rattled while it hung. And as it turned, clearly I saw the face of the Mother Isis that is graven on the one side, and signifies unending birth, and the face of her holy sister, Nephthys, that is graven on the other, and signifies the ending of all birth in death.

Slowly it turned and swung as though some mystic dancer trod the air above me and shook it in her hand. But at length the light went out, and the rattling ceased.

Then of a sudden the end of the chamber became luminous, and in that white light I beheld picture after picture. I saw the ancient Nile rolling through deserts to the sea. There were no men upon its banks, nor any signs of man, nor any Temples to the Gods. Only wild birds moved on Sihor's lonely face, and monstrous brutes plunged and wallowed in his waters. The sun sunk in majesty behind the Libyan Desert and stained the waters red; the mountains towered up toward the silent sky; but in mountain, desert and river there was no sign of human life. And then I knew that I saw the world as it had been before man was, and a terror of its loneliness entered my soul.

The picture passed and another rose up in its place. Once again I saw the banks of Sihor, and on them crowded wild-faced creatures, partaking of the nature of the ape more than of the nature of mankind. They fought and slew each other. The wild bird sprang up in affright as the fire leapt from reed huts given by foemen's hands to flame and pillage. They stole and rent and murdered, dashing out the brains of children with axes of stone. And, though no voice told me, I knew that I saw man as he was tens of thousands of years ago when first he marched across the earth.

Yet another picture. Once again I saw the banks of Sihor; but on them fair cities bloomed like flowers. In and out their gates went men and women, and laden asses passing to and fro from wide, well-tilled lands. But I saw no guards or armies, and no weapons of war. All was wisdom prosperity and peace. And, while I wondered, a glorious figure, clad in raiment that shone as flame, came from the gates of a shrine, and the sound of music went before and followed after him. He mounted an ivory throne which was set in a market-place facing the water, and as the sun set called all the multitudes to prayer. With one voice they prayed, bending in adoration. And I understood that herein was shown the reign of the Gods on earth, which was long before the days of Menes.

A change came over the dream. Still, the same fair city, but other men—men with greed and evil on their faces—who hated the bonds of righteous doing, and set their hearts on sin. The evening came; the glorious figure mounted the throne and called to prayer, but none bowed themselves in adoration.

"We are aweary of thee!" they cried. "Make Evil King! Slay him! slay him! and loose the bonds of Evil! Make Evil King!"

Mightily uprose the glorious shape, gazing with mild eyes upon those wicked ones.

"Ye know not what ye ask," he cried; "but as ye will, so be it! For if I die, by me shall ye once again, after much travail, find a path to the Kingdom of Good!"

Even as he spoke a form, foul and hideous to behold, leapt upon him, cursing, slew him, tore him limb from limb, and amidst the clamor of the people sat himself upon the throne and ruled. But a shape whose face was vailed passed down from Heaven on shadowy wings, and with lamentations gathered up the rent fragments of the Being. A moment she bent herself upon them, then lifted up her hands and wept. And as she wept, behold! from her sides there sprang a warrior armed and with a face like the face of Ra (the sun) at noon. With a shout he, the Avenger, hurled himself upon the monster who had usurped the throne, and they closed in battle, and struggling ever in a straight embrace, passed upward to the skies.

Then came picture after picture. I saw powers and peoples clad in various robes and speaking many tongues. I saw them pass and pass and pass in millions—loving, hating, struggling, dying. Some few were happy and some had woe stamped upon their faces; but most bore not the seal of happiness nor of woe, but rather of patience. And ever as they passed from age to age, high above in the heavens the Avenger fought on with the Evil Thing, while the scale of victory swung now here, now there; but neither conquered, nor was it given to me to know how the battle ended.

And I understood that what I had beheld was the holy vision of the struggle between the Good and the Evil powers. I saw that man was created vile, but those who are above took pity on him and came down to him to make him good and happy, for the two things are one thing. But man returned again to his wicked way, and then did the bright spirit of Good, who is of us called Osiris, but who hath many names, offer himself up for the evil doing of the race that had dethroned him. And from him and the Divine Mother, of whom all nature is sprang another spirit who is the Protector of us on earth, as Osiris is our justifier in Amenti.

For this is the mystery of the Osiris.

Of a sudden, as I saw the visions, these things became clear to me. The mummy cloths of symbol and of ceremony that wrap Orisis round fell from him, and I understood the secret of religion.

The picture passed, and once again the Priest, my guide, spoke to me.

"Hast thou understood, Harmachis, those things which it hath been granted thee to see?"

"I have," I said. "Are the rites ended?"

"Nay, they are but begun. That which follows must thou endure alone! Behold, I leave thee, to return at the morning light. Once more I warn thee that which thou shalt see few may look upon and live. In all my days have I known but three who dared to face this dread hour, and of those three at dawn but one was found alive. Myself, I have not trod this path. It is too high for me."

"Depart," I said; "my soul is athirst for knowledge. I will dare it."

He laid his hand upon my head and blessed me. He went. I heard the door shut to behind him; the echoes of his footsteps slowly died away. Then I felt that I was alone, alone in the Holy place with things which are not of the earth. Silence fell—silence deep and black as the darkness which was around me. The silence fell; it gathered as the cloud gathered on the face of the moon that night when, a lad, I prayed upon the pylon towers. It gathered denser and yet more dense till it seemed to creep into my heart and call aloud therein; for utter silence has a voice that is more terrible than the voice of any cry. I spoke; the echoes of my words came back upon me from the walls and seemed to beat me down. The stillness was lighter to endure than an echo such as this. What was I about to see? Should I die, even now, in the fullness of my youth and strength? Terrible were the warnings that had been given to me. I was fear-stricken, and bethought me that I would fly. Fly!—fly whither? The temple door was barred; I could not fly. I was alone with the Godhead, alone with the power that I had invoked. Nay, my heart was pure—my heart was pure! I would face the terror that was to come, even though I died.

"Isis, holy Mother," I prayed, "Isis, Spouse of Heaven, come unto me, be with me now. I faint! be with me now."

And then I knew that things were not as things had been. The air around me began to stir, it rustled as the wings of eagles, it took life. Bright eyes gazed upon me, strange whispers shook my soul. Upon the darkness were bars of light. They changed and interchanged, they moved to and fro and wove mystic symbols which I could not read. Swifter and swifter flew that shuttle of the light; the symbols grouped, gathered, faded, gathered yet again, faster and still more fast, till my eyes could no more count them. Now I was afloat upon a sea of glory; it surged and rolled, as the ocean rolls; it tossed me high, it brought me low. Glory was piled on glory, splendor heaped on splendor's head, and I rode above it all.

Soon the lights began to pale in the rolling sea of air. Great shadows shot across it, lines of darkness pierced it and rushed together on its breast, till at length I only was a shape of flame set like a star on the bosom of immeasurable night. Bursts of awful music gathered from far away. Miles and miles away I heard them, thrilling faintly through the gloom. On they came, nearer and more near, louder and more loud, till they swept past above, below, around me, swept on rushing pinions, terrifying and enchanting me. They floated by, ever growing fainter, till they died in space. Then others came, and no two were akin. Some rattled as ten thousand sistra shaken all to tune. Some rang from the brazen throats of unnumbered clarions. Some pealed with a loud, sweet chant of voices that were more than human; and some rolled along in the slow thunder of a million drums. They passed; their notes were lost in dying echoes; and the awful silence once more pressed in upon me and overcame me.

THE COSMOPOLITAN.

The modern magazine may be taken as embodying the best literature of the world, as the magazine editor pays the highest prices to novelists, scientists, statesmen, soldiers and even kings and princes for the best they can furnish in the literary line. The well edited magazine becomes an educating influence in the family circle whose importance cannot be overestimated. The children as they grow up, are attracted by its illustrations and so come in time to have a taste for reading. There is always something that is new something that is strange something that is interesting, and we Consider that we are doing our readers a positive benefit if we are instrumental in placing such a publication within their reach. The special arrangement which we have made with the Cosmopolitan presents very unusual inducements. That magazine though only in the tenth month under its new management is already recognized as one of the most interesting publications of the day. It is seeking subscribers everywhere and obtaining them. The proprietors believe that the Cosmopolitan has only to be examined to secure a permanent subscriber. Will it not pay you to send a subscription to this office for the Herald and the Cosmopolitan immediately Remember only $2.50 for the two.

His Mother Knew What Was Best.

I know from practical use of the beneficial effects of Red Clover. When but eleven years of age I had Scrofulus swellings carrying both arms in one position for weeks at a time. Doctors said on examination that I might live a year possibly two at the longest, but no longer. My mother took charge of me, and in her old fashion way of doctoring and using Red Clover, I am to day a well and hearty man. Since your extract of Red Clover came on the market, I have used it with good results. My wife is now using it for dropsy and general debility and it is doing her more good than anything she has yet found. I think that for a Tonic and Blood Medicine there is nothing so good as your Extract of Red Clover. You are free to use this as I do not hesitate to recommend it to any who are afflicted.

Yours truly. A. L. JOHNSON,

Nasal Catarrh.

Mr. T. A. Williams, a leading dry goods merchant of Spartanburg, S. C., writes under date of November 8, 1888. "For years I had a severe case of nasal catarrh, with all the disagreeable effects which follow such disease, which made me miserable and almost unendurable. I used medicines prescribed by leading physicians, and suggested by numbers of friends, but without getting any better. In the fall of 1878, I began to take Swift's Specific (S. S. S.). It had the desired effect, and cured me after taking a few bottles. In my opinion Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) is the only medicine now in use that will affect a permanent cure of catarrh.

Could Scarcely Walk.

In the year of 1885 I had a severe attack of rheumatism which so affected me that I could scarcely walk for several months. I tried numbers of remedies but without affording me relief. I was induced to try S. S. S. After taking several bottles I was completely cured and once again able to attend to my business. From my experience I can safely say that S. S. S. is the best rheumatism medicine in the world. M. SESSEN, Abbeville, S. C.

The worst feature about catarrh is its dangerous tendency to consumption. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh by purifying the blood.

Forced to Leave Home.

Over 60 people were forced to leave there homes yesterday to call for a free trial package of Lane's Family Medicine. If your blood is bad, your liver and kidneys out of order, if you are constipated and have headache and an unsightly complexion, don't fail to call on any druggist to-day for a free sample of this grand remedy. The ladies praise it. Everyone likes it. Large-size package 50 cents.

Ex-Congressman John E. Russell said in the peroration of his eloquent speech at the Massachusetts Democratic convention: "Cleveland and Harrison! They fitly represent the principles and purposes of their respective parties. Between them there is a difference as great as between courage and timidity, patriotism and policy, progress and stagnation, the living principles of a living party and the lifeless faith of a party that dwells only on the past; between a people's President fighting a people's cause serving them and them only, and a party President, who hears the voice only of the politicians."

Dumplings with Royal Baking Powder

No dessert is more delicious, wholesome and appetizing than a well-made dumpling, filled with the fruit of the season. By the use of the Royal Baking Powder the crust is always rendered light, flaky, tender and digestible. Dumplings made with it, baked or boiled, will be dainty and wholesome, and may be eaten steaming hot with perfect impunity.

RECEIPT.—One quart of flour; thoroughly mix with it three teaspoons of Royal Baking Powder and a small teaspoon of salt; rub in a piece of butter or lard the size of an egg, and then add one large potato, grated in the flour; after the butter is well mixed, stir in milk and knead to the consistency of soft biscuit dough; break off pieces of dough large enough to close over four quarters of an apple (or other fruit as desired) without rolling, and lay in an earthen dish (or steamer) and steam until the fruit is tender. Bake if preferred.

In all receipts calling for cream of tartar and soda, substitute Royal Baking Powder. Less trouble, never fails, makes more appetizing and wholesome food and is more economical. Royal Baking Powder is specially made for use in the preparation of the finest and most delicate cookery.

MORTGAGE SALES.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of a certain mortgage bearing date March 6, A.D., 1881, made by George L. Bidwell and his wife, Frances Bidwell to William J. Cocker and Isabella M. Cocker; Which said mortgage was on the Ninth day of March, A. D. 1881, duly recorded in the office of Register of Deeds for Lenawee County, Michigan, in Liber 100 of mortgages on page 693; And which said mortgage was afterward, to wit, on the 12th day of April, A.D., 1888, duly assigned to Birdsey J. Bidwell, by said William J. Cocker and Isabella M. Cocker, which deed of assignment was on the 29th day of April A.D., 1889, duly recorded in the office of Register of Deeds for Lenawee County aforesaid in Liber 118 of mortgages on page 537; by which default the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. And whereas there is at this date claimed to be due and unpaid as principal and interest on the said mortgage the sum of Five Hundred and Ninety-two and 36-100 Dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law or in equity to collect the same. Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale and the statutes of the state of Michigan in such case made and provided, for the purpose of realizing the money now as aforesaid due and owing on said mortgage, together with the interest to accrue thereon and costs and charges of this foreclosure, including an attorney fee of Twenty-five Dollars as provided by law and stipulated for in said mortgage, I shall on the Twenty-seventh day of January, A.D., 1890, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at the east front door of the court house in the city of Adrian, in said Lenawee County, (that being the place where the circuit court for said county is holden) sell at public vendue to the highest bidder all that parcel of land situate in the city of Adrian, Lenawee County, Michigan, described as follows, viz.: All the land of the parties of the first part situate on the "Flats," (so called) in said city bounded on the easterly limit by Winter street, on the south by the northern boundary line of Remington's addition, on the west College avenue, (or Water street, as is designated on Willitts & Bird's Wall map of 1871) and on the north by the southern boundary line of residence lots, said lots fronting on Church and Winter streets in said city, being in all Three (3) acres of land, more or less; and being same land conveyed in part to said George L. Bidwell by Andrew Clement by deeds recorded book 52, follos 248, 249, and book 52, follos 472, 473, and in part convey to George L. Bidwell by Langford G. Berry by deed recorded in book 52, follos 250, 251, and in part by William K. Choate by deed of record in book 53, follos 116, 117; and in part by deed from Nathan Choate, of record in book 53 follos 115, 116. Books refered to being part of Lenawee County records.

Dated Oct. 28th, 1889.

THE ODELL
TYPE WRITER

$15 will buy the ODELL TYPE WRITER. Warranted to do as good work as any $100 machine.

It combines simplicity with durability—speed, ease of operation—wears longer without cost of repairs than any other machine, has no ink ribbon to bother the operator. It is neat, substantial, nickel plated, perfect and adapted to all kinds of typewriting. Like a printing press it produces sharp, clean, legible manuscripts. One to ten copies can be made at one writing. Editors, lawyers, ministers, bankers, manufacturers, business men, etc., cannot make a better investment for $15. Any intelligent person in a week can become a good operator, or a rapid one in two months.

$100 offered any operator who can do better work with a typewriter than that produced by the ODELL. ☞ Remember Agents and Salesmen wanted. Special inducements to dealers. For pamphlets, giving endorsements, etc., address the Lewis Coller and his Cathrine, attended church here Sunday evening.

Frank Day of Macon, called on Dr. Hendershot, Sunday. He drove his high bred horse. I tell you Frank will make a fortune out of him.

Will Randall has got some more help now—another boy—good luck, Will.

Carrie Denison is back to Britton again. She has been to Ypsilanti three or four weeks.

ERVIE SMITH.

The deceased, son of Solomon Smith, grandson of James and Amelia Smith of Britton, in whose home he was brought up from childhood, after fifteen days sickness, (most of the time severely sick of malarial fever) death came on Tuesday morning, October 2 at eight o'clock, when it seemed sad that a youth of sixteen summers must die, but that which came to comfort through all was that he gave evidence that he had sought the Lord for his sins forgiven, and died requesting prayer. His funeral was conducted by Rev. James Wright from the Christian church at Britton, which was indeed accompanied with deep solemity, and much so on the part of the young people, and the attendance was large for a week day. The choir officiated with much credit in their singing.

CARD OF THANKS.

To the ladies and friends who aided so kindly in helping care for Ervie during his sickness and death, many thanks. SOLOMON SMITH.

AMELIA WALBY SMITH.

Was born in Killmaham, one of the suburb towns of Dublin, Ireland, Feb. 11th, 1815; and at six years of age was left a motherless child. Her parents belonging to the Society of Friends she was brought up and educated under their guidance, and in 1832 at the age of seventeen she with an only sister came to America, and settled in the township of Tecumseh where she was married to James Smith, Noyember 8th, 1836, afterward moving to Ridgeway where they have since resided, (until two years ago they moved to Britton,) they having eight children, all of whom are living except youngest daughter, Sophia Emmons. The deceased was very sick for eight weeks, when on Friday, Oct. 25th, at 4 P.M. 1889, death sealed the book of her earthly life, and on Sunday at 2 P.M. the funeral services were conducted from her late home in Britton by Elder James Wright, and interment in Ridgeway cemetery, when there is left an aged husband to journey alone to the River of Death.

NORTH EAST FRANKLIN.

Wesley Pawson is preparing to move west—four or five miles.

Dan Preston has been suffering from his old enemy, inflammatory rheumatism. He is better at this writing.

Ben Munger of Adrian, visited his nephew, Smith Munger, last week.

The school in Dist. No. 3 closed rather suddenly last week. It was stated that the teacher was ill.

Will Spaulding is expected home Wednesday, having been absent on his Kansas claim for a few years. We shall all be glad to greet him.

Mrs. Ida DeLong from Shiawassee Co., is visiting relatives in Franklin.

Howard McCollum is canvassing for a hand force pump in Branch county. George Taylor has marched to Rome on the same errand. Ed. Spalding prefers that his work shall tend to the enlightenment of the nation, so he will dispense literature and rake in ducats all at once.

Miss Amy, daughter of our old friend Jephtha Edwards, is renewing her acquaintance with Franklin people.

There were many mourners besides the relatives at Mrs. James Allen's funeral Saturday. She came among us a bride some seventeen or eighteen years ago, and has steadily grown in the affections of the community. An energetic, honored woman and a dear friend to so many of us, she will be sadly missed. But we mourn only our own and others loss—we know it is well with her whose christian profession was always adorned by her daily life.

FRANKLIN FACTS.

Ernest Wisner is expected home on a visit from Nebraska soon. Will Spaulding is to arrive from Kansas this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Watson Hunt are still in Iowa, visiting at Mrs. Hunt's parents. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Wisner went to Athens Friday of last week. Young Ed. Wisner, son of Jehiel of that place, is agent for a company that own a large tract of land in Franklin Parish, Louisiana; his sister Annie Andis and her husband have bought land there and will locate permanently in that far off south-land; young Ed. W. and wife and a younger sister will accompany them and spend the winter there; Mr. W. has been affected with a serious throat trouble which has been greatly relieved by the frequent trips and short sojourns to that state, which he has made and he hopes to be much benefited by the longer stay; the sister Hattie is also afflicted with throat and lung trouble very seriously. The party expect to start the 10th of this month.

School closed in the Center Dist. Nov. 5th. Mrs. Wilson has been re-engaged to teach the winter term. Frank Lampkin we undrstand has Dist. No. 2. school and Philo Mills Dist. No, 3.

AT REST.

Alvira Bennett was born in Butler, Branch Co. April 28th, 1849. At the age of 22 she united with the M. E. church at Litchfield, Sept. 6th, 1871, Rev. Geo. W. Tuthill pastor, and she was always an earnest, energetic helper in church work as long as her health would permit her. Of a bright cheerful nature, her ready sympathy and warm heart made her universally beloved. On June 13th, 1872, she was married to James S. Allen at her mother's house in Litchfield, and the couple returned to Franklin where they have ever since resided. Four children blessed their union, Anna, Inez, Wilfred, and the tiny babe, Alvira. Shortly after her removal to Franklin, Mrs. Allen united with the M. E. church at Tipton. In her long residence here no neighbor, friend or stranger was ever sick or in trouble long ere her cheerful smile brightened their gloom. Never very strong she often overtasked her strength by ministering to others. About fifteen months ago a slight cough which seems always to have been with her, began to increase and ere many months had passed it was evident that consumption was developing. Altho' suffering intensely she has been always patient and resigned; loving her family, thinking of their needs to the very last, wishing to live for them, yet longing to be at rest. A short time before her death she sang in a clear voice a verse of the hymn in which occur these lines: "Death like a narrow sea divides, that Heavenly land from ours." Looking up at her mother she said with a bright smile, "Isn't that glorious?" and when her little daughter Inez began to weep she said, "Why do you cry? I feel more like laughing than crying." She died Nov. 1st. about 1 o'clock A.M.

The funeral obsequies were held at the M. E. church at Tipton Saturday afternoon Nov. 2d., loving hands had covered the casket with white flowers and green leaves in beautiful designs. A large concourse of friends and relatives was present and few were the eyes that were not dimmed by tears. Rev. A. W. Stalker of Clinton, delivered an eloquent and touching funeral sermon.

CARD OF THANKS.

To our many friends and neighbors who so kindly ministered to our beloved wife and mother during her long illness, and who so generously assisted and sympathized with us in our recent bereavement we wish to express our heartfelt thanks.

Ringing Noises.

In the ears, sometimes a roaring buzzing sound are caused by catarrh, that exceedingly disagreeable and very common disease. Loss of smell or hearing also results from catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier, is a peculiarly successful remedy for this disease, which it cures by purifying the blood. If you suffer from catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla, the peculiar medicine.

Many diseases date their origin to functional disturbance of the stomach and liver. Laxador corrects these abnormal conditions most surely; hence the increasing sale. Price 25 cents.

The new firm of Alger & Tanner will have charge of the G. A. R racket for 1892.

An oyster trust is the last trade combination. If the price of oyster soup at church festivals is to be doubled up, what under the sun are we coming to?

Is the order of Patrons of Industry a farmers' trust? That is a disputed question now. But if it is a trust, and the farmers can hang together, what are the trade trusts going to do about it?

If Columbus could have forseen the strife and trouble that would attend the selection of a site for that 400th anniversary celebration, he would have hesitated a long time before discovering America.

The present campaign in Virginia has developed a new feature. The white farmers have got up immense barbecues to which they invite the blacks. No speeches are made but the whites devote the time to personal missionary work. Instead of stuffing Sambo with oratory, they stuff him roasted oxen and sweet potatoes.

Who's having more fun these days than Gen. Russell A. Alger? His position as Commander-in-Chief of the Grand Army gives him plenty of excuse to get all over the country looking after the posts and incidentally doing a little patchwork on that Presidential boom of his which was a little dismantled a year or so ago.—Pittsburg Post.

The Republican attempt to steal Montana is not likely to succeed. Judge DeWolfe has decided that the returns from Silver Bow county, which the canvassing board threw out on a technicality, must be counted. For his resolute championship of law and justice, the Judge has earned the gratitude of all friends of good government.

Our present tariff is a barrier to exports as well as imports. It curtails the export trade of our farmers and our manufacturers. The latter it cuts off from foreign markets by excluding or taxing their raw materials so that they cannot compete in foreign markets, although they have the most productive and cheapest labor in the world.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Vice-President Morton, heretofore a quiescent member of the administration family, has suddenly sprung into unenviable notoriety, not as a manipulator of offices, a Sunday school leader or a ballot box conspirator, but as the keeper of an unlicensed bar in his genteel flat hotel in Washington. He was threatened with arrest, but will probably be given time to comply with the requirements of the law.

The Secretary of the Treasury has decided that certain miniature opera glasses used in charms for watch chains are entitled to entry at the rate of 25 per cent ad valorum as "jewelry" instead of at the rate of 45 per cent. ad valorum, as manufactures of which glass is the component material of chief value, as recently classified by the collector of New York. It is gratifying to know that the Dakota farmers and the Illinois miners can now buy their opera glass charms at a reduction of 20 per cent in the duty.

The utter abolition of the protective tariff would be the greatest material blessing that could descend upon any wage worker or salary earner in the United States. Wages and salaries would not decline. The tariff never raised wages. Its abolition could not reduce them. But the annihilation of this wicked and useless tax upon industry and consumption would instantly increase the purchasing power of wages and place more nearly on an quality the man of work and the man of money.—Chicago Herald.

Whether tariff tax has to do with the discouragement of trade was illustrated by a conversation between a Costa Rican (visiting delegate) and one of the proprietors of a carpet factory in Lawrence. The southern visitor asked:

'You use fustic dyewood do you not?'

"A great deal of it," was the answer.

"There is no duty in your country on fustic and we can furnish you that" said the delegate.

Subsequently they arranged for an exchange of prices, samples, etc.

THE SPREAD OF FREE TRADE

Only a year ago Republican campaign orators, approving the national platform, declared that rather than surrender "any part" of this system of protection they would play the mischief with the whole system of internal taxation.

Since the election of President Harrison the cause of free trade has made tremendous strides. The epidemic has broken out in New England and rages furiously, attacking chiefly, as it appears, Republican manufacturers whose systems were so thoroughly depleted last fall by campaign contributions that they are unable to resist the insidious approach of the disease.

The two most eminent victims are Secretary Blaine and Senator Sherman. A year ago Secretary Blaine took strong grounds against any modification of the tariff whatever, but recently gathered together the American nations and made them a good free trade speech. Further than this, it is said that he and Secretary Windom are at outs concerning the importation of lead ores from Mexico, Secretary Blaine demanding the utmost liberality in dealing with our Mexican neighbors, and Secretary Windom insisting that we must protect the rich mine owners of the West regardless of the law. In addition to this, it is given out at Washington that Secretary Blaine insists that all agitation concerning Southern election methods shall ease, and that the attention of the Republican party be given to the important issue of tariff reform.

At Cleveland Senator Sherman addressed the delegates to the Pan-American Congress, and in referring to the purposes of the councils, said.

"One object was to settle controversies peacefully. This would disband armies and set an example to the world. Another was to increase our commerce by land and sea; it was a disgrace that we should depend upon Europe; we should have American vessels upon American waters. Another was to remove obstructions in our commercial relations. The speaker was almost inclined to be a convert to free trade if that free trade was confined to all American States. (Applause.) He wished to see not only a commercial union, but a union of hearts. We want a railroad from the United States to Patagonia. An eminent engineer has stated that the work was feasible; that it would cost less money and time, and present less difficulty than works we had already executed within twenty years past. Another thing we want is the construction of the Nicaraguan or some other canal. (Applause.) In the future he saw one grand language merging into itself the Spanish and Portuguese and English languages and spoken by three hundred millions of people on this hemisphere. The United States had no desire to acquire the territory of any other nation in America. (Applause.) But we want to help them to secure themselves in their autonomy and prevent the interference of foreign nations."

This sounds like some of the speeches made by Cobden and Bright; the only difference is that these Englishmen were broad enough in their sympaties to include the whole world, whereas the cold nature of Senator Sherman has only thawed sufficiently under the beams of the rising sun of free trade to enable him to embrace the nations of one continent. After all, this is great gain for free trade, wonderful progress when we compare the expressions of to-day with those of a year ago.

Some of our Republican cotemporaries, we notice, are busy explaining that free intercourse with our neighbors of this continent is not free trade of any character, but this only confirms what we have said before, that the Republican press does not know what it is talking about when it speaks of free trade of any kind. Free trade with Brazil is not the same as free trade with France, but it is free trade, and would lead ultimately to the removal of restrictions upon European as well as American commerce. To confine free trade with South America because her commerce is smaller and less profitable than that of England is an absurdity too great to long be sustained by the American people.

Just now free trade seems to be progressing at a rate greater than that anticipated or advocated by the Democratic party. They believe in taking one step at a time. Our Republican friends are going far ahead of us, at least for the time being. We wish to report to them the warning they were so eager to urge upon the people last year, that we never know how far even one step in this direction will take us; they are undermining the whole system of protection, removing the key-stone of the arch, opening the flood gates to let in whole cargoes of cheap goods produced by pauper labor abroad. Instead of refusing to surrender "any part" of the system of protection, they are destroying one half of it with one blow."

Do you suffer with catarrh? You can be cured if you take Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier. Sold by all druggists.

A REPUBLICAN CONFESSION.

Senator Quay's personal organ, the Philadelphia Inquirer, which cannot be accused of unfriendliness to the Administration, makes the following startling statement of the results of President Harrison's policy of dispensing with the apothecary's scales in weighing out pensions:

It is now stated that the hesitation manifested in making public the report in regard to the administration of the Pension Office by Corporal Tanner is on account of the effect which the publication might have upon the financial and business interests of the country. The wholesale rerating order, which has just been rescinded, involves untold millions, and it is not certain yet that the present revenues of the Government will be equal to the demands created by that sweep of Tanner's pen. The Secretary of the Treasury has called attention to the enormous increase of expenditures for pension allowances beyond the estimates for the year, and has clearly indicated that the existing income of the Government cannot meet the drain upon its resources.

The revocation of the sweeping order for rerating the minimum-pension class, without medical examination or any ground whatever for increase, practically opened the pension rolls to every one pensionable. A statement has been prepared in outline, intended to show the extent of the money involved in Tanner's recklessness. The amount is placed not far from one hundred millions, in addition to about that sum now expended on pensions granted in accordance with some regard for law and responsibility.

It is very evident from the tone of conversation that great uneasiness exists in official circles. A demand for more revenue with which to meet these unexpected drains would create a popular revulsion which would put a stop to pension legislation, if it did not wipe out some of the radical features of existing statutes. The Administration is now seeking to remedy the threatened disastrous consequences of the acts of one of its own officers with as little excitement as possible.

WHO PAYS THE TAX?

Some republican orators tell us the importer of goods pays the duty, and the price is even lower to consumers on both home and foreign goods because of this protection. Other orators of the same party say the consumers pay a few added cents on each article, but the benefit outweighs the burden. Here is a flood of light on the question for honest inquirers, clipped from an exchange in answer to this query:

A brief reference to the laws governing imports of foreign merchandise will settle it. Goods imported into this country are placed into bonded warehouses without in the first instance paying any duty. The duty is not paid until the owner or consignee enters the goods for consumption, and he may let them remain in the warehouse for three years, and at any time within that period re-export them to any other market in the world. If he has paid the duty he is entitled to have it returned to him. During the last fiscal year over seven million dollars of dutiable goods were reshipped to foreign countries, and over thirty-eight million dollars remained in the warehouses waiting, I have no doubt, a favorable opportunity to place them on the market, and that favorable opportunity would be when the owner could sell at a profit, including the tariff tax he would have to pay to withdraw them from the warehouse for consumption.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic researches, however, has proven this to be a fact, and result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to the applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet of this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 303 west King street, Toronto, Canada. [Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully.

Edison's inventive genius is bound to display itself. His little daughter, six years of age, can speak four languages fluently.

Deserving Confidence.

It is quite surprising to notice the numerous reports of remarkable cases of nervous diseases cured, such as headache, fits, nervous prostration, heart affections, St. Vitus Dance, insanity and prologed sleeplessness, by Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. This new and improved brain and nerve food, and medicine, is everywhere gaining a remarkable reputation for curing the worst of these diseases, as well as the injourous effects of worry, nervous irritation, mental and physical overwork. Baker & Hall the druggists, will give away trial bottles of this wonderful remedy. It positively contains no opium or morphine.

NEW EXTRADITION TREATY.

Negotiated Between Great Britain and the United States.

OTTAWA, Ont., Oct. 26.—The department of justice has been privately advised by the British embassy at Washington that a new extradition treaty has been negotiated between Great Britain and the United States. The finishing touches were added during Sir Julian Pauncefote's recent visit to England. From what can be ascertained the proposed treaty is drafted on the same basis as the Phelps treaty rejected by the United States senate three years ago.

The Weldon Bill.

Last spring the Dominion parliament took upon itself the responsibility of passing the Weldon extradition treaty, providing for the surrender of fugitive criminals to all countries whether extradition treaties with those governments existed or not. This measure was rushed through both houses here with the sole object of freeing the Dominion of American fugitives not reached by the existing extradition machinery. Now the Dominion government, at the suggestion of Lord Salisbury, will not put the Weldon bill in operation until it sees what action the United States senate takes in regard to the Pauncefote treaty.

Those Outrages in Crete.

LONDON, Oct. 26.—The reply of Lord Salisbury to the recent memorial of the Baptist union on the subject of the persecution of the Christians in Crete is printed. Lord Salisbury says that he instructed the British consuls on the island to investigate the newspaper reports of outrages upon Christians, and their conclusions in every case are that these stories are gross exaggerations. The charges that women had been violated in broad daylight in public places by Turkish soldiers were utterly unfounded.

End of the Switchmen's Strike.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., Oct. 26.—The switchmen's strike in the Louisville and Nashville railroad yards has ended in a victory for the railroad company. Superintendent Allen retained all the new men, and two-thirds of the old men were allowed to return. These latter will comprise all of those who did not take an active part in the strike. The new and reinstated men went to work at 10:30 o'clock Friday morning, and several special trains have been sent out during the day.

Failure of an Ohio Bank.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Oct. 26.—A special to The Dispatch from Fostoria, Ohio, says: The banking house of the Fostoria Banking company, this city, remained closed Friday. The president, it was found, had repaired to the county seat and then made an assignment. The liabilities are not known. The assets are $24,000. It is thought the assets will exceed the liabilities and depositors be paid in full. The assignee is John Binder. There is not much excitement.

Catarrh

Is a constitutional and not a local disease, and therefore it cannot be cured by local applications. It requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, working through the blood, eradicates the impurity which causes and promotes the disease, and effects a permanent cure. Thousands of people testify to the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for catarrh when other preparations had failed. Hood's Sarsaparilla also builds up the whole system, and makes you feel renewed in health and strength.

"I used Hood's Sarsaparilla for catarrh and received great relief and benefit from it. The catarrh was very disagreeable, especially in the winter, causing constant discharge from my nose, ringing noises in my ears, and pains in the back of my head. The effect to clear my head in the morning by hawking and spitting was painful. Hood's Sarsaparilla gave me relief immediately, while in time I was entirely cured. I think Hood's Sarsaparilla is worth its weight in gold." MRS. G. E. GRAY, 1029 Eighth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

"I was caught in a python's folds and saw fierce eyes glaring down into mine. If that tremendous coil were tightened around me, I knew that I might at once check my luggage for the undiscovered bourne. In this crisis of my fate I saw the great python's tail in close proximity to his mouth. I grasped the snake's tail and pushed a yard or two down his yawning jaws. Serpents seldom bite their prey; they lubricate it and suck it down. With such a long and cold-blooded creature, I calculated that it would take over a half a minute before the sensations of his tail could be conveyed to his head, and render him aware that he was committing suicide."

HIS GRIEF FOR HIS SON.

LESSON VI, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 10.

Text of the Lesson, II Sam. xviii, 18-33. Commit Verses 32, 33—Golden Text, Prov. xvii, 25—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

David, hearing of Absalom's rebellion, took his servants, and followed by six hundred faithful Philistines under Ittai the Gittite, fled from Jerusalem. Zadok and Abiathar also, with the Levites bearing the ark, went with him, but David sent back the ark, saying that if God delighted in him he would bring him back to his city and throne. Hushai, the archite, David's friend, was also sent back, in order that, perchance, he might be used of God to defeat the counsel of Ahithophel, who had turned traitor to David and become Absalom's counselor. It turned out as David had trusted it would; Absalom accepted the advice of Hushai rather than that of Ahithophel, and Hushai sent word to David which led him and all who were with him to cross over Jerdan to the other side, and they came to Mahanaim, a Levitical city of God, where long before the angels of God met Jacob (Gen. xxxii, 2). Absalom and his army also crossed the Jordan, and then follows the record of the conflict, and the death of Absalom at the hands of Joab as he hung by his head in an oak. The verse immediately preceding the one which begins our lesson says, "They took Absalom and cast him into a great pit in the wood, and laid a very great heap of stones upon him." Thus perished beautiful Absalom.

18. "Absalom's monument." This is the R. V. translation instead of "Absalom's place." Here is the record of something this wicked, willful, wayward son had done in his lifetime that his name might be perpetuated. Saul, the king, did the same thing after he defeated the Amalekites (I Sam. xv. 12), like those whose inward thought is that their houses shall continue for ever, and who call their lands after their own names. (Ps. xlix, 11.) In Absalom's life everything was for Absalom, and his name, and his pleasure; it might be said of him as of Belshazzar, "The God in whose hand thy breath is, and whose are all thy ways, hast thou not glorified." (Dan. v, 23.) The life of a Christian is to deny self and please God, magnifying His name; unto such He says: "I will give in mine house, and within my walls, a place and a name better than of sons and of daughters; I will give them an everlasting name that shall not be cut off." (Isa. lvi, 5.)

19, 20. "Then said Ahimaaz the son of Zadok, Let me now run and bear the king tidings." This was the son of Zadok the priest, and he had already endangered his life for David when he and Jonathan, son of Abiathar, brought word from Hushai to David that he should flee across the Jordan (chap. xvii); now he is anxious to convey to David what he thought would be glad tidings for him, but Joab will not consent.

21. "Then said Joab to Cushi, Go tell the king what thou hast seen." We do not know anything more about this man than is here recorded, nor why Joab sent him instead of Ahimaaz, unless the reason is found in the words "what thou hast seen." His name signifies "black," and he may have been a personal attendant upon Joab, and seems to have witnessed the killing of Absalom.

22, 23. "Then Ahimaaz ran by the way of the plain and overran Cushi." This "powerful brother," for such is the significance of his name, was so eager to bear tidings that he again pleaded with Joab to let him run after Cushi, and Joab finally consented. He was so swift of foot that he outran Cushi and got to David first. This reminds us of that other disciple who outran Peter and came first to the sepulcher (John xx, 4).

24. "And David sat between the two gates, and the watchman went up to the roof over the gate." We now pass from the battle field with its twenty thousand slain (verse 7), and the monument which Absalom did not build for himself (the heap of stones), to behold David as he receives the tidings from the messengers Ahimaaz and Cushi. As the thousands of David's soldiers marched out of the city of Mahanaim he stood by the gate side, and all the people heard as he charged the captains, Joab and Abishai and Ittai, to deal gently with Absalom for his sake. It may be that he remained there until the tidings came, so anxious was he concerning his son Absalom.

25, 26. "And the watchman cried and told the king." He sees first the one and then the other running alone, and he reports each to the king as he comes in sight, and now we may fancy the anxiety of the king's trembling heart till he hears the tidings.

27, 28. "All is well." This was the shout of Ahimaaz as he drew near to the king with the tidings that the king's enemies were overcome. "Say ye to the righteous that it shall be well with him. * * * Woe unto the wicked! It shall be ill with him." "I know that it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before Him; but it shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days which are as a shadow because he feareth not before God." (Isa, iii, 10, 11; Eccl. viii, 11, 12.) The time will come when all who make war with the Lamb shall be overcome, for He is King of Kings and Lord of Lords (Rev. xvii, 14).

29, 30. "And the king said, Is the young man Absalom safe?" Ahimaaz had cried, "It is well," but the king replies, "Is it well with Absalom?" He seemed to have no heart for any but this wicked son.

31. "And Cushi said, Tidings, my lord the king; for the Lord hath avenged thee this day of all them that rose up against thee." Thus from the mouth of two witnesses the fact is established that the enemies of the king are defeated. For the ninth time in this lesson we find in this verse the word "tidings." It would almost seem as if the Golden Text should have been a verse concerning tidings, such as Isa. lxi, 1, or xl, 9. We should always be as ready as these runners to bear good tidings, but we see how the best tidings may fail to affect a heart that has an idol, and prefers its idol to the welfare of others.

32. "The enemies of my lord the king be as that young man is." Still unaffected by the good tidings of the defeat of the enemy the king again asks, "Is the young man Absalom safe?" and receives his reply in these not doubtful words, which declare that Absalom is dead. The thing which he feared has come upon him, and now is his heart shown forth, and it is proved that wicked Absalom is more to him than his faithful soldiers or captains or all his people.

33. "O my son Absalom! my son, my son Absalom! would God I had died for thee, O Absalom my son, my son." Perhaps there are no more pathetic words in all Scripture than these, but there are various ways of looking at them. Absalom appears to be indeed a lost soul, passing out into the blackness of darkness forever, and well might David wish to have died in his stead, for he was ready to meet God and Absalom was not; but then God was overruling all this (xvii, 14), and He is infinitely wise and good. David was in this grief for Absalom, honoring him more than God (I Sam. ii, 29); and while his great love is commendable, his idolatry is not.

Their Business Booming.

Probably no one thing has caused such a general revival of trade at C. A. Wright & Co's Drug Store as their giving away to their customers of so many free trial bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Their trade is simply enormous in this very valuable article from the fact that it always cures and never disappoints. Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Croup, and all throat and lung diseases quickly cured. You can test it before buying by getting a trial bottle free, large size $1. Every bottle warranted.

EPISCOPALIANS ADJOURN.

Closing Proceedings of the Triennial Convention—Pastoral Letter.

New York, Oct. 25.—Yesterday was the closing day of the Episcopal general convention. The important business transacted in the deputies was as follows: The canon creating an order of deaconnesses was adopted unanimously; the report favoring the incorporation of the several American churches on the continent of Europe as a missionary jurisdiction under a regular bishop was also adopted, as was the adverse report of committee on the proposition to erect a missionary jurisdiction over the associated parishes of negroes. The vote on this was: Clerical—ayes 37, nays 11; lay—ayes 34, nays 5. Later the subject of a missionary episcopate for negroes in this country was referred to the next convention, Seth Low, of Brooklyn, speaking strongly in favor thereof.

Points from the Pastoral Letter.

The convention next adopted a pastoral letter. The letter takes a higher and more pronounced stand against public evils than those of previous years. It urges the people to found and maintain larger and less costly colleges of learning. Touching the industrial issue the letter declares that the church has taken due cognizance of the class disturbances during the past three years. It is evident that the existing industrial system is not what it should be. On this point the attitude of the church is that the obligations between the laborers and employer are reciprocal, and it is the duty of the employe to aid in defending the interests of the employer, and of the employer to adopt a reasonable attitude toward the interest of the workmen. The letter says the church should not be held responsible for unreasonable speculation either in the holy communion or other branches of the ritual.

The usual complimentary resolutions were passed, and speeches made, and with the transaction of a small amount of routine business the convention adjourned sine die.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this receipt in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. Noyes, 149 Powers block, Rochester, N. Y.

WHEAT GROWERS IN COUNCIL.

Important Gathering at St. Louis of Mississippi Valley Farmers.

St. Louis, Mo., Oct. 24.—The convention of the wheat growers of the Mississippi valley was opened at 2 o'clock yesterday in Central Turner hall. This assemblage is the result of a call issued by the Farmer's Federation of the Mississippi Valley—a corporation organized to sustain and build up the home markets. The objects of the convention are to devise means of obtaining better prices to the wheat growers for their product. An effort will likely be made to establish a uniform price at which wheat is to be sold.

Not a Wheat Trust, However.

The farmers disclaim any intention of forming a trust, but say they simply desire to remedy existing conditions, which force them to almost give their wheat away. The convention organized with Norman J. Coleman as president; Walter N. Allen as vice president, and Z. G. Wilson, of Minnesota, as secretary. Two hundred delegates have presented credentials. A number of heavy commission men from Chicago and Kansas City are present.

THE HOMICIDAL LUNATIC.

With a Sword-Cane He Adds Another Victim to His List.

Toledo, O., Oct. 28.—A special to The Commercial from Findlay says: Samuel W. Miller, cashier of the American bank here, was seriously, if not fatally, stabbed last evening by F. W. Stokes, his father-in-law. Stokes has been acting strangely for some time, and it is thought he was out of his his mind. Yesterday morning he was noticed sharpening up a sword cane, which so alarmed his wife that when night came on she went to the house of her son-in-law to stay all night. Not long afterward a knock was heard at the door, which Miller answered. No sooner did he open the door than Stokes, who was the caller, plunged the sword into Miller's side. The sword penetrated the right lung and came out of his back, making a wound which will probably prove fatal. Stokes was arrested, and is now in the city prison.

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railroad has over 3000 miles of road, magnificently equipped and managed. It is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnepeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casseleton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China, Japan, and the journey to the Pacific Coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a lifetime once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years,

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

FROM THE WESTERN GOTHAM.

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 4th. 1889.

DEAR HERALD:

Last Wednesday evening, the time set for the reception of the Lenawee Club at the residence of Dr. O. J. Price, 538 W. Adams St., was one of the most disagreeable of the season. All day Wednesday the rain came in a slow drizzle or in torrents, and the reception seemed to be doomed to be a failure. There was no indication of a change in the weather until about nine o'clock; still the elegant home of the genial doctor was a blaze of light and by nine there were about forty guests assembled in the beautiful parlors. A good orchestra was on hand and those of the club who cared to dance went to the spacious hall on the third floor, after a short literary program.

A piano solo by Master Arthur Price was followed by a recitation by Miss Truax and a reading by Miss Warder. During the evening Dr. Price gave a reading that "brought down the house." At ten o'clock refreshments were served and then the dancing and visiting were resumed. Between twelve and one the last of the guests acknowledged the cordial hospitality of the host and hostess and departed. But for the inclemency of the weather this first reception of the club at a private house would have been a great success in point of numbers. As it was, the pleasant time afforded by the Doctor and his amiable wife will long be remembered by those brave enough to start out in such a storm.

The next regular meeting of the club will be held in the Grand Pacific Hotel on Tuesday evening, Nov. 12th. At that meeting rules for the government of the club will be presented for adoption, and the secretary and treasurer will make detailed reports. I expect that a number of additions to the club roll of members will be made on that evening. It is hoped that all the members and invited guests will be present, and the and the permanent success of this useful society assured.

The American Horse Show now in session at the exposition building is attracting a good deal of attention, and thousands are thronging to see the fine collection of representative stock. The most sttractive animal in the show is the wonderful Axtell. If he is not spoiled by the attention he is not at all like us humans.

Chicagoans look with the utmost confidence for the world's fair to be located in this city, and already people are beginning to make calculations as to what they are going to do to make all they can out of it or as to how they can avoid the extra expenses that will come in the shape of higher rents and provisions. There probably is no other city in the Union that has such a vast area of available land to select a site from. The hotel accomadations are unsurpassed, and there are a good many interesting points about the city that will attract the attention of the foreign visitors.

The amusement question is receiving a great deal of attention now adays, and old timers are obliged to admit that the question is of a great deal of importance.

How is the great multitude of workers to be amused in a harmless way? How are the thousands of children to be kept out of mischief and furnished amusements that are interesting, instructive and free from injurious features? In a city like this there are hundreds of ways to take up the leisure hours of all classes, ages and conditions. In this letter I shall commence a description of the places of amusement and in my next continue until the subject gets beyond me.

Although thousands have visited the three great panoramas that are the pride of the city, many more thousands have never seen them and a brief account of the great paintings may prove interesting to them. On the southeast corner of Hubbard Court and Wabash Ave is the large, circular building that contains the magnificent painting, "Jerusalem on the day of the Crucifixion." Entering this building, a long, narrow passage brings you to the centre, where a winding stair leads to the top of a ledge of rock. After emerging, the first emotion is one of astonishment. "Can it be possible," you think, "that you look to see the clouds fly, but they do not. which-ever way you turn the beautiful landscape stretches away in the distance and were the painting is joined to the built up foreground the connection is so perfect that it is hard to tell where one begins and the other ends. Looking in one direction you see the walls of the city beyond, the city itself. Only three of the twenty-four gates of the city are visible from the point of view that is taken. Turning around from the holy city we see the beautiful Mount of Olives, then Calvary, with the Saviour on the cross, and the multitude surrounding him.

The grouping of the figures is very realistic, and one can easily imagine himself viewing the actual scene. It would be impossible to give a comprehensive description of this great and beautiful work of art in a short letter and, too, words fail to give an idea of the grandeur of the scene. The only way to learn how wonderful it is, is to see it.

Across the street from the Jerusalem panorama is the celebrated "battle of Gettysburg," another great work of art. We often hear people say that they think one or the other of these works is the best. The fact is that they are in no way to be compared to each other. Each is as distinctly different from the other as it is possible for them to be.

Coming up out of the passage into the circle in the centre of the Gettysburgh panorama you find yourself surrounded by a beautiful landscape and in the midst of the terrible battle. In this work the connection between the ground work and the painting is so skillfully made that the deception is perfect. The masses of soldiery and the implements of war are wonderfully brought out. There is a chance for comparrison between this panorama and that of "The Battle of Shiloh," on Michigan Ave., near Madison, but the comparison can do neither any harm. They are alike only in the matter of figures. The first is a beautiful summer scene and the Shiloh an equally fine Autumn picture.

I think that the "Battle of Shiloh" is the more realistic of the two, and the horrors of war as pictured here make an impression that will never be forgotten. The dead and dying soldiers, the lines of troops, the bursting shells, all make a scene that is worth going a long journey to see. Whoever visits Chicago and fails to see these three great works makes the mistake of a lifetime.

The different musems and other places of amusement will soon receive my attention, and I will try to give your readers an idea of what can be seen in this great city.

Your Faithful
OLD HILARITY.

NOTES FROM THE NORMAL.

The first of the four Publics annually carried out by the Societies of the Normal Lyceum, occurred Friday evening, Nov. 1st. Besides orations, music, etc., the "Courtship of Miles Standish" was played in full costume, The hall was crowded to overflowing and the affair was a grand success in every way.

Tuesday evening, Oct. 29th, Rev. Radcliff, one of the participants in the Normal lecture course, delivered a fine discourse on the life and works of the poet Thos. Hood, consisting of a biography of his life and recitations and readings from some of his strikingly humorous poems.

Next Tuesday evening Rev. F. W. Gunsaulus lectures on a "Chapter in the History of American Liberty."

Next Saturday examinations occur in the ten weeks' studies taken up at the beginning of the year.

Halloween passed off more quietly this year than it has been accustomed to in the past. Prof. Sill beseached the boys a few days previous not to disgrace the Normal by any destructive depredation. This kind request was heeded by most of the boys. But a delegation of University Students came down from Ann Arbor bent on painting the town red. In this, however, they were defeated on account of the electric lights being left burning and an extra police reserve being on duty all night. Prof. Key, of the Normal, who was detailed to watch the boys that night succeeded, after a sharp struggle in marching one of the students to the cooler. For this a hearty applause greeted him next morning as he came into chapel.

There is considerable sickness among the students, on account of which the attendance is irregular and at times noticeably diminished. We fell grateful that we can say those from Tecumseh and vicinity are all well as yet.

I was a member of the Grand Lodge in the early days for some 20 years, and personally acquainted with its leading members—A. J. Clark, A. Treadway, B. Follett, John Chester, Wm. Fenton, M. L. Lane, W. H. Smith, B. W. Demis, J. G. Bugbee, C. L. Dibble, D. S. Wallbridge, W. J. Baxter, I. G. Bugbee, J. B. Gillman, Benj. Vernon, J. N. Ingersoll, E. H. Thompson, F. C. Beaman, R. R. Becher, A. R. Terry, and my personal friend, C. A. Stacy, all of whom have passed away. They were men of high literary attainments and superior to many of the early settlers of Michigan. Our order was established in this state in the year 1845, amid a strenuous opposition with all kinds of vituperation. Many had to leave their religious bodies to which they belonged, and were otherwise ostracised but they had the backbone to stand the conflict. As an order we have triumphed, and will not expire while suffering humanity is in want.

But I was thinking today when leaves were falling, of the unmistakable presence of autumn. It is emphatically the shadowy, the meditative season. It teems with a world of ideas and reflections, for it awakens in the soul a thousand memories of the past, and brings near the whole phantom-train of thoughts and deeds and persons that we knew and loved in times past. The kindred and friends in whose affections we have found our paradise, have diffused a sweet sunlight through our homes, again pass before us, called from their graves by the mysterious power of memory. This is autumn full of interest and instruction by its somber character to serious meditation. Its falling leaves, its decayed vegetation, its moaning winds and its solemn decorations speak to our religious natures and awaken in our bosoms those mysterious emotions which indicate the presence of supernatural powers. It is one of those points, and one of the most startling which mark our progress through the various stages of human life on the road to the grave. Hence the alterations of the seasons, and of day and night serve as land marks to point out the passage of time. Autumn has a thousand voices which speak to us of death, a thousand images which point to the grave; it reveals the world to us as a vast battle field where our companions are ever falling at our side, and no one can tell who next will be the victim.

The seasons will indeed roll on, but will they roll for us? The warning voices of autumn will again speak to the world as today. Speak to us, but ere that time we may be slumbering in the silence of death. Standing in the midst of the decays of autumn, and surrounded by their melancholy memories ought we not to be admonished of the shortness of time and of the necessity of promptitude in the performance of duties to our neighbors and brothers.

Let us not think then that the future will afford us more convenient opportunities, nor that the duties we owe to the world and to our brethren may be safely postponed. Let the solemn declarations of autumn, the mournful spectacle of decaying vegetation admonish us of the priceless value of time. Let the fading and falling leaf which is now fluttering in its last hour of life on the wind tossed branches remind us of our own fragilness. Let us meditate upon the solemn lessons which are read to us by the changing year and give heed to the monitory teachings of autumn and thus the seasons, which as they pass, tarnish our beauty, consume our energies and waste away our strength, will leave after them for us a sacred deposit in the treasury of eternal life.

By request I add the hymn sang at the close of memorial services and dedicated to brothers who have passed away. C. W. HUNT.

There is a calm for those who weep,
A rest for weary pilgrim's found;
They softly lie and sweetly sleep,
Low in the ground.

The storm that sweeps the wintry sky,
No more disturbs their deep repose;
Than summer evening's latest sigh,
That shuts the rose.

Then, traveler, in the vale of tears,
To realms of everlasting light;
Thro' times dark wilderness of years,
Pursue thy flight, pursue thy flight.

The soul renewed by grace divine,
In God's own image freed from clay;
In Heav'ns eternal sphere shall shine,
A star of day, a star of day.

MARRIED.

The subjoined notice is taken from the Polk Co. Democrat published at Osceola, Neb. Miss Henderson was a resident of Tecumseh since her childhood until two years ago, when she and her sister went west. Among the presents were many tokens of regard from members of the Baptist church, and other friends in this vicinity.

RAY—HENDERSON—At the residence of H. A. Scott, in this city, Thursday, Oct. 10, 1889, Grant T. Ray and Lizzie B. Henderson. Rev. D. F. Williams officiating.

At 11 o'clock a. m., last Thursday, the large and spacious residence of Mr. and Mrs. Scott was well filled with invited friends, who were there to witness the wedding ceremony of Grant Ray and Lizzie Henderson. Promptly at the appointed time and to the music of the wedding march the bridal couple and their escorts entered the room. Standing 'neath an arch of beautiful flowers, with Mr. and Mrs. Scott on one side and Miss May Henderson and George Henderson, brother and sister of the bride, on the other, Rev. Williams in an impressive manner pronounced the words that made the two husband and wife, after which a beautiful wedding ring was placed upon the bride's finger.

The parlors were decorated in a superb manner and many complimentary remarks were passed. The repast was elegant, consisting of all of the rare delicacies, which is only found at such gatherings. After the lunch and best wishes of all Mr. and Mrs. Ray left for a wedding tour in Iowa and a visit to the groom's old home. They were recipients of numerous and costly presents, all of which were received with many thanks. The bride and groom are both well known in Osceola's best and most refined society. Mr. Ray has for a number of years occupied the position of drug clerk for J. Baum, and will hereafter have charge of Mr. Baum's store located at Benedict. The bride has resided with Mr. Scott's family for some time, is refined, accomplished, and one whose company is sought for in the best society.

A great deal of credit is due Mr. and Mrs. Scott for their endeavors to make the wedding a brilliant success, which it certainly was.

There are many people in Adrian who know of Mrs. Frankie Smith's great suffering some nine years ago, when she had the cancer on her nose and which destroyed her nose and a part of her face. When in this condition, I took her into my home to keep her out of the poor house. About this time Dr. Mixer visited Adrian, and hearing of the case came to see her, and let her have some of his Cancer and Scrofula Syrup. She continued in the use of it, and to my positive knowledge the medicine cured her entirely. She now wears an artificial nose and is well and healthy. Also my daughter, Mrs. Joseph Sharlow, had an abscess come on her thigh, which gathered and broke. It ate away the flesh very rapidly, and caused her untold sufferings for three years. She visited the physicians at Ann Arbor, Detroit, Toledo and this place. All told her that her limb must come off or it would cause her death, as it could not be cured. She at last commenced to use "Mixer's Cancer and Scrofula Syrup," and using fifteen dollars worth she was restored to perfect health. This was eight years ago, and she has not been troubled since. I think thes two cures are the most remarkable ones that I ever knew,

HOLLOWAY HASH.

The public hall association met again on Monday evening Nov. 4th, to receive bids and arrange for the immediate beginning of the building. There were three bids made; J. Forke being the lowest bidder was given the contract

Holloway was brightened and cheered one evening this week by the arrival of a load of Tecumseh school girls and though one young man was frightened so badly that he retreated to the barn, he has since recovered and is anxiously looking and hoping to be frightened some more. Come again, girls.

Miss May Kelley, after a pleasant visit in Tecumseh and Clinton is again with her sister, Mrs. F. Florance.

Miss Ida Potter, a native of Oregon, is making her first visit east, and after spending a few days at the Binns homestead, left Thursday night on her westward way.

Frank Rector shipped another carload of hogs from this station on Saturday last.

Seymour Barrett took his friends by surprise on Saturday by appearing in their midst.

A moving spirit haunts the berg at present; Mr. Vern Kelley moving to Raisin Center, Jerome Green moving to his old home, and Frank Holdridge indulging in the same recreation.

That marriage license is to be secured in time for the 28th.

C. F. Barker, book keeper for M. E. Chittenden & Co., visited H. H. Osgood on the 3d. inst.

There is a report current that we are to have a full-fledged jewelry store and silversmith in town soon.

Popular trial shows the worth of every article, and 43 years' constant use has proven the great efficacy of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup; it has no superior.

THE WHATSOEVER ENTERTAINMENT.

The Whatsoever society of the King's Daughters of St. Peter's church will open the winter campaign by giving an entertainment and oyster supper at Armory hall Thursday evening, Nov. 14. The evenings program will be somewhat varied in character, calculated to amuse both old and young. Gypsy fortune telling will be one of the chief attractions, supplemented by a fish pond. Through the powers of the Gypsy the young man is made acquainted with the name of the fair one, and is then given an opportunity to try his luck in the pond. The entertainment will conclude with a gypsy wedding, which will be one of the interesting features of the evening. Ices and cake will be served. Rooms will be opened at 6 o'clock. The public are cordially invited to come and help the young people in their efforts. The entertainment will be well worth going to see, and they should have a full house. The committee is sparing no pains to make this a success.

TUESDAY'S ELECTIONS.

As the fuller returns come in, it appears that the elections of last Tuesday were a veritable Democratic landslide.

New York is democratic by 25,000 with large gains in the legislature.

New Jersey elects a Democratic governor and legislature by an increased majority.

Mahone, the Confederate Brigadier, is buried beneath a majority of 30,000 in Virginia.

Ohio has flopped clean over, the democrats sweeping both the state ticket and the legislature.

The revolution in Iowa is unprecedented. A Republican majority of 30,000 last fall is wiped out and the democrats carry the State by over 10,000.

Even Massachusets has reduced her republican majority to about 6,000.

For a dead party the Democracy is doing some pretty lively kicking this fall.

THE NEW SCHOOL FLAG.

The new national flag purchased for the central school building arrived last week and preparations were made to hoist the colors with appropriate ceremony, on Friday afternoon last. The exercises were to have been held on the lawn, but owing to the storm, they were held indoors. At three o'clock the students assembled in the upper east room, and a goodly number of spectators were also present, filling the room to its fullest capacity.

The following program was presented:

Music by school, Rally Round the Flag.

Speeches by Dr. North, Mr. Tiffany and Rev. J. S. Joslin.

Music by school, Columbia the Gem of the Ocean.

Speeches by J. D. Schull and S. C. Stacy.

Music by school, Anvil Chorus.

Demonstrations were then allowed by the school.

Robe Hosmer proposed three cheers for the flag.

Albert Howard proposed three cheers for the speakers.

Robert Hicks proposed three cheers for the school.

Then J. D. Schull proposed three cheers for Prof. E. A. Wilson, and these were given with vigor and energy.

The musical selections were finely given under the direction of Miss Dora Grayson. The program lasted over an hour and was a fitting dedication of the new flag. Similar exercises will be held at the East school in the near future.

What is a cold in the head? Medical authorities say it is due to uneven clothing of the body, rapid cooling when in a perspiration, &c. The important point is, that a cold in the head is an inflammation of the lining membrane of the nose, which when unchecked, is certain to produce a catarrhal condition—for catarrh is essently a "cold" which nature is no longer able to "resolve" or throw off. Ely's Cream Balm has proved its superiority, and sufferers should resort to it before that common ailment becomes seated and ends in obstinate catarrh.

John Murray, of Kalamazoo, visited at Mrs. A. Fisher's last Tuesday.

Miss Sarah Ayers, of Ovid, Clinton, co., is visiting her uncle, L. B. Ayers.

Frank Deuel drove up from Toledo Saturday, and returned Sunday, accompanied by his father.

Fred Packard and Miss Lillian Bartholomew, of this village, were married last Thursday evening.

Lelma Stewart started for Kansas City, Tuesday, where he has a position in a large commission house.

The storm last Friday and Saturday was the severest we have had this fall, but the rain was much needed.

Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Robbins have been spending the past week among their old Tecumseh acquaintances.

Miss Hattie Whittier starts for Elgin, Ill., Friday afternoon. She will probably remain through the winter.

The County Teacher's association will meet in Adrian next Saturday. A program has already appeared in these columns.

The ladies of St. Peter's Guild will meet at Mrs. Mat. Root's next Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. A general attendance is requested.

The new postmaster, Chas. Culbertson, Jr., took possession of the Ridgeway postoffice last week. The office will remain in the same quarters.

C. S. Burroughs, of Clinton, was in town yesterday and left a card for his Cuba chewing gum. This gum is an excellent article, and he is already working up a good trade.

"An All Souls sermon" will be given at the Universalist church next Sunday morning at 10:30. In the evening at 7 o'clock a discourse upon "What Jesus says regarding the Lost."

E. A. Doke has gone to Cleveland, O., to take a position as fireman on the Lake Shore Ry. His resignation as 1st Lieut. was handed in to Co. C last Tuesday evening and tabled for one month.

St. Louis, Mo., is getting worked up on the subject of the World's fair. We have received a circular showing that St. Louis is by far the most central location, with reference to population and railroads.

John Britton took possession of the Britton postoffice on the first of the month. He has moved it into the corner store of the Daykin block, which will make very nice quarters for the office. His daughter, Mrs. Carrie Bauchman, will act as assistant.

The Industrial Congress is a new labor organization organized at Washington Oct. 14th. We notice that our old friend, Col. D. S. Curtis, was chosen corresponding secretary of the Congress, and we are indebted to him for a copy of the paper containing the proceedings.

A powerful temperance story serial is now being written by Col. Thos. W. Knox for publication in the Toledo Weekly Blade, to commence early in December. Col. Knox is well known as the author of the "Boy Traveler" series, and his new story will be a revelation to people of all classes on both sides of the temperance question. See ad. elsewhere.

The M. E. parsonage is a fixed fact. Sufficient pledges have been obtained to insure the raising of about $2,000, counting in the amounts from the sale of the old parsonage. The sheds on the west side of the lot have been moved to the north end, and the new building will be placed between the church and Mrs. Wheeler's house. Ground was broken on Tuesday.

The munificence of R. T. Bush, Esq. has again displayed itself in behalf of the Ridgeway library. He has lately presented to the library several elegant portraits. One is a full bust size oil painting, in a heavy gilt frame, of the late Jonathan Hall. It was execu- by C. H. Hopkins through an order given to M. P. Brown. Mr. Hopkins has been doing this line of work for Brown's gallery for some time. The others, seven in in number, are fine steel engravings, largest size, of the following literary characters: Jas. R. Lowell, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Nathaniel Hawthorn, Henry W. Longfellow, Oliver Wendell Holmes, John G. Whittier, and Wm. Cullen Bryant. The portraits have all arrived and the walls of the library rooms will soon be adorned with them.

Will Kies, of Elkhart, is in town.

Spencer Lester went to Detroit this morning.

Rev. F. Adkins was in Detroit last Tuesday.

Mrs. Julia Harding went to Hudson Tuesday.

Evening smudges are the order of the day now.

Mrs. L. E. Ogden is visiting her old home at Charlotte.

Mrs. G. D. Perry is visiting her daughter in Toledo.

Orange blossoms will bloom on west Chicago st. this evening.

Frank Hall is expected home from Agricultural college today.

Dr. Mixer publishes some valuable testimonials in this issue. Read them.

Geo. H. Seelye swings out a new card this week. Read it and heed it.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Holmes are the happy parents of a girl baby born last Saturday.

Mrs. N. M. Sutton and Mrs. H. L. Stewart have gone to Chicago this week to attend the National W. C. T. U. convention.

Verne Heesen is home from Agricultural college for the winter, and is putting in his time in the pattern shop of Brewer's foundry.

The first of a series of dances, which will be continued through the winter, will take place at Armory hall next Wednesday evening. Music by Hubbard & Macham's orchestra. Bill only fifty cents.

The county convention of the W. C. T. U. held at Morenci, last week, was a very successful one. The delegates from Tecumseh were Mesdames Mary E. Sutton, Carrie Mittchell, Mary E. Burnett and Mary C. Wood.

Hallow E'en was observed by the irrepressible small boy here in Tecumseh by displacing and misplacing divers and sundry articles of movable property which were come-at-a-ble. Since the front fences were removed and the sidewalks were nailed down, the youngster does not have a fair show on HallowE'en night.

A letter written to Richard Holdway from his friends in Oakland, states that it was not Oliver Emlay who was concerned in the shooting affray mentioned in the HERALD a few weeks since. It was an older son of Eli Emlay, not the Oliver Emlay who once lived in Tecumseh, a fact which his old friends here will be glad to learn.

A. A. Besemer has lately secured a patent on an improved water motor. The idea of the motor is to utilize the natural current of flowing streams. It looks as though he had struck a rich vein and we believe there is money in it, if properly worked up. There is a lengthy description of the patent in a recent number of the Scientific American, which speaks in very flattering terms of the invention.

Since reading the notice which appeared last week of Mr. Brown's sale to W. L. Heck, it occured to us that people might infer therefrom that he was going out of business. Such is not the fact. He will continue to manage his sewing machine and music business, and also engage in life insurance. Mr. Brown has been in business here fifteen years, and among the younger class he stands with the first in reputation and ability. We are happy to know, therefore, that Tecumseh is not going to lose him.

We have made a special arrangement with the Farmers' Friend Pub. Co., at South Bend, Ind., by which we can furnish to all our advance paying subscribers, free of charge, one year's subscription to the Farmers' Friend, a 16 page agricultural and family paper, published twice a month for 50c a year. This is virtually making each of our advance paying subscribers a present of half a dollar. Sample copies can be seen at this office or will be sent to any of our subscribers who will write for them to Farmers' Friend, South Bend, Ind.

The Art Amateur for November gives for one of its colored plate supplements a sumptuous and most artistic study of pink roses in an old fashioned blue bowl; and for another a set of fish-plate designs for china painting. In black and white, there is a profusion of designs for art-needlework, wood carving, china painting and tapestry painting. Thirty-three colored plates suitable for copying or framing can be had, it seems, on certain conditions, by those who subscribe before Jan. 1. Montague Marks, publisher, 23 Union Square, N. Y.

Drs. Mixer & Sons, Hastings, Mich.:

It gives me pleasure to speak in commendation of your "Cancer and Scrofula Syrup" and of the great good it has done my son. Six years ago he was troubled with scrofula, his face broke out with pimples and pustules. His eyes were badly enflamed and very weak, and by using your blood medicine he was cured so that he has not been troubled since. I know your C. and S. S. to be a most valuable remedy and I can cheerfully recommend it to all my friends.

MRS. A. HARDENBURG,
Tecumseh, Mich.

October 30, 1889.
For sale by druggists.

Eight years ago I had a bunch come in my breast which caused me much pain and suffering. I had it examined by physicians who called it cancer. I was advised by a friend to use Mixer's "Cancer and Scrofula Syrup" which I did, and I had used it but a short time when the pains were gone and the bunch gradually passed away. And I have never been troubled since. I did not doctor in any other way, except by using Dr. Mixer's medicine. I am now sixty years old and enjoy good health all of which I attribute to this valuable blood purifier.

MRS. ADELAIDE DWIGHT,
Tecumseh, Mich.

October 29th, 1889.
For sale by druggists.

—Our fellow townsmen, Millard P. Brown, who has been well and favorably known among us for the past 15 years, has been engaged to represent the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n of New York, in this locality. This company furnishes life insurance at cost, and has paid its policy holders over seven million dollars. We notice the following claims were paid in Michigan: David Preston, Detroit, $6000; D. M. Richardson, Detroit, $15-000; John A. Hamilton, East Saginaw, $20,000; J. E. Hammond, Detroit, $2,000; Melville R. Bissell, Grand Rapids, $10,000, and others. The company is largely patronized by men who wish life insurance at cost and who prefer to have the handling and investing of their own money rather than leaving it to a company whose annual expenses nearly equal the death claims paid.

—I have completed a course in the Mme. Kellogg system of cutting and fitting ladies' and children's garments, and respectfully ask a share of the patronage of Tecumseh ladies. Special attention given to children's clothes and to cutting patterns.

MISS F. E. ATEN,
Chicago st., east Presbyterian church.

—The Patrons of Industry have opened a store at L. D. Dewey & Son's on Railroad st., and will pay you the highest price given for poultry or ship it for you for ten per cent. to any eastern city. Bring on all your turkeys next week for Thanksgiving.

—Wishing to obtain a class in painting, Miss LaFleur cordially invites all interested in art, or desiring instruction, to call upon her at the M. E. parsonage, Clinton, Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 13, when she will be pleased to exhibit paintings, state terms, etc.

Rock Lump Salt for Sale.

I will have a car load of the celebrated Retsof Lump Salt in a few days. It is pure rock salt and stock will do much better when salted with it, as they eat only what they need. It will go four times as far as common salt. I sell it for 75c a 100 pounds. I also have it prepared for curing meat, and as there is no lime in it the meat does not spoil. It is now used by all large meat packers. Try it.

C. A. SLAYTON.

—If you want pure buckwheat flour go to the Steam Mill. Delivered free anywhere in the city.

FIRST OF ITS KIND.

Initial Report of Our National Boss Granger.

A LITTLE PROD FOR CONGRESSMEN,

Who Haven't Realized That We Have a Farmer in the Cabinet—The Minister to Central America Raises a Small International Breeze—The Two Dakotas Proclaimed Full Blown States—Some Figures on Coinage—Miss Clara Barton's Reception.

WASHINGTON CITY, Nov. 4.—The annual report of Secretary Rusk, of the department of agriculture, and the first issued under the newly constituted department, has been made public. The secretary makes the usual references to the work of the several scientific and other divisions in his department, and in addition he deals at length with certain plans for the thorough reorganization of the department of agriculture, and suggests several new features in the interest of the development of agriculture.

A Habit Congress Has.

The report calls attention to the fact that the first efforts toward a reorganization are hampered because of the surprising fact that the appropriations for the current fiscal year were made entirely upon the basis of the old organization, no account being taken of the entire change in the status of the department. The secretary insists upon the necessity for his relief from this embarrassment, and for adequate appropriations to enable him to meet what he believes to be the obligations of the department to the country. The secretary anticipates a portion of his plan of reorganization in the estimates for the forthcoming fiscal year—$1,359,000.

An Odious Comparison.

He says that the aggregate sum asked for in his estimate must not be measured by what is past, but by what a great agricultural country should do towards "sustaining, protecting, and promoting a calling which lies at the foundation of its prosperity and power." A striking contrast is drawn between this amount and the appropriations for agriculture made by those countries which the report says "are the most active competitors of American farmers in the world's market." A comparison shows that Great Britain appropriates for agriculture $1,500,000; Germany, $2,850,000; Brazil, $20,000,000 for agriculture and mines; France, $8,000,000, and Austria more than $4,000,000.

How to View Crop Reports.

Considerable space is devoted to the work of the division of statistics. The crop reporting system, he says, "while approximate and valuable, is in danger of becoming discredited by the popular acceptance of its results as exact in precision and absolute in authority. It should be remembered that they are not the conclusions of a thorough census, though they may be far better than the work of a poor census; that they are the consolidations of local estimates of agricultural experts, and are intended "as a foil to the interested, biased, and untruthful statements that speculators issue to mislead their victims."

National Meat Inspection.

The language used by Secretary Rusk in regard to a national meat inspection law is pointed and vigorous. The necessity for inspection at time of slaughter, he says, is first to enable the authorities to promptly locate any cattle disease centres, and secondly to avoid the anomaly of leaving the inspection of our own meat products to the officials of other countries, thus giving foreign countries some show of reason for the claim that they have better opportunities for learning of disease among American cattle than are enjoyed by our government. He accordingly advocates "such an amendment to the law under which the bureau is at present organized as will provide for such official national inspection as shall guarantee the fitness of our meat products for food consumption under the seal of the United States government."

With Reference to Our Mutton.

Sheep and wool receive special consideration in the report. The growth of the mutton interest is referred to as one to be greatly encouraged. As to wool growing the reduction of the tariff in 1883 is earnestly deplored. To it is attributed the great reduction in the number of sheep, which has since then fallen off by about 7,000,000 head, while the importation of wool has increased from 75,350,651 pounds in 1884, to 126,487,729 pounds the past year. "I commend these figures to you, and should they be submitted to congress I ask for them intelligent and careful consideration."

Agricultural Statistics.

Figures are submitted in the report showing the importance of agriculture, which produces an annual yield of nearly 4,000 million dollars, employing on the five million farms ten million persons, representing a population of 30,000,000 people, while the valuation of live stock alone is valued at 2,507 million dollars. Agriculture underlies all other industries; it alone making our vast commerce possible and rendering the product of our mines valuable, assigns to it the first place in considering the well being and prosperity of the country.

Protection for the Granger.

Referring to agricultural depression the report does not undertake the delicate duty of our legislators in diagnosing its causes and analyzing proposed panaceas, but the right of the farmer to the fullest enjoyment, compatible with the rights of his fellow citizens, of the benefit of the protective system, which is a rock-rooted principle of the Republican party, is earnestly insisted upon. "For all such articles as our own soil can produce the farmer justly asks that protection which will insure to him all the benefits of our home market."

Other Subjects Discussed.

The secretary takes up and very fully discusses the development of agriculture in the Rocky mountain districts; the sorghum sugar industry, as well as the production of sugar beets; forest protection, irrigation, agricultural organization and education, and pleuro-pneumonia and Texas fever, which latter, he says, can only be effectually controlled by the general government.

He closes his report with this earnest exhortation: "The great nations of Europe strain every nerve to make science the handmaid of war; let it be the glory of the American people to make science the handmaid of agriculture."

MINISTER MIZNER'S MISTAKE.

He Makes Some Remarks That May Be More Truthful Than Diplomatic.

WASHINGTON CITY, Nov. 4.—M. Romero, the Mexican minister, hurriedly returned to Washington Saturday from the Pan-American excursion. His visit is in connection with a protest of his government against the presentation speech at Costa Rica of United States Minister Mizner to the Central American states. That part of the speech to which objection appears to have arisen is as follows:

"The states of Central America must unite. A strong federal government is your only salvation. Colombia is massing her troops on the southern border of Costa Rica. Mexico has a covetous eye on Guatemala. It will be only a short time before Colombia will seek to seize your state, and Mexico will seize Guatemala. Central America will be blotted from the map of independence and her identity sunk in that of Colombia and Mexico. The time is drawing near, and only the most energetic action in federating Central America can save your freedom."

Blaine Fixed Up the Matter.

Minister Mizner's remarks, which promised to result in a decided coolness between this country and Mexico, were promptly disavowed by Secretary Blaine, who, as soon as the facts were reported to him, began a correspondence on the subject with the Mexican government entirely repudiating the offensive remarks, and expressing the government's regrets at the same. Secretary Blaine says that the impropriety and impurdence of the minister's words were noted by this government as soon as the speech was received, and that they were wholly unauthorized.

THE DAKOTAS ARE STATES.

President Harrison Issues the Expected Proclamation—Blaine's Telegram.

WASHINGTON CITY, Nov. 4.—The president Saturday issued proclamations admitting to the Union the states of North Dakota and South Dakota. The proclamations are almost identical in language. They set forth the provisions of the law under which the new states are admitted; the fact that the law has been complied with as certified by the governors of the states, and, in conclusion, declare that the admission of the states into the Union is now complete. The proclamations are attested by the secretary of state.

The First Case of Twins.

Secretary Blaine sent the following to Governors Mellette and Miller, of North and South Dakota respectively:

"The last act in the admission of the two Dakotas as states in the union was completed this afternoon at the executive mansion at three o'clock and 40 minutes by the president signing at that moment the proclamations required by the law for the admission of the two states. The article on prohibition submitted separately in each state was adopted in both. The article providing for minority representation in South Dakota was rejected by the people. This is the first instance in the history of the national government of twin states. North and South Dakota entered the union at the same moment."

Gold and Silver Coinage.

WASHINGTON CITY, Nov. 4.—From the report of the director of the mint the following figures are taken: Coinage of gold, $25,543,910; silver dollars, $33,793,860; profit on silver dollar coinage, $9,403,049; total coinage of silver under Bland act, $343,638,001. During the year the loss of gold by excess of exports over imports was $49,661,101; of silver, $12,034,403. The production of gold in this country for the year was $33,175,000; of silver, commercial value, $48,000,000, the currency value being somewhat over $16,000,000 greater. The total production of the world, commercial value, in both cases, was—gold, $105,994,150; silver, $105,556,000.

Honors to Miss Clara Barton.

WASHINGTON CITY, Nov. 4.—The citizens of Washington Saturday night gave a reception to Clara Barton, president of the Red Cross, on her return from Johnstown, at Willard's hotel from 7 to 9 o'clock. It was very largely attended in spite of the extremely unpleasant weather. After the reception there was a banquet, at which Commissioner Douglass presided. Speeches were made by the chairman and others, including Judge McArthur, who wished he were a great national calamity, that Miss Barton might take care of him. All the speeches were justly eulogistic of the guest of the evening, who, however, made no speech.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

The President's Proclamation Decrees Nov. 28 as the Day to Give Thanks.

WASHINGTON CITY, Nov. 2.—The president yesterday issued the following Thanksgiving Day proclamation: "A highly favored people, mindful of their dependence on the divine Providence, should seek fitting occasion to testify gratitude and ascribe praise to Him who is the author of their many blessings. It behooves us then to look back with thankful hearts over the past year and bless God for His infinite mercy in vouchsafing to our land enduring peace, to our people freedom from pestilence and famine, to our husbandmen abundant harvests, and to them that labor a recompense of their toil.

Now, therefore, I, Benjamin Harrison, president of the United States of America, do earnestly recommend that Thursday, the 28th day of this present month of November, be set apart as a day of national thanksgiving and prayer, and that the people of our country, ceasing from the cares and labors of thier working day, shall assemble in their respective places of worship and give thanks to God, who has prospered us on our way, and made our paths the paths of peace; beseeching Him to bless the day to our present and future good, making it truly one of thanksgiving for each reunited home circle, as for the nation at large.

In witness whereof, I hereunto set my hand, and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 1st day of November, in the year of our Lord 1889, and of the independence of the United States the 114th. BENJAMIN HARRISON.

RAN INTO A FREIGHT TRAIN.

A Collision Causes the Death of Three Men—Others Badly Wounded.

ROANOKE, Va., Oct. 31.—A passenger train on the Norfolk and Western Railroad collided with a freight train one and a quarter miles below Buford Station at half past one o'clock yesterday morning. Lee Jones, fireman on the freight; Sonny McDaniel, a colored tramp from Lynchburg, and Joe Gwinn, colored brakeman, were killed. The following were wounded: L. E. Wickesor, conductor on freight, leg lacerated, necessitating amputation, and otherwise injured, it is feared fatally; Jacob Bowers, extra fireman, right thigh broken and cut about face and head; Andrew Francis, postal clerk, front teeth knocked out, and cut on head and arm; Wm. Steffey, engineer on freight, cut badly on head.

Montana Election Contest.

HELENA, Mont., Nov. 1.—A decision was rendered in the Silver Bow election case yesterday morning, the canvassing board being ordered to count the votes cast in the Tunnell precinct for McHatton. Counsel for Hall, of the canvassing board, filed notice of appeal and asked a stay of proceedings until the case could be brought before the supreme court. Shortly after this notice of appeal had been given, G. F. Irvin, the Democratic member of the board, filed an affidavit setting forth that he is satisfied without the appeal of the case. Hall, the Republican member, says he is not satisfied with the court's decision, and wants the appeal. Jack, the third member, is out of the territory.

ESTATE OF ALICE OSBORN.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee—ss.

At a session of the Probate Court for the county of Lenawee, holden at the Probate office in the city of Adrian, on Tuesday, the 15th day of October, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine.

Present, Richard B. Robbins, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Alice Osborn, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition duly verified, of Frank L. Osborn a son of said deceased, praying for the probate of an instrument now on file in this court purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, and, that administration with the will annexed of said estate may be granted to Charles Burridge or to some other suitable person; the executor in said instrument named having in writing refused to accept said trust.

It is ordered, That Monday, the 11th day of November next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said court then to be holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, and show cause if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said county of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

THE ODELL TYPE WRITER

$15 will buy the ODELL TYPE WRITER. Warranted to do as good work as any $100 machine.

It combines simplicity with durability—speed ease of operation—wears longer without cost of repairs than any other machine, has no ink ribbon to bother the operator. It is neat, substantial, nickel plated—perfect and adapted to all kinds of typewriting. Like a printing press it produces sharp, clean, legible manuscripts. Two to ten copies can be made at one writing. Editors, lawyers, ministers, bankers, manufacturers, business men, etc., cannot make a better investment for $15. Any intelligent person in a week can become a good operator, or a rapid one in two months.

$100 offered any operator who can do better work with a typewriter than that produced by the ODELL. ☞ Remember Agents and salesmen wanted. Special inducements to dealers. For pamphlets, giving endorsements, etc., address the "Cured! Now and an Hour Ago!"

FOR NEURALGIA.

Many preparations for pain, relieve only and do not penetrate to the misery, soothe thereby, or promptly cure. They are therefore, either too harsh or too weak; too radical or violent; producing inflammation, or only partial and temporary in effects. Reason the value of the Great Remedy for Pain—a physician's formula, the medicinal virtues of which are well balanced into material cases, is truly worth its weight in gold.

St Jacobs Oil for the cure of nervous pains, and disorders of the body, wonderfully combines the essential elements that are confirmed. It will seek out the pain spot in the muscle, nerve, tissue or joint, and by its penetrating, healing, and soothing qualities, PROMPTLY AND PERMANENTLY. Mr. R. J. Van Pelt, Fayette Valley, Kans., writes Aug. 20, 1881: "I suffered a month with Neuralgia in face and neck; was cured by St. Jacobs Oil and a permanent cure. No return." Most surely it CURES.

CLEOPATRA.

Being an Account of the Fall and Vengeance of Harmachis, the Royal Egyptian.

The strength within me began to fail. I felt my life ebbing at its springs. Death drew near to me, and his shape was Silence. He entered at my heart, entered with a sense of numbing cold; but my brain was still alive, I could yet think. I knew that I was drawing near the confines of the dead. Nay, I was dying fast, and oh, the horror of it! I strove to pray and could not; there was no more time for prayer. One struggle and the stillness crept into my brain. The terror passed; an unfathomable weight of sleep pressed me down. I was dying, I was dying, and then I was dead—nothingness!

A change—life came back to me, but between the new life and the life that had been was a gulf and difference. Once more I stood in the darkness of the shrine, but it blinded me no more. It was clear as the light of day, although it was still black. I stood; and yet it was not I who stood, but rather my spiritual part, for at my feet lay my dead self. There it lay, rigid and still, a stamp of awful calm sealed upon its face while I gazed on it.

And as I gazed, filled with wonder, I was caught up on the Wings of Flame and whirled away! away! faster than the lightning flash. Down I fell, through depths of empty space, set here and there with glittering crowns of stars. Down for ten million miles and ten times ten million, till at length I hovered over a place of soft, unchanging light, wherein were Temples, Palaces and Abodes, such as no man ever saw in the wildest visions of his sleep. They were built of Flame, and they were built of Blackness. Their spires pierced up and up; their great courts stretched around. Even as I hovered they changed continually to the eye; what was flame became blackness, what was blackness became flame. Here was the flash of crystal, and there the blaze of gems shone even through the glory that rolls around the city which is in the Place of Death. There were trees, and their voice as they rustled was the voice of music; there was air, and as it blew its breath was the sobbing notes of song.

Shapes, changing, mysterious, wonderful, rushed up to meet me and bore me down till I seemed to stand upon another earth.

"Who comes?" cried a great voice.

"Harmachis," answered the Shapes that changed continually. "Harmachis, who hath been summoned from the earth to look upon the face of Her, that Was, and Is, and Shall Be. Harmachis, Child of Earth!"

"Throw back the Gates and open wide the Doors!" pealed the awful voice. "Throw back the Gates and open wide the Doors. Seal up his lips in silence, lest his voice jar upon the harmonies of heaven; take away his sight, lest he see that which may not be seen, and let Harmachis, who hath been summoned, pass down the path that leads to the place of the Unchanging. Pass on, Child of Earth; but, before thou goest, look up that thou mayest learn how far thou art removed from earth."

I looked up. Beyond the glory that shone about the city was black night, and high on its bosom twinkled one tiny star.

"Behold the world that thou hast left," said the voice, "behold and tremble."

Then my lips and eyes were touched and sealed with silence and with darkness, so that I was dumb and blind. And the gates rolled back, the doors swung wide, and I was swept into the city that is in the place of Death. Swiftly I was swept I know not whither, till at length I stood upon my feet. Again the same voice pealed:

"Draw the vail of blackness from his eyes, unseal the silence on his lips, that Harmachis, Child of Earth, may see, hear and understand, and make adoration at the shrine of Her, that Was, and Is, and Shall Be."

And my lips and eyes were touched once more, so that my sight and speech came back.

Behold! I stood within a hall of blackest marble, so lofty that scarce even in the rosy light could my vision reach the great groins of the roof. Music wailed about its spaces, and all adown its length stood winged spirits fashioned in living flame, and such was the brightness of their forms that I could not look thereon. In its center was an altar, small and square, and I stood before the empty altar. Then again the voice cried:

"O Thou that hast been, art, and shalt be; Thou who, having many names, art yet without a name; Measurer of Time; Guardian of the Worlds, and the Races that dwell thereon; Universal Mother born of Nothingness; Creatrix uncreated; Living Splendor without form, Living Form without Substance; Servant of the Invisible; Child of Law; Holder of the Scales and Sword of Fate; Vessel of Life, from whom all Life is, to whom it again is gathered; Recorder of Things Done; Executor of Decrees—hear! Harmachis, the Egyptian, who by Thy will hath been summoned from the earth, waits before Thine Altar, with ears unstopped, with eyes unsealed, and with an open heart. Hear and descend! Descend, O Many-shaped! Descend in Flame! Descend in Sound! Descend in Spirit! Hear and Descend!"

The voice ceased and there was silence. Presently, moved thereto by I know not what, I raised my eyes from between my hands wherewith I had covered them, and I saw hanging over the altar a small dark cloud, in and out of which a fiery serpent climbed.

Then all the Spirits clad in flame fell upon the marble floor, and with a loud voice adored; but what they said I could not understand. Behold! the dark cloud came down and rested on the Altar, the Serpent of fire stretched itself toward me; and with its forky tongue touched me on the forehead and was gone. From within the cloud a voice, sweet and low and clear, spoke in heavenly accents:

"Depart, ye Ministers, leave me with my servant whom I have summoned."

Then like arrows rushing from a bow the flame-clad Spirits leaped from the ground and sped away.

"O, Harmachis," said the voice, "be not afraid. I am She whom thou dost know as Isis of the Egyptians; but what else I am strive not thou to learn—it is beyond thy strength. For I am all things, all life is my spirit, all Nature is my raiment. I am the laughter of the child, I am the maiden's love, I am the mother's kiss, I am the Child and Servant of the Invisible that is God, that is Law, that is Fate—though myself I be not God and Fate and Law. When winds blow and oceans roar upon the face of Earth thou hearest my voice; when thou gazest on the starry firmament thou seest my countenance; when the spring blooms out in flowers, that is my smile, Harmachis. For I am nature's self, and all her shapes are shapes of Me: I breathe in all that breathes. I wax and wane in the changeful moon. I grow and gather in the tides. I rise with the Suns. I flash with the lightning and thunder in the storms. Nothing is too great for the measure of my majesty, nothing is so small that I can not find a home therein. I am in thee and thou art in me, O Harmachis; that which bade thee be bade Me also be.

I bowed my head—I could not speak, for I was fear-smitten.

"Faithfully hast thou served me, O my servant," went on the low, sweet voice; "greatly hast thou longed to be brought face to face with Me here in Amenti; and greatly hast thou dared to accomplish that desire. For it is no small thing to cast off the tabernacle of the flesh, and, before the appointed time, if only for an hour, put on the raiment of the spirit. And greatly, O my servant, have I, too, desired to look on thee here where I am. For the Gods love those who love them, but with a wider and deeper love, and under One who is as far from Me as I am from thee, mortal, I am a God of Gods. Therefore I have caused thee to be brought hither, Harmachis; and therefore I speak to thee, my servant, and bid thee commune with Me now face to face, as thou didst commune that night upon the Temple towers of Abouthis. For I was there with thee, Harmachis, as I was in ten thousand other worlds. It was I, O Harmachis, who laid the lotus in thy hand, giving thee the sign which thou didst seek. For thou art of the kingly blood of those who served Me from age to age. And if thou dost not fail thou shalt sit upon that kingly throne and restore my ancient worship in its purity, and sweep my temples from their defilements. But if thou dost fail, then shall Isis become but a memory in Egypt."

The voice paused, and, gathering up my strength, at length I spoke aloud.

"Tell me, O Holy," I said, "shall I then fail?"

"Ask Me not," answered the voice, "that which it is not lawful that I should answer thee. Perchance I can read that which shall befall thee, perchance it doth not please me so to read. What can it profit the Divine, that hath all time wherein to await the issues, to be eager to look upon the blossom that is not blown, but which, lying a seed in the bosom of the earth, shall bloom in its season? Know, Harmachis, that I do not shape the Future; the Future is to thee and not to Me, for it is born of Law and of the rule ordained of the Invisible. Yet art thou free to act therein, and thou shalt win or thou shalt fail according to thy strength and the measure of thy heart's purity. Thine be the burden, O Harmachis, as thine in the event shall be the glory or the shame. Little do I reck of the issue, I who am but the Minister of what is written. Now hear me. Always will I be with thee, my servant, for my love once given can never be taken away, though by sin it may seem lost to thee. Remember then this: If thou dost triumph, great shall be guerdon; if thou dost fail, heavy indeed shall be thy punishment, both in the flesh and in the land that thou callest Amenti. Yet this for thy comfort; shame and agony shall not be eternal. For, however deep the fall from righteousness, if but repentance holds the heart, there is a path—a stony and a cruel path—whereby the height may be climbed again. Let it not be thy lot to follow it, Harmachis! And now, because thou hast loved me, my servant, and, wandering through the maze of fable, wherein men lose themselves upon the earth, mistaking the substance for the spirit, and the altar for the God, hast yet grasped a clew of Truth the Many-faced—and because I love thee and look on to the day that, perchance, shall come when thou shalt dwell blessed in my light and in the doing of my holy tasks—because of this, I say, it shall be given to thee, O Harmachis, to look upon the face of Isis—even unto the eyes of the Messenger, and not die the death. Behold!"

The sweet voice ceased; the dark cloud upon the altar changed—it grew white, it shone, and seemed at length to take the shrouded shape of woman. Then the golden snakes crept from its heart once more, and, like a living diadem, twined itself about the cloudy brows.

Now suddenly the vapors burst and melted, and with my eyes I saw that Glory, at the very thought of which my spirit faints. But what I saw it is not lawful to utter. For, though I have been bidden to write what I have written of this matter, perchance that a record may remain, thereon have I been warned—ay, even now, after these many years. I saw, and what I saw can not be imagined; for there are Glories and there are shapes which are beyond the reach of man's imagination. I saw—then, with the memory of that sight stamped forever on my heart, my spirit failed me, and I sank down before the Glory.

And as I fell, it seemed that the great hall burst open and crumbled into flakes of fire around me. Then there was a sound as the sound of worlds rushing down the cataracts of Time—and I knew no more!

CHAPTER VII.

OF THE AWAKING OF HARMACHIS; OF THE CEREMONY OF HIS CROWNING AS PHARAOH OF THE UPPER AND THE LOWER LAND, AND OF THE OFFERINGS MADE TO THE PHARAOH.

AGAIN I woke, to find myself stretched at length upon the stone flooring of the Holy Place of Isis that is at Abouthis. By me stood the old Priest of the Mysteries, and in his hand was a lamp. He bent over me and gazed earnestly upon my face.

"It is day—the day of thy new birth—and thou hast lived to see it, O Harmachis!" he said at length. "I give thanks. Arise, Royal Harmachis—nay, tell me naught of that which has fallen thee. Arise, beloved of the Holy Mother. Come forth, thou who hast passed the fire and learned what lies behind the darkness. Come forth, O newly born!"

I rose, and walking faintly, went with him, and passing out of the darkness of the Shrines, came once more into the pure light of the morning, filled with thought and wonder. And then I went to my own chamber and slept; nor did any dreams come to trouble me. But no man, not even my father, asked me aught of what I saw upon that dread night, or after what fashion I had communed with the Goddess.

After all these things which have been written, for a space I applied myself to the worship of the Mother Isis, and to the further study of the outward forms of the mysteries whereto I now hold the key. Moreover, I was instructed in matters politic, for many great men of our following came secretly to see me from all quarters of Egypt, and told me much of the hatred of the people toward Cleopatra, the Queen, and of other things. At last the hour drew nigh; it was three months and ten days from the night when, for awhile, I left the flesh, and yet, living with our life, was gathered to the breast of Isis, on which it was agreed that with due and customary formality, although in utter secrecy, I should be called to the throne of the Upper and Lower Land. So it came to pass that, as the solemn time drew nigh, great men of the party of Egypt gathered to the number of thirty-seven from every nome, and each great city of their nome, coming together at Abouthis. In every guise they came—some as priests, some as pilgrims to the Shrine, and some as beggars. Among them was my uncle, Sepa, who, though he clad himself as a traveling doctor, had much ado to keep his loud voice from betraying him. Indeed, I myself knew him thereby, meeting him as I walked in thought upon the banks of the canal, notwithstanding that it was dusk and that the great cape, which, after the fashion of such doctors, he had thrown about his head, half hid his face.

"A pest on thee!" he cried, when I greeted him by his name. "Can not a man cease to be himself even for an hour? Didst thou but know the pains that it has cost me to learn to play this part—and now thou readest who I am even in the dark!"

And then, still talking in his loud voice, he told me how he had traveled hither on foot, the better to escape the spies who ply to and fro upon the river. But he said he should return by the water, or take another guise; for since he had come as a doctor he had been forced to play a doctor's part, knowing but little of the arts of medicine; and, as he greatly feared, many there were between On and Abouthis who had suffered therefrom. [In Ancient Egypt an unskillful or negligent physician was liable to very heavy penalties.—Ed.] And he laughed loudly and embraced me, forgetting his part. For he was too whole at heart to be an actor and other than himself, and would have entered Abouthis with me holding my hand, had I not chid him for his folly.

At length all were gathered.

It was night when the gates of the Temple were shut. None were left within them, save only the thirty-seven, my father, the High Priest Amenemhat; that aged Priest who had led me to the Shrine of Isis; the old wife, Atoua, who, according to ancient custom, was to prepare me for the anointing; and some five other priests, sworn to secrecy by that oath which none may break. They gathered in the second hall of the great Temple, but I remained alone, clad in my white robe, in the passage where are the names of six-and-seventy ancient Kings, who were before the day of the divine Sethi. There I rested in darkness, till at length my father, Amenemhat, came, bearing a lamp, and, bowing low before me, led me by the hand forth into the great hall. Here and there between its mighty pillars lights were set that dimly showed the sculptured images upon the walls, and dimly fell upon the long line of the seven-and-thirty Lords, Priests and Princes, who, seated upon carven chairs, awaited my coming in silence. Before them, facing away from the seven Sanctuaries, was set a throne, around which stood the Priests holding the sacred images and banners. As I came into the dim and holy place the Dignitaries rose and bowed before me, speaking no word, while my father led me to the steps of the throne, and in a low voice bade me stand before it.

And then he spake:

"Lords, Priests and Princes of the ancient orders of the land of Khem—nobles from the Upper and the Lower Country, here gathered in answer to my summons, hear me. I present unto you, with such scant formality as the occasion can afford, the Prince Harmachis, by right and true descent of blood the descendant and heir of the ancient Pharaohs of our most unhappy land. Priest is he of the inmost circle of the Mysteries of the Divine Isis, Master of the Mysteries, Hereditary Priest of the Pyramids which are by Memfi, Instructed in the Solemn Rites of the Holy Osiris. Is there any among you who hath aught to urge against the true line of his blood?"

He paused, and my Uncle Sepa, rising from his chair, spoke: "We have made examination of the records and there is none, O Amenemhat. He is of the Royal blood, his descent is true."

"Is there any among you," went on my father, "who can deny that this Royal Harmachis, by sanctions of the very Gods, hath been gathered to Isis, been shown the way of the Osiris, been admitted to be the Hereditary High Priest of the Pyramids which are by Memfi, and of the Temples of the Pyramids?"

Then rose that old Priest who had been my guide in the sanctuary of the Mother and made answer: "There is none, O Amenemhat; of my own knowledge know I these things."

Once more my father spake: "Is there any among you who hath aught to urge against this Royal Harmachis, in that by wickedness of heart or life, by uncleanness or falsity, it is not fit or meet that we should crown him Lord of all the Lands?"

Then rose an aged Prince of Memfi and made answer: "We have inquired of these matters; there is none, O Amenemhat!"

"It is well," said my father; "then naught is wanting in the Prince Harmachis, seed of Nekt-nebf, the Osirian. Let the woman Atoua stand forth and tell to this company those things that came to pass when, at the hour of her death, she who was my wife prophesied over this Prince, being filled with the spirit of the Hathors."

Thereon old Atoua crept forward from the shadow of the columns and earnestly told those things that have been written.

"Ye have heard," said my father; "do ye believe that the woman who was my wife spake with the divine voice?"

"We do," they answered.

Then my Uncle Sepa rose and spake:

"Royal Harmachis, thou hast heard. Know now that we are gathered here to crown thee King of the Upper and the Lower Lands—thy holy father, Amenemhat, renouncing all his right on thy behalf. We are met, not, indeed, in such pomp and ceremony as is due to the occasion—for that which we do must be done in secret, lest our lives and the cause that is more dear to us than life should pay the forfeit—but yet with such dignity and observance of the ancient rites as our circumstances may command. Learn, now, how this matter hangs, and if, after learning, thy mind consents thereto, then mount thy throne, O Pharaoh, and swear the oath!

"Long hath Khem groaned beneath the mailed heel of the Greek, and trembled at the shadow of the Roman's spear; long has the ancient worship of its Gods been desecrated, and its people crushed with oppression. But we believe that the hour of deliverance is at hand, and with the solemn voice of Egypt and by the ancient Gods of Egypt, to whose cause thou art of all men bound, we call upon thee, O Prince, to be the sword of our deliverance! Hearken! Twenty thousand good and leal men are sworn to wait upon thy word, and at thy signal to rise as one, to put the Grecian to the sword, and with their blood and substance to build thee a throne set more surely on the soil of Khem than are its ancient Pyramids—such a throne as shall even roll the Roman legions back. And for that signal, it shall be the death of that bold harlot, Cleopatra. Her death must thou compass, O Harmachis, in such fashion as shall be shown to thee, and with her blood anoint the royal throne of Egypt.

The only true practical
ELIXIR OF LIFE AND HEALTH.

Is one that promotes digestion, improves the appetite, cleanses the liver, purifies the blood, and stimulates brain and nerves without injurious reaction, and one that may be taken alike by adult or infant. Profane compounds, made of vile rum or bad whiskey, sweetened or flavored, under the titles of bitters, tonics, &c., produce effects far worse than the disease for which they are taken.

Vinegar Bitters is a pure tonic, a nervine without being narcotic, a blood purifier without poison a liver tonic without purging, and above all, a life-giving stimulant without alcohol. The only medicine with such powers in the world.

A GENUINE TEMPERANCE BEVERAGE,
far surpassing alcohol in any shape as a tonic, and it might be called

LIQUID LIFE,

since it stimulates, invigorates and regulates digestion, nutrition secretion, excretion, respiration, and all the functions whereby life is maintained—we literally take in vitality in spoonsful.

It is not too much to assert that the equal of Vinegar Bitters does not exist, and no counterpart or compound with similar virtues has ever been known.

CALIFORNIA,

If remarkable for nothing else, would be immortalized by the production of the medicinal fruits, roots and herbs of which this Bitters is composed. Many of them used by the Indians and the medical profession in the treatment of chills and fevers, rheumatism, catarrh consumption, neuralgia, headache liver complaint, kidney disease, jaundice, gout, piles, boils, skin diseases, &c., &c., too numerous to mention, but easily understood, when the action of the Bitters on the vital functions is remembered. The discovery was partly accidental but the present

WOOD, CRANE & WOOD, Adrian, Michigan.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.

Having purchased M. P. Brown's photo gallery, I will move into his rooms on Nov. 4. I still retain the rooms now occupied by me, but will do operating in Mr. Brown's gallery. This enables me to furnish the public with a better class of work than heretofore. I intend to make a specialty of life-size photo work and all kinds of enlarged pictures. You will also find a good line of picture frames, and in fact anything connected with my line of business. Hoping to be able to retain Mr. Brown's trade, I will endeavor to please the public and furnish them with a class of work second to none in Southern Michigan, and at reasonable prices. Thanking one and all for their past favors, I hope to retain their further patronage. Call and see me in my new quarters.

W. L. HECK.

N.B.—Mr. Brown will be at the gallery a short time to assist in anything that needs attention from his old customers.

HER HEALTH WAS RUINED.

Her Life Was One of Pain, But She is Now Well.

Mrs. Alexander Vaughn, wife of one of the most prominent and extensively known merchants of Prescott, Ark., writes the following letter under date of April 24th, 1889:

"I owe the preservation of my life under Providence to Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) For four years my health was wretched, ruined,—my life, a life of constant pain and misery and torture. Food soured on my stomach, and what I ate to-day I would vomit to-morrow. My sleep at night was broken with the most horrible visions in dreams, so much so, that I could not bear to be left alone; chronic diarrhoea, a painful cough that threatened me with consumption; my feet and ancles were twisted out of all proportion, and my limbs swelled more or less. I could not walk except on a level floor, and then with difficulty, and for a while could not get in or out of bed without assistance.

The pressure of a finger on my body would leave its impression, and in short I thought I had dropsy, in addition to my other affections.

Two doctors treated me faithfully during these four years but did me no good—the medicines they gave me were useless as stagnant water. My friends thought I would die, suffering as I was with such a combination of diseases.

In 1887 I discontinued the use of the medicines I had been heretofore taking and began to take Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) Five bottles of this truly wonderful medicine was what worked the miracle of my complete and permanent recovery."

Treatise on blood and skin diseases mailed free. SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., Drawer 3, Atlanta, Ga.

E. W. Gohean will sell at public auction on his farm, 2 miles east and 2 miles north of Tecumseh on Friday, Nov. [illegible] at 12 o'clock M., the following property: 1 brood mare, with foal; 1 five year old mare; 1 three year old colt, 1 yearling, 1 spring colt, by Gypsy Chief; 4 cows; 25 lambs; 20 swarms of bees; 2 sows with ten pigs. The usual terms will be given. Ben Reynolds auctioneer.

Robert Herbison having sold his interest on Mrs. A M Cole's farm, situated in the town of Saline, 4 miles northeast of Pennington's corners and 4 miles west of Moreville, on Wednesday, November 13, at 12 o'clock sharp, the following property: 6 cows, with calf; 1 two year old steer; 3 yearling heifers; 2 yearling bulls; 7 calves; 1 three year old mare, well broke; 1 two year old colt; 1 yearling colt; 1 sow and 10 pigs; 8 tons timothy hay; 1 sow and 6 pigs; 7 shoats; 1000 bundles corn stalks; 1 good lumber wagon; 1 good Oliver chilled plow; 40 sheep. Unusual terms of sale. Ben Reynolds, auctioneer.

ESTATE OF JOHN BECKLEY.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, ss.

At a session of the Probate Court, for the county of Lenawee, holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, on Monday, the 4th day of November, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine.

Present Richard B. Robbins, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of John Beckley, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of George Smith, executor of the last will and testament of said deceased and upon the estate o said deceased, respectfully represents that the funeral expenses and debts of said deceased and the expenses of administration thus far incurred have been fully paid, and that he is now ready to close said estate and to render his final administration account, which he prays may be allowed, and that he may be discharged, and his bond cancelled, and for such other order and decree as to this court shall seem proper.

It is ordered, That Monday, the 2d day of December next at nine o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said Court then to be holden at the Probate office, in the City of Adrian, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of said Petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said Petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County of Lenawee for three successive weeks, previous to said day of hearing.

RICHARD B. ROBBINS, Judge of Probate.

HISTORY OF UTAH

The only true history of Mormonism from its origin to the present time; endorsed alike by Mormons and Gentiles. Written without prejudice so you can see

UTAH AS IT IS.

Nothing so near approaches the miraculous as the rise of a new religion, founded by an illiterate man, in the keenest country in the world, and in the age which has given us the greatest inventions.

The finding of the plates, their translation, the first preaching, obtaining converts, founding of Navoo, origin of Polygamy, the exile from three states, founding a prosperous state in a desert beyond civilization, to be overtaken and passed by '49ers, the executive ability of Brigham Young, the struggle between Mormonism and the United States—this is thrilling as a novel, yet true history. Everybody wants it.

Mrs. Barker dislocated her hip last week and she suffers severely with no prospect of getting around again.

Died, Tuesday, Nov. 12th, Mrs. Harriet Lancaster in the 77th year of her age. Funeral was held Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Rev. Williams officiating.

Emmet Hurd of Barahoo, Wis., an old employee of the woolen mills, dropped in on Clinton friends Wednesday noon.

FARMERS' UNION.

The adjourned meeting of the Farmers' Union was held at Minor Davidson's, Friday evening, November 8. Although the evening was far from pleasant a goodly number gathered to listen to the exercises and enjoy a social time. By request some of those present kindly assisted in making and carrying out a new program, as not all those whose names were on the original program were present.

The subject under discussion—the present financial outlook for the farmer—was very interesting to the farmers and made more so by the able manner in which it was handled. By request Mr. DePuy's paper is published and speaks for itself. The paper was followed by a few remarks by different members of the Union. A very interesting and instructive talk was given by A. Richard, who agreed with Mr. DePuy on most points. His remarks plainly showed how thoroughly he understaads the condition of the farmers of the United States, and it contained many ideas which would be profitable for the farmer to study into and act upon.

The next meeting will be held at Frank Davidson's, Friday evening, Nov. 29, when the annual election of officers will occur, with the following program;

Music—Ina Blood.
Rec.—Lillie Welliver.
Reading—Geo. Sanford.
Essay—Loana Davidson.
Song—Eunice Davidson.
Chip Basket—Jno. McIntyre.

Question—What are the best modes of producing corn, best varieties, and the best way of disposing of the crop. Led by Mr. VanNess, followed by F. Davidson and others.

100 Ladies Wanted,

And 100 men to call on any druggist for a free trial package of Lane's Family Medicine, the great root and herb remedy, discovered by Dr. Silas Lane while in the Rocky Mountains. For diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys it is a positive cure. For constipation and clearing up the complexion it does wonders. Children like it. Everyone praises it. Large size package, 50 cents. At all druggists'.

A GOOD COUGH SYRUP.

There is nothing parents should be so careful about as selecting a cough syrup. Begg's Cherry Cough Syrup costs no more than the cheap and inferior nostrums thrown on the market. The best is none to good, be sure and get BEGGS' CHERRY COUGH SYRUP. We keep it on hand at all times.

John J. Orr, Druggist.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Husking is nearly completed in this section.

All who desire a class to be organized in singing are requested to meet Mr. Clark, at Cottage Hall, on Friday evening of the present week.

Theodore Allison went to Stoney Creek last week to attend the wedding of his brother, Stephen Allison.

Ex-Supervisor, C. L. Lowe and Esq. M. M. Florance, in company with some Raisin friends left for the north woods last week for a few days' hunt.

Mrs. F. G. Florence of Holloway, and May Kelley, a half-sister, visited their cousin Morris Kelley and family, last Thursday.

The new firm is also handling ingrain, brussels and tapestry carpets from samples, and is prepared to supply ready made, and made to order men and boys clothing. The new store is making an effort to put in a stock of goods that are not already kept in the place.

FRANKLIN UNION LITERARY AND LYCEUM.

The above society met at the residence of Mr. Len. Billington's, Nov. 8th. Owing to the inclemency of the weather the attendance was rather limited, only about 25 members being present, but those expressed themselves well paid for their trouble. The President and Vice Pres. being absent the Treasurer, H. P. Taylor, took charge of the meeting. The following program was well rendered.

Music—Geo. Taylor and Mr. Witherell.
Rec.—Rena Allen.
Dec.—Clarence Wisner.
Chip Basket—Cecil Billington.
Dec.—Willard Hunt.
Reading—Minnie Wisner.
Rec.—Alma Whelan.
Dec.—Hoyt Whelan.

The debate was rather slim owing to the scarcity of debaters.

The next meeting will be held at Mr. William Witherell's, Nov. 22d. A good program has been prepared for the occasion. There will be no debate, the time will be spent in music and a good time in general is anticipated.

The worst featurers about catarrh is its dangerous tendency to consumption. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh by purifying the blood.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

The following correspondence explains itself:

Dear Wing of the Eagle—I send you today the two last copies of the TECUMSEH HERALD. Do you recognize any feathers? You know hash makers are entitled to a great variety of edibles as well as non edibles; so if you see a scrap of a feather sticking out anywhere that reminds you of old times, please recognize the fact that you and your worthy wife are often the subjects of the thoughts and conversation of the many friends you left behind you. Knowing that Hash digesters would all be glad to hear from you, I solicit as long a response for publication as your time and kindness will permit. Yours resp'y,

H. HASH.

JAMAICA, Iowa, Nov. 9, '89.

Dear Friend Hash—I have your valued favor of recent date, requesting me to write you a few items for publication in the HERALD. Believe me I esteem the invitation a compliment of no small moment, and will gladly, Friend Hash, furnish you and the readers of your paper such scraps of information as may be interesting to you all.

My family now consists of the two original Holders, a daughter 2 yrs. old, who, by the way is just the cutest little girl in Iowa; next comes my neice of 13, who is staying with us indefinitely; next comes "Polar," one we adopted, of Iowa production, next our Jersey cow, last but not least, Samantha and Tirza Ann and their 11 children.

We have sojourned in this town since April, 888, and are liable to remain for some time to come, voiding uncertainties—and scraps with Tirzy-Ann, which may terminate in a verdict of "suicide, after which the swine tore great chunks of flesh from his bones."

We like the town tolerably. The people are of a far different stamp than those of good old Holloway. There seems to be a disposition in them to want to draw your salary, is about the clearest way of expressing it. It takes about $7.50 to make them sociable. If you can stand the racket on say $50 a month to drop $7.50 a day with each business man, you will then be a bully boy with a glass eye. Every man seems to find little society except in the Goddess of Liberty, as stamped upon the "mighty dollar." But I am as independent as a "hog on ice," and ask no "hods o' em." I am saving my money and when I get 75c ahead, am going to take a day or two off and go to Omaha and spend it for beer.

I was never so dry in my life. I would like to tell how dry I am by comparing myself with Al. Macham the day Bill Cox and I called him down off the wheat stack, but I dare not say anything for I am perfectly well aware that Bill would not like it, and Al. might kick if I told that he took a whole quart of beer at one swallow, then walled his eyes up and said, "by swang boys, I believe I could swallow the goll-durned bottle if you would unbutton my shirt collar." Oh! no, I respect you too much dear old boys, trust me, I will never give you away to your trusting faithful wives, never.

We station agents encounter some of the funniest people that ever went anywhere and it seems that out here, they take the station agent to be a sort of medium to which to relate their trials, and tribulations, their fortunes and misfortunes. Of the one I am about to relate I suppose belonged to the latter, yet as she didn't mention the name of the other contracting personage, I could not well judge.

I was sitting at the instrument receiving a message to our grain dealer to the effect that "corn had declined to 15c," when a shrill voice at the ticket window attracted my attention. I stepped there as soon as convenient, to find an old maid, Miss Golden, waiting to relate a strange dream she had the night before. Miss G. is a perfect lady and will never see 49 again, but just why she should take me for a dream interpreter is a conundrum to me.

But as I am in a big pickle now over checking 7 trunks for 6 traveling men and selling an undue amount of tickets, making up three express packages for people sending off for whiskey, and looking after a hundred and four other things, I will have to close and give her dream next week. With best regards to all from all, I remain,

F. C. HOLDER.

P. S.—It wont be any news if I tell you that Iowa went Democratic by a small majority, the result of the G. O. P. taking the prohibition galoots by the neck and hugging their cranky theory with such a loving embrace, may be. It wouldn't work, there is too many of the G. O. P. who like "a wee drap," and they don't like to perjure themselves by swearing that they did not buy liquor of such and such a person, who is before the grand jury for "boot legging." Whoever says that prohibition prohibits in Iowa, lies. The citizens are simply depriving themselves of the revenues, which other states make. If prohibition was voted upon as a nation and carried, then it would doubtless be a grand thing. But when one state votes and prohibition carries, and the adjoining state wont have anything to do with it, then the sister state begins to reap the profits which the prohibition state flings to the four winds. This is why Boies is elected. The majority of the G. O. P. are sick and tired of prohibition, and the platform of the Democrat party was one advocating high license.

Don't think, friend Hash, that I have thrown off my Republican armor, for I havn't. While I voted for Boies and two or three other good men, I voted the dictations of my conscience, as to the advancement of the most good—and my vote won.

Tariff reform is the watchword. It is sure to win in time.

Our democrat exchanges of last week contain a liberal supply of poultry illustrations.

The Republican party is in a hurry for Thanksgiving to arrive. Its goose is already cooked.

Cincinnati has now put in her bid for the World's fair. Beer has been reduced to three cents a glass.

The independent voter is multiplying rapidly with every election, and the party machines are getting badly wrecked.

Do the members of the cabinet ever take a milk shake at Vice-President Morton's bar? This is a question which our Prohibition friends should investigate.

All the telegrams of congratulation last week were directed to Grover Cleveland, and yet Grover is a private citizen. Cleveland has taken Tilden's place in the affections of the national Democracy.

There were a good many things cooked on Tuesday last—10,000,000 eggs at a fire in Chicago, Mahone's goose in Virginia and some side dishes in which the Harrison administration was interested.—Boston Post.

The Adventists were greatly chagrined that the world did not come to an end on the 25th of October. But they can console themselves with the reflection that they now have a chance to set another day for the final catastrophe.

Mrs. Lillie Blake's latest conundrum is this: "Is it a crime to be a woman?" No, Lillie, it is not a crime. It may be an indiscretion, or a blunder, or an inadvertence, but it is one of those silver-edged sins that man can easily condone—can even love the sinner.

The litigation over the will of the late Samuel J. Tilden will set many persons thinking where the possibilities of will breaking, as it is now practiced in this country, may end. If the greatest lawyer of his time could not make a will disposing of his own property strong enough to withstand the attempts of his successors to invalidate it, the outlook for less clever persons does not seem promising.

Some people wonder why the south is solid. This little extract from the Atlanta Constitution contains the kernel of the secret:

"This section is getting along just as well as the most enthusiastic could expect. Its progress since 1880 has been almost incalculable, and yet it is only at the beginning of an era of prosperous development that will be one of the marvels of the nineteenth century."

The white men of the south do not intend to check this era of prosperity by putting scalawags of the Mahone stripe back into power.

There is now a chance for a decent Republican organization in Virginia, Mississippi, and other southern states. The overwhelming defeat of Mahone in Virginia, and the withdrawal of Chalmers in Mississippi because neither whites nor blacks would support him, open the way for the organization of a reputable and hopeful Republican party in every southern state. President Harrison started out in a feeble way to do it, but was soon overruled by the small demagogues and jobbers who swarm around Washington, and the Mahone and Chalmers disgrace is the logical consequence.—Philadelphia Times.

It really seems that the Ohio wool grower is lapsing from the faith, as, indeed, there is every reason why he should. The case of the goose that laid the golden egg was never better paralelled than in the effect of the "farmers' friend" tariff upon the woolen mills, and indirectly the wool producers of the United States. Even an Ohio farmer is not quite so devoted to the tariff fetich as to continue loyal when he finds his wool left on his hands because the tariff has closed the factories and destroyed the market. He sees that a year or two of low-priced wool and high-priced clothing would drive him back to the spinning wheel and loom, now lying dusty and forgotten in his garret, and would send the greater part of his sheep to the butcher for what they would bring.—Detroit Free Press.

COMMENTS ON THE ELECTIONS.

The following comments, taken from different sources, on the political revolution of last week, will be good reading at this particular time. Altho' local causes had something to do with it, still local causes alone could not have produced the wonderful change that took place in most of the states.

CLEVELAND'S VIEWS.

Ex-President Cleveland has this to to say;

"It is evident that the leaven of tariff reform has at last leavened the whole lump. The West, which has suffered most from the unjust burden of tariff taxation, has awakened. The State platforms of both Iowa and Ohio were abreast of the St. Louis platform on the subject of tariff reform.

"The people have considered and passed judgment. It was for the people to decide. They are now deciding. It is enough for me to say that I am satisfied at the indications and results of Tuesday's elections.

"The verdict in Virginia indicates that the South is still faithful to the Democracy of Jefferson and Jackson."

WHAT WM. C. WHITNEY SAYS.

Ex-Secretary Whitney, who is regarded as one of the shrewest politicians in the country, says:

"The result of the battle at the polls is one on which the Democratic party and the country ought to be congratulated. The returns are full of surprises to the most sanguine of the adherents of the Democratic party, but every surprise is of the kind good Democrats relish. It is hard for me to analyze the causes that led to this splendid result in an off hand conversation and without having made a serious study of the subject since the voice of the people has been heard, but it seems to me that there were a number of reasons for these very gratifying Democratic gains. All of these reasons for the change of votes from the Republican to the Democratic party still exist, and I believe they will result in further inroads into the Republican ranks in the elections which are to come."

"Do you allude to the issues on which the Presidential canvass was made last fall?"

"I do, decidedly. I believe the Democratic party was right on the issues made in the Presidential canvas, and I believe the more thoroughly that question is agitated the stronger the Democratic party will grow. I think the tendency of the intelligent voter has been toward the Democratic party since the Presidential campaign in 1876, and I look for greater results even than those achieved last Tuesday from subsequent campaigns in which the fight is made on a real issue that appeals to the intelligence of the voters of the nation. The victories achieved at the late elections indicate to me that the great army of middle men of the country—those who are between the manufacturer and the consumer—are supporting the Democratic party. There were several reasons for the defeat we met in the last Presidential election. The manufacturers got badly frightened, and the result of their scare was a general alarm that in time of elections becomes contagious and brings voters to cast their ballots as they would not do if time were given them for calm, sober reflection. Then the alarm which prevailed among the manufacturers caused them to contribute more liberally than they had ever done before to the Republican campaign fund, and we all know that the amount of money spent had great weight in bringing about the defeat of our party last Fall.

GEN. COLLINS'S OPINION.

"The result of these elections is an indignant protest from the North and South, East and West, against Republican methods of government. It may, in fact, be said of it besides, that it is an act of contrition for last year's divergence from the right path of a good many Democrats. The solid West has been broken—broken, too, in a vital part. I remember the time, and that not in the remote past, when politicians used to say by way of a joke, 'Have you heard the news from Iowa?' But, after all, what else could you expect from intelligent people, who may be deceived for years, but ultimately must come to their senses. The result in Virginia is indeed a stinging rebuke to President Harrison and his Administration. Among others both surprised and dismayed at the turn of affairs must be Senator Hiscock of New York, who was so confident and jubilant over the Dakotas that he declared New York might be dispensed with in future as a pivotal State. I wonder if he would say the same to-night. And after all, he may have been right, only in altogether a different sense from what he intended. I doubt if in the next presidential contest there will be any pivotal State. The groundswell of Democracy is rising and extending north and west gently and slowly but surely and, if I mistake not, will take in Michigan, Wisconsin and, who knows, may not pass Illinois. There are glorious possibilities for the future of Democracy if it be true to itself."

"We expect something more from Massachusetts yet, General?"

"Massachusetts has done well and will do better next time, he replied. "Were it not for local issues in Boston we would have carried the State by a good majority; as matters stand, I think it is secure for the future. New York State is to be congratulated for its magnificent victory, and the proof furnished by its civic fight that warring partisans are true to general principles and the State ticket. In fact, this is a great year for Democrats all over."

ISAAC M. WESTON'S VIEWS.

"I am not at all surprised at the Democratic sweep." As a member of the Association of State Committees, Chairman of the Democracy of the Northwest, I have been watching the States in that section and I have seen a steady tendency toward Democracy. I looked for a great victory there a year ago, and I can plainly see what hindered it. The delay was merely temporary. Tariff reform as proposed by the Democracy is an absolute necessity, and that the people realize this is shown by the vote of Ohio and Iowa. The victories of this year are the direct result of the work done a year ago. Too late in the campaign of 1888 the Republicans sprang their scare stories and preached their doctrines of hatred. It was a campaign, by the Republicans, of hate falsehood and corruption, with no settled principle but that of establishing a manufacturing aristocracy in this republic.

"The campaign of the Democracy was one of sound logic. The Democracy has not lost a single convert, while the Republicans have been deserted by thousands of people, who were driven to despair by the falsehoods and misrepresentations made to them. In the last few weeks of the Presidential campaign the people were deceived and there was not time to set them right, but after the battle they calmly weighed the arguments of both sides and they saw their mistake. Now they have begun to rectify it, and they will continue to do so more and more each year, as they become more thoroughly acquainted with the facts.

"The Republicans say the Prohibition vote in Iowa is what defeated them, but this is not true. They are an agricultural people in Iowa, and are Prohibitionists to a large extent, but the Prohibition vote comes from both the Republican and Democratic parties. Tariff reform is what defeated the Republicans. The people have been studying it, and they are now convinced that the reform proposed by the Democrats is what they want. A year ago they were blinded by the old War issues. But that this doctrine could not hide the true facts of the issue of the day is shown in Ohio. Governor Foraker was the loudest in shouting old War issues, and he has been justly rebuked. The doctrines of the Democracy stood. Those of the Republican party were weak and false and they have fallen. The voters are at last getting their eyes open, and the solid Northwest of the Republican party is irretrievably broken, and that section of the country will see to it that no more National victories are achieved by any party of protection to favored classes."

THE N. Y. EVENING POST.

The Evening Post has a few very sensible comments from the standpoint of a Mugwump:

"The feature of Tuesday's elections which is both most gratifying to the country at large and most humiliating to the Administration is the overwhelming defeat of Mahone. No worse demagogue has come to the front in any part of the country since the war, and good citizens everywhere will rejoice that he has at last been buried too deep for resurrection. The decent white Republicans of Virginia almost to a man have opposed him in this campaign, and every Republican newspaper of character has been outspoken for his defeat as the only salvation of the party. Yet the "mailed hand of Senator Quay and the Administration" has supported this notorious demagogue, and Assistant Postmaster-General Clarkson, as the representative of the Administration, has been aiding him in every way that the use of the Federal patronage could suggest. The Administration thus disgraced itself in the service of one of the worst men seen in politics during this generation, and then finds the candidate in whose interest it prostituted the civil service overwhelmingly beaten. This shame would have been avoided if Benjamin Harrison had at the onset taken the position as to such matters laid down by his grandfather, who said in his inaugural address on the 4th of March, 1841:

"The influence of the Executive in controlling the freedom of the elective franchise through the medium of the public officers can be effectually checked by renewing the prohibition published by Mr. Jefferson, forbidding their interference in elections further than giving their own votes; and their own independence secured by the assurance of perfect immunity in exercising this sacred privilege of freemen under the dictates of their own unbiased judgements. Never, with my consent, shall an officer of the people, compensated for his services out of their pockets, become the pliant instrument of Executive will.

Remarkable Nerve.

The early history of America is full of instances of men having great nerve. But we are rapidly becoming the most nervous people on earth. The recent increase of insanity, epileptic fits, headache, backache, neuralgia, sleeplessness, nervousness, dyspepsia, fluttering of the heart, etc, points to an early decay of the race, unless this tendency is checked. Nothing will cure these diseases like Dr. Miles' Nervine, warranted to contain neither opium nor morphine Sample bottles free at Baker & Hall's Drug Store. Don't fail to try it.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic researches, however, has proven this to be a fact, and result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to the applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet of this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 303 west King street, Toronto, Canada. [Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully.

His Mother Knew What Was Best.

I know from practical use of the beneficial effects of Red Clover. When but eleven years of age I had Scrofulus swellings, carrying both arms in one position for weeks at a time. Doctors said on examination that I might live a year possibly two at the longest, but no longer. My mother took charge of me, and in her old fashion way of doctoring and using Red Clover, I am to day a well and hearty man. Since your extract of Red Clover came on the market, I have used it with good results. My wife is now using it for dropsy and genera debility and it is doing her more good than anything she has yet found. I think that for a Tonic and Blood Medicine there is nothing so good as your Extract of Red Clover. You are free to use this as I do not hesitate to recomend it to any who are afflicted.

Yours truly, A. L. JOHNSON,

Catarrh

Is a constitutional and not a local disease, and therefore it cannot be cured by local applications. It requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, working through the blood, eradicates the impurity which causes and promotes the disease, and effects a permanent cure. Thousands of people testify to the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for catarrh when other preparations had failed. Hood's Sarsaparilla also builds up the whole system, and makes you feel renewed in health and strength.

"I used Hood's Sarsaparilla for catarrh and received great relief and benefit from it. The catarrh was very disagreeable, especially in the winter, causing constant discharge from my nose, ringing noises in my ears, and pain in the back of my head. The effect to clear my head in the morning by hawking and spitting was painful. Hood's Sarsaparilla gave me relief immediately, while in time I was entirely cured. I think Hood's Sarsaparilla is worth its weight in gold." MRS. G. B. GRAY, 1029 Eighth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

WILHELM'S IMPROVED CREAMERY CAN.

Unequalled for private Dairies of from one cow to full size Creamery. $5.00 will buy FOUR 3-GAL. CANS making a capacity of 12 gallons of milk, and will PRODUCE ALL THE CREAM FROM 4 TO 8 HOURS, in a vat, tub, or any receptacle the farmer may choose, holding water from 10 to 14 inches in depth, and at a temperature from 40 to 60 degrees cold. IT MAKES A PERFECT CREAM and combines the advantage of deep setting, rapid cooling, protecting the milk from all impurities of the atmosphere which so quickly taints cream. Also preventing souring by thunder storms, from flies, insects, dust, and all bad odors, thus preserving both cream and milk, clean and sweet. Over 200,000 in actual use in the U. S. One setting of milk is all that is needed to prove the merit of the can. Usual size of can, 3-gal., price $1.25. A liberal discount on orders of one dozen Cans and upwards. Write for descriptive circular and testimonials. I also make a specialty of building Creameries and furnishing all the best improved machinery and apparatus. JOHN WILHELM, Wooster, Wayne Co. O.

C. L. Osgood, Samaria, Mich. says—The Milk Cans I bought of you give perfect satisfaction. I hurled his legs forward over his head with such force that when they struck the ground his body rose and he described a convulsive somersault. I carried him two lengths ahead of me into the very jaws of the lion, if the latter had stayed"—

LAST WORDS OF DAVID.

LESSON VII, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 17.

Text of the Lesson, II Sam. xxiii, 1-7. Commit Verses 3, 4—Golden Text, II Sam. xxiii, 5—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

Our last lesson left David an exile on the east of Jordan because of the rebellion of his own son Absalom, and yet mourning deeply for that son who had just been slain in battle. David was soon restored to his throne and the rest of his reign was comparatively peaceful and victorious over all enemies. His last days were devoted to gathering materials for, and instructing Solomon concerning, the great temple to be built for the Lord at Jerusalem, the plans for which David received from the Lord Himself, even as Moses received instruction concerning the tabernacle.

1. "Now these be the last words of David." Things are apt to look very different when one comes to the last hours of life in the mortal body; earthly things fade, their importance vanishes, trials seem no longer great, and eternal things become intensely real; there is nothing worth considering but the King of Righteousness and His righteous kingdom.

"David, the son of Jesse." At least ten times is he thus described in I Sam., and ten times more in the rest of Scripture.

"The man who was raised up on high." Hannah sang, "He raiseth up the poor out of the dust * * * to make them inherit the throne of glory." (I Sam. ii, 28.) David, realizing something of his nothingness, said: "Who am I, O Lord God? and what is my house, that thou hast brought me hitherto?" (Chap. vii, 18.)

"The anointed of the God of Jacob." The same God who chose Jacob instead of Esau, and called his name Israel, making of him a great nation, and doing for them great and terrible things in the eyes of all nations, had chosen and anointed David to be king of Israel; and notwithstanding the sins of David, had graciously done great things for him.

"The sweet psalmist of Israel." He is not here praising his own singing or composition; but as the previous phrases describe the rock whence he was hewn, and the hole of the pit whence he was digged (Isa. li, 1) and the high place to which he was exalted, so this indicates his gratitude to God which found expression in song; and surely our singing would be much sweeter in God's ears if it always came from greatful hearts, because of His unmerited love.

2. "The Spirit of the Lord spake by me, and His word was in my tongue." Here is a definition of inspiration. The Spirit speaks, the words are His, but He uses David's tongue; so Jesus testified that David himself said by the Holy Ghost (Mark xii, 36), and Peter testified that the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake.

3. "The God of Israel said, the Rock of Israel spake to me." In the first verse it was the God of Jacob, perhaps with the thought of the Great Creator and Restorer (Elohim), who could make something out of and use for His glory such crooked ones as Jacob and David and all of us are by nature; here it is the God and Rock of Israel, the same creating and restoring and covenant keeping Elohim, but now in reference to the broken, helpless, clinging, earnestly seeking one, who had power with God and man, and received the new name of Israel (Gen. xxxii, 26-28). Both Moses and David loved to speak of God as their Rock (Deut. xxxii, 4, 15, 18, 31; Ps. xviii, 2, 31, 46, etc.), but it is from the margin of Isa. xxvi, 4, that we get the title "Rock of Ages."

4. "And He shall be as the light of the morning when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds." One of His last names in Scripture is in Rev. xxii, 16, "The root and the offspring of David, the bright and morning star;" and in Mal. iv, 2, "The sun of righteousness." The time of His appearing in glory to build up Zion (Ps. cii, 16) is preeminently called "the morning," as in Ps. xlvi, 5 (margin), where the whole subject is the safety of Israel when He judges the nations and makes wars to cease, and where it is written "God shall help her when the morning appareth," or (R. V.) "at the dawn of the morning," and again in Ps. xlix, 14, "The upright shall have dominion over them in the morning." The condition of His enemies at that time is also described in Isa. viii, 20, R. V., by the words, "Surely there is no morning for them."

5. "He hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure." This is our golden text, and it is in some respects the center of the lesson, for it brings before us God and His faithful covenant and assurance of complete fulfillment, inasmuch as there can be no failure on His part. The two "althoughs" which begin and end this verse point to possible failure on the part of David and his house, for man is only and always when left to himself a failure; but the terms of the covenant indicated that while iniquity might have to be chastened David's house and kingdom should be established forever (chap. vii, 12-16); so that it might truly be called "an everlasting covenant, ordered (or furnished) in all things and sure;" or, as it is in Isa. lv, 3-5, "The sure mercies of David," pointing to the time when other nations shall run to Israel because of their glorious king.

With such a kingdom before him, and, like Abraham, believing what God has promised, he is also able to perform. David is able to say: "This is all my salvation and all my desire." If we have the same spirit we shall say: "I know that in me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing" (Rom. vii, 18), but I am in Christ Jesus, my Rock and my Salvation, and though health, friends, riches, plans of mine, earthly expectations, all may fail, I know that He who is my life ever liveth, and whatever may be the present outcome "when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall we also appear with Him in Glory" (Col. iii, 4); and this, His Glory, is all my desire.

6, 7. "But the sons of Belial (R. V. the ungodly) shall be all of them as thorns thrust away; * * * * they shall be utterly burned with fire." Thorns and thistles are the manifest evidence that the earth is still under the curse of sin (Gen. iii, 18); Jesus uses them as a symbol of the natural, unrenewed heart when he says: "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" (Matt. vii, 16). And the ungodly are thus described in Ezek. ii, 6: "Though briers and thorns be with thee, and thou dost dwell among scorpions, be not afraid of their words." We are all of us such by nature and by practice; sin dwelleth in us, and all have sinned and come short of the glory of God. Those who will not repent, but persist in their ungodliness, have nothing to expect but everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of His power when He shall come to be glorified in His saints (II Thess. i, 9, 10); they will not be drawn by love, therefore they must perish by judgment. The establishing of this kingdom on earth is everywhere in the law, the prophets and the Psalms associated with judgment upon the enemies of God and His people. May we be among the mighty ones of the true David while we wait for the Lord more than they that watch for the morning. (Ps. cxxx, 5, 6.)

Is Consumption Incurable?

Read the following: Mr. C. H. Morris, Newark, Ark, says: "Was down with Abscess of Lungs, and friends and physicians pronounced me an Incurable Consumptive. Began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, am now on my third bottle and able to oversee the work on my farm. It is the finest medicine ever made."

Jesse Middlewart, Decatur, Ohio, says: "Had it not been for Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption I would have died of Lung troubles. Was given up by doctors. Am now in best of health." Try it. Sample, bottles free.

TRAIN-WRECKERS IN MICHIGAN.

Close Call for Passengers on a Grand Rapids and Indiana Train.

BIG RAPIDS, MICH., NOV. 1.—A fiendish attempt was made to wreck a Grand Rapids and Indiana passenger train Thursday night. The train which leaves here at 7 o'clock in the evening, heavily loaded, was ditched at Clark's siding, three miles north of Manton. A guard rail at that obscure point had been pried up and blocked a foot above the track, and the train crashed into it while running at full speed, and every car but the baggage car left the track and plowed for rods through the soft sand. The passengers were badly shaken up and thoroughly frightened, but no one was seriously hurt, although many suffered minor injuries. There is great excitement in the neighborhood, and officers, backed by citizens, are scouring the country for the wretches who did the deed.

CASH FOR A SHATTERED HEART.

A Wealthy Detroiter Settles a Breach of Promise Suit for $5,000.

DETROIT, Nov. 2.—M. M. Fisher is one of the wealthiest men in Detroit and one of the most eccentric. He is worth several million dollars. Less than a year ago he was divorced from one woman who refused to live with him because of his "nearness" in money matters, and three months later he married a handsome young school teacher. Immediately following this latest marriage Miss Nellie Goodwell, belonging to an excellent family, began suit against him, demanding $25,000 for breach of promise. The defendant pooh-hoohed the matter, and declared he would fight the case until his dying day. He evidently changed his mind, for yesterday he paid Miss Goodwell $5,000 cash, cleared up all the costs, settled with her lawyers, and took a quit claim.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this receipt in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. Noyes, 149 Powers block, Rochester, N. Y.

CAN THEY BE THE BENDERS?

Two Women Believed To Be the Old Woman and Kate.

NILES, Mich., Oct. 31.—Mrs. Monro and her daughter, Mrs. Davis, believed to be the famous Mrs. Bender and her daughter, Kate Bender, who were implicated in the terrible series of murders in LaBette county, Kansas, years ago, started west yesterday in charge of Deputy Sheriff L. F. Dick. The particular charge laid at their door is the assassination of Col. York in 1873.

Bennett Was Not To Be Found.

MARQUETTE, Mich., Nov. 1.—James Bennett, who was arrested on complaint of the American Express company, last September, for a shortage of $200 in his accounts as agent of the company at Hill Creek, has disappeared. Bennett claimed he had been robbed of the money, and told such a plausible tale that the company released him on the condition that he make the loss good. He borrowed from friends until he had raised more than the deficiency, and when the express company sent its agent to Hill Creek this week to get the money Bennett could not be found. It has just been discovered that he gambled with the money of the company and decamped with what was loaned him by friends.

Outlaw Holzhay's Trial Begun.

BESSEMER, Mich., Oct. 31.—The trial of Reimund Holzhay, the outlaw highwayman who murdered Banker Fleischbein at Gogebic lake on Aug. 26, was begun yesterday morning. Henry J. Gerpheide, of Chicago, Holzhay's lawyer, asked for and obtained an adjournment for the day in order to produce important affidavits. The defense will try to prove that Fleischbein was killed by a shot from the revolver of Donald McKercher, of Minneapolis, Fleischbein's companion, who opened fire on Holzhay, when the latter demanded the cash of the party. The trial promises to prove sensational.

KING OF THE BLOOD

The Most Thorough Purifier of the Blood Yet Discovered.

Cures all Humors, from a common tion to the worst Scrofula.

It purifies the Blood.
It invigorates the Liver.
It regulates the Bowels.
It strengthens the stomach.
It gives vivacity in place of lassitude; cheerfulness in place of gloom, and robust vigor in place of debility.

Dyspepsia, Billiousness, Disordered Liver, Constipation, Nervous Affections, General Debility, in short all the numerous diseases and discomforts caused by impure blood are speedily conquered by this powerful corrector, the chief and sovereign of all ancient or modern medical discoveries—KING OF THE BLOOD.

Its name is its best description as it is a royal dispenser of the blessings of health and vanquishes the foes that lurk in the blood.

It banishes PIMPLES, SALT RHEUM, SCALY ERUPTIONS, ULCERS, SCALD HEAD, FEVER SORES, and all SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

It checks CONSUMPTION in its early stages. It has frequently cured it when advanced.

It disperses TUMORS and CANCERS without the Surgeon's knife.

It cures DROPSY, general or partial.

It cures FEMALE WEAKNESS and DISEASE.

It reduces in a safe and effectual manner all swellings, external or internal.

It eradicates the effects of Venerial Disease and Mineral Poisons and establishes a sound constitution.

Many certificates, much further information and full directions for using, will be found in the pamphlet, "Treatise on Diseases of the Blood," in which each bottle is inclosed.

Price $1 per bottle containing 12 ounces, or 50 doses. Sold by druggists or sent by mail on receipt of price.

If your druggist does not happen to have it on hand, request him to order a supply of it for you and it will be cheaper than for you to order direct from us, and less trouble.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railroad has over 3000 miles of road, magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnepeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Cassleton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China, Japan, and the journey to the Pacific Coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a lifetime once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it cures readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years,

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates it cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Prices 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

FINANCIAL OUTLOOK FOR THE FARMER.

Paper Read by B. F. DePuy at the Meeting of the Farmers' Union, Held Nov. 8th. '89.

The financial outlook for the farming community at the present time is anything but promising. Seldom if ever has agriculture, notwithstanding good crops, been in a more depressed condition than now. The soil of our western prairies is as fertile as ever. The great corn area of the Mississippi valley, the wheat lands of Michigan, the orchards of the fruit belt, the cotton fields of the sunny South, never yielded more abundantly than to-day. Seed time and harvest come and go the same as they did a quarter of a century ago. The sun shines and the rain descends upon the just and upon the unjust the same as of yore. Crops are bountiful and harvests are abundant, and yet the farmers are not prosperous. For the past twenty years the prices of farming lands and products have been steadily declining, and in many sections of the east farms cannot be sold to-day for more than one-half what they would bring twenty years ago. At the same time eastern capitalists are plastering the farms of the west with mortgages, which aggregate hundreds of millions of dollars in every western state. The value of all property, and especially of real estate, depends upon the yearly net income which that property will yield. In our new western states, it is true, booms spring up and flourish like a mushroom in the dog days, for a few months; but the values thus created are fictitious and speculative, and do not disprove the general rule which I have stated. This rule applies not only to agricultural lands, but also to village and city property, and to railroad, mining and other business stocks. The annual dividend which a piece of property can produce, or rather does produce, is the measure of value which determines the price of that property in the open market. A railroad stock that pays eight per cent, dividend, is worth double the stock that pays only four per cent. A village house and lot, whatever its original cost may have been, is worth to sell, more or less, according to the yearly rental which can be obtained therefor.

In like manner the value of a farm depends in large measure upon the dividend which that farm is capable of producing, when properly managed. Of course it frequently happens that a farmer who has been prosperous and accumulated a surplus in bank, will spend his earnings for fine buildings for his own pleasure and comfort, regardless of whether such an investment will yield any income whatever, but in these days there are few farmers who are so embarrassed with a big bank account, as to be at a loss how to spend their surplus lucre. A large majority of farmers to-day right here in Michigan—and Michigan is a favored state agriculturally—are compelled to deny themselves many comforts, and exercise the utmost prudence and economy to make both ends meet. If they have a large family to support and a home to pay for, it requires years of sacrifice and toil to accumulate a few thousand dollars. I think this assertion is strictly true, that of the farmers of Lenawee county, who have made any money during the past ten years, at least one half of them owe their accumulations to inherited property, to good luck in some line of trade, to the rise in value of a land purchase in some western state, to a big special crop which turned out well, or to some other outside venture, and not to legitimate farming. I venture to say that the incomes drawn from the farms of this county, in legitimate farming alone, during the past ten years, have not exceeded three per cent on the capital invested. I have no statistics at hand on this point, but I do not believe there is a farmer in this audience who will question the accuracy of this statement. Not to mention those sections of country which are more remote from the eastern markets and where prices are still lower here, in Lenawee county wheat is selling for 60 to 75 cents, corn for 14 to 20 cents, oats for about 18 cents, good beef cattle for 2½ to 3 dollars per 100 pounds, with prices still tending downward. The census reports show that prior to 1850 the increase of agricultural wealth kept nearly an even pace with the increase of other property; since then it has greatly declined. In 1850 69 and 61-100 per cent of the aggregate wealth of the country was in agricultural property. In 1880 it was only 27 and 74-100 per cent. While all forms of wealth increased from 1850 to 1880 in the sum of 27 billions, the share to the credit of agriculture was less than five billions.

This is the situation to-day. Have I overdrawn the picture? Have I exaggerated it in a single particular? I think not.

What is the cause of this state of affairs? Why is the great agricultural class, which constitutes the backbone of the nation, growing poorer every day? The answer can be given in these two words, "class legislation."

We are confronted by the fact that our aggregate agricultural products are in excess of the wants of our home markets. After the home market is fully supplied, we still have a vast surplus on hand, which must seek an outlet in foreign lands. But the price of these products in other countries regulates the price at home. The price of a bushel of wheat in Liverpool fixes the price of a bushel of wheat in Tecumseh. The buyer, who buys fifty bushels of corn for home consumption, pays no more than his neighbor, who buys fifty bushels to transport to foreign markets. In marketing our export crops we not only compete with the pauper labor of Europe, but with the pauper labor of India. And so long as we have a surplus of crops, which must be sold abroad or rot in our graneries, just so long will the cheap markets of foreign lands fix the selling price of our crops at home. I am not one of those who think the farming class better than any other class, or that we should have special privileges not accorded to others, but I do believe in fair play and equal rights for all classes. I would not complain of this rule of trade, if the same rule could be applied to what we buy, that is, if we could buy as well as sell in the cheap markets of the world. But right here "class legislation" steps in and erects a Chinese wall, which has been politely termed a "protective tariff."

While the law of sapply and demand the world over, fixes the price of what we sell, our extortionate tariff—which was enacted in war times, to tide the nation over a great crisis—fixes the price of what we buy. Not only that, but if perchance the tariff shall fail to squeeze all the juice out of the agricultural lemon, trusts and combines are formed to levy additional tribute. Thus the farmers are plundered in both directions. We can fix the price neither of what we sell nor of what we buy. We are plundered in the cheap foreign market on what we sell, and we are robbed in the dear home market on what we buy. The tariff shuts out competition from abroad, which would enable us to buy cheaper, and the trusts compel us to pay two prices in the home market. And so long as this iniquitous war tariff shall remain on the statute book the condition of the farming classes will go from bad to worse. I do not believe the country can be enriched by robbing farmer "Peter" to pay monopolist "Paul." I am not a believer in that system of political economy that teaches, that if you rob A. B. C. and D. of 47 per cent. of their earnings and pay the plunder over to E. it will make all five men richer than they were before.

Some may claim that I am intruding a political speech upon you, but I do not regard this as a political question at all. When life long Republicans like President Eliot, of Harvard University, array themselves on the side of tariff reform, and Democrats like Sam Randall are found fighting for the Pennsylvania monopolists, one can scarcely call the tariff a party question. But it is most emphatically a business question, and it is a question involving the prosperity or bankruptcy of the agricultural classes. The farmers of America will never again witness the prosperous times that existed before the war, until our present war tariff shall be wiped from the statute book.

WILL D. ROBBINS.

A Brief Sketch of His Life.

"We understand death for the first time when he lays his hand upon one we love."

The cold metallic tones of the unfeeling telegraph instrument, whose monotonous clicking has so often brought words of hope and joy, of despair and death, has brought us the sad news that Will D. Robbins is no more; that another bright life is closed; another of the 'old boys' gone, a sister's pride, a fond mother's joy and blessing, the stay of a father's declining years.

As far as the world at large is concerned Will's history is soon told. Born Jan 20th, 1860, in Tecumseh, the old town we all love so well, there his childhood days were spent when heroes of our country were being made. In school he won distinction by his honest ambition, industry and fidelity to each day's duties. Graduating from the High School with honer to his class and his instructors in 1877, Will first took up the work of life in the Herald Office, where he remained for a year. The next two years he spent in further study at the University of Michigan where his ability and popular qualities early attracted attention, winning for him the class presidency in his freshman year. The sterner realities of life making stronger demands upon him he abandoned (as he then thought only temporarily) his ambition to enter the bar and in 1881 accepted a situation with Sigler Bros., wholesale jewelers at Cleveland, O. After serving this firm in various positions of trust and responsibility he went to St. Paul, Minn., for nearly a year, engaging in real estate. In 1886 he accepted a position of responsibility as traveling salesman for J. T. Scott & Co., wholesale jewelers in New York City, with whom he remained until his untimely death.

The prominent features of his character were strong to the end. Self reliant, industrious, persevering and affectionate, he had fought a severe cold for some weeks, without complaint and without respite from business, until at Peoria, Ill., he was stricken with that dread terror of our northern climate, pneumonia. Determined to conquer, he refused to believe that death was near, thoughtful of his family, to spare their anxiety, he forbade notice to them of his condition. Delirium followed and in less than one week his page in time's great record had been finished and turned. Through it all his thoughts were of his interrupted business and his anxiety was for the property of his employers in his charge, and for the dear ones at home. As soon as his case became desperate, his mother was summoned without his knowledge, and, though she responded with all the jealousy of a mother's love, death came first.

Will's was one of those natures, full of sunshine, that finds friends everywhere, and, though a stranger and far from home, they were not wanting in his last sickness. Members of The Traveling Men's Association and Fey Bros. his customers at Peoria, were constant in their attention, nor was he forgotten by his employers. All that medical skill and tender nursing could do was done, but the sands in Will's hour glass had run out.

Late Sunday night, Oct. 27th, a few saddened friends met the stricken parents and poor Will at Adrian, and Tuesday Oct. 20th, they and his broken sister and brother-in-law, (Mr. and Mrs J. E. Newburn) laid him in the place where his story began. The funeral services were held at O. B. Dewolf's residence.

Young, vigorous, of great ability, the sunlight of a bright future has darkened and gone.

But with us who knew Will and loved him, his history will never be finished. In the future, with those of us who remain, memory will be busy in the hours when the twilight deepens and the firelight flickers on the hearth, and in the pictures she paints for us will be Will as in his childhood and in his vigorous young manhood, and his deeds of thoughtful kindness and love. And so we will go on living over again with him the happy days that are gone, until some hand writes that our life is done, like a leaf that is withered and gone.

"Only a little sunshine,
Only a little cold,
Only a little time to wait,
And then our story's told."

That Little Tickling.

In your throat, which makes you cough once in a while and keeps you constantly clearing your throat, arises from catarrh and as catarrh is a constitutional disease the ordinary cough medicine all fail to hit the pot. What you need is a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla. Many people who have taken this medicine for scrofula, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, and other troubles, have been surprised that it should cure this troublesome cough. But to know the actual cause of the cough is to solve the mystery. Many cases of consumption can be traced back to the neglect of some such slight affection as this. Consumption can be controlled in its early stages, and the effect of Hood's Sarsaparilla in purifying the blood, building up the general health, and expelling the scrofulous taint which is the cause of catarrh and consumption, has restored to perfect health many persons on whom this dreaded disease seemed to have a firm hold.

Dumplings with Royal Baking Powder

No dessert is more delicious, wholesome and appetizing than a well-made dumpling, filled with the fruit of the season. By the use of the Royal Baking Powder the crust is always rendered light, flaky, tender and digestible. Dumplings made with it, baked or boiled, will be dainty and wholesome, and may be eaten steaming hot with perfect impunity.

RECEIPT.—One quart of flour; thoroughly mix with it three teaspoons of Royal Baking Powder and a small teaspoon of salt; rub in a piece of butter or lard the size of an egg, and then add one large potato, grated in the flour; after the butter is well mixed, stir in milk and knead to the consistency of soft biscuit dough; break off pieces of dough large enough to close over four quarters of an apple (or other fruit as desired) without rolling, and lay in an earthen dish (or steamer) and steam until the fruit is tender. Bake if preferred.

In all receipts calling for cream of tartar and soda, substitute Royal Baking Powder. Less trouble, never fails, makes more appetizing and wholesome food and is more economical. Royal Baking Powder is specially made for use in the preparation of the finest and most delicate cookery.

PRINTERS' INK

A JOURNAL FOR ADVERTISERS.

PRINTERS' INK is just what it purports to be, "a journal for advertisers." It is issued on the first and fifteenth days of each month, and is the representative journal—the trade journal, so to speak—of American advertisers. It tells the intending and inexperienced advertiser in plain, comprehensive articles how, when, and where to advertise; how to write an advertisement; how to display one; what newspapers or other media to use; how much to expend—in fact, discourses on every point that admits of profitable discussion. If you advertise at all, PRINTERS' INK can help you. Perhaps you expend but Ten Dollars a year in advertising; if so, PRINTERS' INK may show you how to obtain double the service you are now getting for one-half the money. A year's subscription costs but One Dollar; a sample copy costs but Five Cents. Advertising is an art practised by many but understood by few. The conductors of PRINTERS' INK understand it thoroughly. Surely their advice, based on an experience of more than twenty-five years, will help you. Address:—

We publish in this issue by request, a paper read by Frank DePuy at the last meeting of the Farmer's Union.

The National Silver convention will meet in St. Louis, Nov 26. The prospects for a large and notable gathering are very encouraging.

We are under obligations to Senator Thos. W. Palmer for a copy of the memorial addresses on the life and character of Thomas A. Hendricks. Thanks.

The Christian conference held at Britton last week was largely attended. The business sessions turned out successfully, and the religious services were deeply interesting.

Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Chapman started yesterday for Grand Rapids, where they will make their home with their son, Silas. May happiness attend them is the wish of their old Tecumseh friends.

Joe Sage, of Macon, is praying for cold weather—that is if he prays at all—for he is selling weather strips this fall. What Joe does'nt know about a weather strip is not worth knowing.

The entertainment given at Tipton, Friday and Saturday evenings of last week was a decidedly good one. A temperance drama, 'The Social Glass,' was presented, and the different parts all sustained by home talent were very well rendered. Owing to the rain the attendance was somewhat limited at the first performance, but Saturday night brought a crowd that filled the hall. That they were well paid for coming was the general verdict.

THE RAYMOND-NYLAND WEDDING.

The commodious residence of Mr. Henry Nyland, on West Chicago St., was the scene of a happy gathering, Thursday evening last, on which occasion Mr. Will F. Raymond, of Raisin, led to the marriage altar Mr. Nyland's eldest daughter, Nellie. As the circle of family friends was quite extended, the invitations were confined to the relatives and a very few intimate associates of the bride and groom. The nuptial ceremony was performed by Rev. W. H. Babbitt in his usual felicitous manner, after which the company partook of a bountiful repast, and the remainder of the evening was spent in social enjoyment. Many testimonials of esteem were presented to the bride, which manifested the strong friendships she has made. Her whole life has been passed in Tecumseh. She graduated from our high school with the class of '79, the class consisting of seven young ladies. The groom is one of the best farmers of Raisin, a township noted for its good farmers.

The entire party was one of those cozy, home like weddings, in which happiness rather than display, is the principal feature. The wedding trip consisted of an evening drive from Mr. Nyland's home to the groom's farm in Raisin where the happy pair began at once the duties and realities of housekeeping. The HERALD cordially adds its good wishes and congratulations to those of their numerous friends.

The following guests were present from abroad: Mrs. Frank Bell of Clayton; Mr. F. Wood of Devils Lake; Mrs. Jno. Trann of Ithaca; Frank Hall of Lansing; Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Raymond of Leslie; Mr. and Mrs. Chris Nyland and Miss Anna Nyland of Cleveland, Ohio.

"For I am declined into the vale of years," she said a little sadly, but indeed I don't much mind it since I can get Salvation Oil for 25 cents.

We acknowledge the receipt of an invitation to attend the 6th annual commencement of the Cleary Business college of Ypsilanti, which occurred yesterday. An elaborate program was prepared which was substantially carried out, notwithstanding the weather.

The bonus for the Lee Table factory is booming right along. Over half the sum required has been raised, and the committee have not yet completed their canvas. Keep the ball rolling, gentlemen. Every man can give something and must give something. This new enterprise must be a fixed fact before the advent of 1890.

The effort by Wm. T. Thorp to take his own life last week was a very unfortunate affair, and some people have attempted to throw the responsibility upon Chas. Beneway. Mr. Beneway has no desire to oppress or persecute anyone. He began his suit against Mr. Thorp to secure his legal rights and the courts have decided in his favor. All he asks is what legally belongs to him.

On Tuesday last the new flag was unfurled at the central school building. The flag staff is 46 feet long, and surmounted with an elegant 8 inch gilded ball. Theo. P. Wood did the job, assisted by several of the boys. As soon as all was in readiness, Theo. attached the flag to the halyards and as he hauled it to the top of the staff, the scholars rent the air with cheers, Prof. Wilson, the flag, and Theo. Wood all getting their share.

Van Antwerp is taking his revenge for the way elections went last week by re-papering and painting the interior of his restaurant. The dining room has been enlarged, a new plate glass front put in, and the entire establishment fitted up in apple pie order. It does not make Van proud a particle, yet he intends to serve his customers a little better than ever, after all.

We offer no apology for publishing this week, the sketch of the life of Will D. Robbins, which appears elsewhere. The notice we gave two weeks ago was hurriedly prepared from the best information obtainable at that time, and we are glad to be able to supplement our own imperfect notice with the noble tribute which appears this week. It is from the pen of Capt. Fred. B. Wood, who was a warm personal friend and class-mate of the deceased, and thus peculiarly fitted to perform this sad duty.

The best yet.—We have been readers of "Peterson" for a long while—but, excellent as we always found it, we consider this year the best yet. The December number cannot be surpassed in the beauty of its engraving and the interest of its contents. Next year it will be better worth having than ever, with its new cover and type and various other improvements. A subscription for 1889 would make a valuable and useful holiday present. $2 a year, with reduced club rates. Address Peterson's Magazine, 306 Chestnut st., Philadelphia.

We had never fully comprehended what was meant by a "family" magazine, until we had given the fine Christmas number of Demorest's Family Magazine a thorough examination. Of all others this magazine is best entitled to use the word 'Family' in its title—for every number is considered in its make-up. Its beautifully illustrated articles are equal to any in the high-class literary magazines. We would advise everybody to at least see this Family Magazine before making their choice for next year. They claim a dozen magazines combined in one, for only $2 per year, and certainly the claim is a just one. Published by W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th st., New York.

The first dance of the series, last evening, was attended by thirty-one couple, and a very enjoyable time was had by those present. Considering the unpleasant weather, the first party of the season can be set down as a decided success.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE for November contains a third African article—a valuable addition to the notable papers of Professor Henry Drummond and Joseph Thomson; a discussion of some startling problems in International Law affecting the United States in the event of another European war; the discription of an old Spanish university by a well-known novelist; an explanation of the relation of electricity to health by a high medical authority; an army surgeon's account of the modern Sanitary Corps which relieves the sick and wounded, and interesting essays, fiction and poems. Most of the articles are richly illustrated.

A CORRECTION.

The HERALD, week before last, noted that G. W. Mead was going to canvas in Hillsdale Co. for the firm of L. L. May & Co., of St. Paul, Minn. Owing to a little misunderstanding, his territory will be in Lenawee Co. One of the rules of this paper is to refrain from "puffing," and gratuitously advertising any business, but a paper would be remiss in its duty should it neglect to give prominent notice to the growth of Southern Michigan as a fruit growing locality, both for the home and foreign markets. Notwithstanding our produce dealers this year have bought and shipped thousands of barrels of apples, what pays better than a few acres of fruit?

Owing to the healthy climate and bracing atmosphere, without a doubt nursery stock raised in the west is hardier, thriftier, and better adapted to our winters, and will bring quicker results than any other stock. Such stock as furnished by L. L. May & Co. of St. Paul, is unsurpassed by any in the world. We can vouch for their square dealing, and just as represented by the agents, as we have had some dealing with them. We can heartily recommend them to our farming public and villagers that take pride in ornamenting their yard.

—Shrewd business men want the most they can get for their money. If they are old in experience they know what money is worth, and so they want most things at cost. Last week we mentioned some of the prominent business men of Michigan who had got life insurance at cost, of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life association, of New York, which is represented here by Millard P. Brown. These men saved their estates large amounts on their policies which ranged from $2,000 to $20,000, and by getting their life insurance at cost, were enabled to save each year fully one-half what the same policy would cost by the old system. This annual saving deposited in the local banks would grow to a handsome amount and give business men the best control of their own capital.

THE CRONIN TRIAL.

Things Look Bad for the Alleged Murderers.

SENSATIONAL TESTIMONY GIVEN.

The State Doing Its Best to Fasten the Crime of Assassinating Dr. Cronin Upon the Five Men Under Arrest—Iceman O'Sullivan, Coughlin and Kunze in a Tight Place—Trial Proceedings.

CHICAGO, Nov. 5.—The testimony in the Cronin case Saturday was a continuation of the identification Friday of the suspect Bourk. He was again positively identified by young Mr. Carlson and the express driver, Martenson, and winced when the latter declared he was the man who was wanted. Yesterday Edward Spellman, of Peoria, district officer of the Clan-na-Gael, testified to the correspondence between himself and Beggs. The letters were produced. Those from Beggs asked Spellman to take some measures to stop the fight against the "triangle" waged by Cronin and others. He said that many of the brothers did not believe the charges against the executive, and it was only keeping open a fight that injured the order for these charges to be reiterated. Spellman answered that he could do nothing unless charges were preferred. Later, he said, Beggs told him that the trouble had been "amicably settled." The state's attorney tried to get him to admit that Beggs said "attended to," but he insisted that the former words were used.

A Slip of the Tongue.

The next branch of inquiry led in the direction of Coughlin. The state's attorney asked Spellman if he had not sworn before the grand jury that during a conversation he had at Peoria with Coughlin (when the latter was there long before the murder with Kunze) the detective had said that Cronin ought to be killed. Witness said he had not. He had sworn that Coughlin applied a vigorous epithet to Cronin. He went on to say that as soon as he was out of the jury room he felt that he had done Coughlin an injustice, and on reaching home he asked friends who had heard the conversation if Coughlin had said those words. They assured him that he had not. He then took pains to inform the state's attorney that he had been mistaken and would not testify that way at the trial.

O'Sullivan—The Midnight Ride.

Mrs. Farrar swore that O'Sullivan said to her a few days after the murder was found out that it was said that Cronin was a British spy, and if so, he ought to have been killed.

Lake View police officers swore to seeing a wagon with three men and a big trunk drive north on the night of the murder from the direction of the Carlson cottage, and return south in just about the time it would take to make the ghastly trip that was made.

LINKS IN THE CHAIN.

Significant Fact Regarding the Iceman's Cards—The Trunk Key.

CHICAGO, Nov. 7.—At the resumption of work in the Cronin murder trial yesterday R. T. Stanton, proprietor of the Lake View Record, swore that he printed Iceman O'Sullivan's business cards. The first lot with an ice wagon printed in red on the face was delivered on May 2. It was one of this lot of cards that the decoy gave Dr. Cronin.

Capt. Villiers, of the Lake View police, swore that when found, the famous trunk contained some wet and bloody cotton batting, some liquid and some congealed blood and a lock of hair. He was not allowed to say whether or not Dr. Cronin's barber said the hair was Dr. Cronin's. The captain identified the trunk.

The Boy Who Identified Kunze.

William L. James, a 16-year-old boy, swore that he saw the defendant Kunze sitting at a window in the room on Clark street to which "Simonds" had the furniture bought from Revell's first taken—before it was changed to the cottage. He was positive in his identification, pointing Kunze out among the defendants without hesitation. He was at the time in his father's office, opposite "Simond's" room, and overlooking the same.

Capt. Wing, of the Lake View police, testified that the key of the trunk had some yellow paint on one end similar to that with which the Carlson cottage floor had been painted after the murder.

Coughlin at the Cottage.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—The most important evidence given in the Cronin case yesterday was that of William Mertes, a milkman. He swore that he was passing the Carlson cottage at about 8:30 p. m. the day of the murder when he saw a buggy drive up with two men in it. One of them got out and went into the cottage; the other drove the buggy rapidly away. He declared that Dan Coughlin was the man he saw go into the cottage, and Kunze the man who drove the buggy off. On returning past the cottage some time later he heard the sound of nailing in the cottage.

Coroner Hertz, Capt. Schaack, Chief of Police Hubbard and others testified in further identification of the trunk and key. Schaack also swore that Coughlin, a few days before the murder, asked him through a telephone about Kunze.

THE DOCTOR'S CLOTHING FOUND.

A Sewer-Cleaning Party Discovers His Apparel and Instruments.

CHICAGO, Nov. 9.—The sensation of yesterday was the discovery of the long-lost clothing and surgical instruments belonging to Dr. Cronin. These were found yesterday afternoon in a catch-basin at the corner of Evanston avenue and Fifty-ninth street, Lake View, by a party of sewer-cleaners. Every article of apparel worn by the doctor had been cut off his body with a knife or pair of scissors and all of them were bloodstained. They were covered with filth from the sewer, but the bloodstains were very plain. Two shirts were found, one undoubtedly belonging to one of the murderers who did not care to wear a bloodstained shirt. Mrs. Conklin fully identified the clothes and instruments. The doctor's watch and purse were missing.

More Evidence Against Coughlin.

The witness of importance in the Cronin case yesterday was William Nieman, a saloon-keeper at the corner of Roscoe street and Lincoln avenue. He said that O'Sullivan, accompanied by Kunze and Coughlin, was in his saloon at 10:30 o'clock on the night of May 4. He fixed the date positively by the circumstance of it being the day after his obtaining his license and the first day of O'Sullivan delivering ice to him. When asked to pick out the two men, the witness said that, while he wouldn't swear that Coughlin and Kunze were the ones, on account of never having seen them before that night, yet his opinion was that they were. About O'Sullivan, however, he had not the slightest doubt. The other testimony was not of particular importance.

UNDER THE MICROSCOPE.

The Blood in the Cronin Trunk Declared Human Blood—Meetings of Irishmen.

CHICAGO, Nov. 11.—The testimony in the Cronin case Saturday was not sensational, the most important probably being that of the expert physicians as to the character of the blood found on the cottage floor and in the trunk. A teaspoonful of liquid blood was found in the latter and Professor Haines and Dr. W. T. Belfield, both of this city and both microscopists of many years experience, swore that it was human blood. The defense tried to weaken their evidence by showing that the blood of puppies of a certain age is identical with that of human beings, but taken with all the circumstances under which the blood was found the effort did not prove much of a success.

The Doctor's Hair.

A few human hairs were found on a piece of soap in the cottage and these had been also examined. The doctors both held to the view that they were identical with hairs taken from Cronin's head.

Gerhard Wardel said he saw two men, one about 5 feet 11 inches high and the other about 5 feet 8 inches go into the Carlson cottage the night of the murder, about 10:30. Another witness passed the cottage about 7 a. m. May 5 and saw drops of blood on the sidewalk in front of the cottage and remarked at the time that somebody's nose had been bleeding. Other witnesses testified to seeing Coughlin and Kunze together as though they were friends.

The State Nearly Through.

The prosecution announced just after adjournment that all the state's evidence would be in probably by Wednesday night.

Meeting of Cronin's Friends.

The friends of Dr. Cronin held a crowded meeting yesterday afternoon to make further arrangements for the Manchester celebration at Battery D, Nov. 23. The principal speaker was Dr. Peter McCahey, of Philadelphia. He made an earnest, ringing speech, in which he praised the loyal Irish-Americans, who were striving to aid in the prosecution of the foul assassins of Dr. Cronin as true supporters of the laws of their adopted country, and loyal sons of Ireland, and evoked a hearty cheer when he referred to the friends of the triangle "as a gang of highbinders."

John Devoy remarked with bitter emphasis that the money stolen from the Irish movement to pay the fiends who killed Cronin was only blood-money filched from the Irish cause.

"A Bloody Traitor to Old Ireland."

The Clan-na-Gael enemies of Dr. Cronin held a meeting at McCoy's hotel yesterday afternoon. The subscription books which had been circulated during the week were turned in, and the sum of $905 handed to the treasurer of the defense fund. An exultant cheer was given as the sum was announced, and a Tipperary Irishman shouted gleefully: "That'll show 'em what we think of the bloody traitor to old Ireland!"

Alexander Sullivan Released.

CHICAGO, Nov. 11.—Saturday Judge Baker released Alexander Sullivan from bail in the Cronin case, the state's attorney giving up the fight on the ground that he was satisfied that it was not law to hold a man over from one grand jury to another.

DOUBLE TRAGEDY IN KENTUCKY.

How Two Prominent Men Settled a Feud of Long Standing.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Nov. 8.—At 2:20 o'clock in the afternoon Col. A. M. Swope was killed by Col. William Cassius Goodloe and the latter was mortally wounded by Swope. The affair occurred in the lobby of the new government building and grew out of the trouble the men had nearly two years ago. The men met as stated and hot words passed between them when Goodloe drew a bowie-knife and cut Swope all to pieces. Swope drew a pistol and shot Goodloe, the ball taking effect in the abdomen.

Both Were Prominent Men.

The doctors think he will die. Both men drew their weapons at the same time. Col. Goodloe is internal revenue collector for this district and was a member of the national Republican committee, that elected Harrison. He belongs to one of the oldest and best families in the state. Col. Swope was one of Kentucky's most prominent Republicans, and was formerly collector of internal revenue for this district.

LATER—Col. Goodloe died Sunday afternoon.

MONTANA'S ELECTION TROUBLE.

Judge DeWolf Makes a Final Decision—A Bitter Fight Ahead.

HELENA, Mont., Nov. 8.—The Silver Bow mandamus case was finished yesterday, Judge DeWolf denying the right of one-half of the majority of the board of canvassers to appeal from the order of the court directing the canvassers to count the vote of the Tunnel precinct. The court issued a mandatory order, and Hall and Irvin counted the vote of the disputed precinct for McHatton (Dem.) This action also covers the legislative contest.

Elements of a Jolly Row.

The contest is now as to the certificates of members of the legislature. After the state canvassers adjourned the secretary of state issued certificates of election to the legislature, including the six Republicans of the Silver Bow delegation. The clerks of the different counties had already issued certificates and the Democrats-elect refused the secretary's certificates.

ANARCHISTS HEARD FROM.

They Issue a Very Gory Circular About the Chicago "Martyrs."

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—The Anarchists of this city are making preparations for a demonstration next Sunday in memory of the "martyrs of the working people murdered at Chicago Nov. 11, 1887." In a circular setting forth the object of the meeting the following language occurs: "What did the workers do to save their counsellors, defenders, their best friends? Nothing; the courage of manhood was needed. A daring deed would have frustrated the November crime; instead the workingmen passed resolutions. How different it might have been had they made a bold front, as the urgency of the situation demanded. We don't mince matters, nor sugar-coat a word that sounds menacing." Telegrams from Baltimore state that the same circular has been issued there.

Mean Outrage at a Horse Show.

CHICAGO, Nov. 9.—A dastardly outrage was committed at the horse show by some miscreants either late Wednesday night or early Thursday morning on C. J. Hamlin's well-known and handsome mare Justina. One of her great points of beauty was a long, flowing tail, which was, as usual, carefully groomed out before she retired. When her groom visited her yesterday morning he found nothing but a little stump, some scoundrel during the night having cut it off short. No clue, but Mr. Hamlin offers $500 to the man who will name the perpetrator.

MORTGAGE SALES.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of a certain mortgage bearing date March 6, A.D., 1881, made by George L. Bidwell and his wife, Frances Bidwell to William J. Cocker and Isabella M. Cocker; Which said mortgage was on the Ninth day of March, A. D., 1881, duly recorded in the office of Register of Deeds for Lenawee County, Michigan, in Liber 100 of mortgages on page 693; And which said mortgage was afterward, to wit, on the 18th day of April, A.D., 1883, duly assigned to Birdsey J. Bidwell, by said William J. Cocker and Isabella M. Cocker, which deed of assignment was on the 29th day of April A.D., 1883, duly recorded in the office of Register of Deeds for Lenawee County aforesaid in Liber 118 of mortgages on page 5.7; by which default the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. And whereas there is at this date claimed to be due and unpaid as principal and interest on the said mortgage the sum of Five Hundred and Ninety-two and 86-100 Dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law or in equity to collect the same. Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale and the statutes of the state of Michigan in such case made and provided, for the purpose of realizing the money now as aforesaid due and owing on said mortgage, together with the interest to accrue thereon and costs and charges of this foreclosure, including an attorney fee of Twenty-five Dollars as provided by law and stipulated for in said mortgage, I shall on the Twenty-seventh day of January, A.D., 1890, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at the east front door of the court house in the city of Adrian, in said Lenawee County, (that being the place where the circuit court for said county is holden) sell at public vendue to the highest bidder all that parcel of land situate in the city of Adrian, in said Lenawee County, Michigan, described as follows, viz.: All the land of the parties of the first part situate on the "Flats," (so called) in said city, bounded on the easterly limit by Winter street, on the south by the northern boundary line of Remington's addition, on the west by College avenue, (or Water street, as is designated on Willitts & Bird's Wall map of 1871) and on the north by the southern boundary line of residence lots, said lots fronting on Church and Winter streets in said city, being in all Three (3) acres of land, more or less; and being same land conveyed in part to said George L. Bidwell by Andrew Clement by deeds recorded book 52 folios 248, 249, and book 52, folios 472, 473, and in part convey to George L. Bidwell by Langford G Berry by deed recorded in book 52, folios 250, 251, and in part by William K. Choate by deed of record in book 53, folios 116, 117; and in part by deed from Nathan Choate, of record in book 53 folios 115, 116. Books refered to being part of Lenawee County records.

CLEOPATRA.

Being an Account of the Fall and Vengeance of Harmachis, the Royal Egyptian,

"Canst thou refuse, O our Hope? Doth not the holy love of country swell within thy heart? Canst thou dash the cup of Freedom from thy lips and bear to drink the bitter draught of slaves? Great is the emprise, and may be it shall fail, and thou with thy life, as we with ours, shalt pay the price of our endeavor. But what of that, Harmachis? Is life, then, so sweet? Are we so softly cushioned on the stony bed of Earth? Is bitterness and sorrow in its sum so small and scant a thing? Do we here breathe so divine an air that we should fear to face the passage of our breath? What have we here but hope and memory? What see we hear but shadows? Shall we then fear to pass pure-handed where fulfillment is and memory is lost in its own source and shadows die in the light which cast them? O, Harmachis, that man alone is truly blest who crowns his life with Death's most splendid wreath. For since to all the Brood of Earth Death hands his poppy flowers, happy indeed is he to whom there is occasion given to weave them in a crown of fame undying. And how can a man more gloriously die than in a great endeavor to strike the gyves from his country's limbs, so that she again may stand in the face of Heaven and raise the shrill shout of freedom, and, clad once more in the panoply of strength, trample under foot the memory of servitude, defying tyrant nations of the earth again to set the seal of their dominion on her brow?

"Khem calls thee, Harmachis. Come, then, come, thou Deliverer; leap like Horus from the firmament, break her fetters, scatter her foes and rule a Pharaoh on Pharaoh's throne—".

"Enough, enough!" I cried, while the long murmur of applause swept about the columns and up the massy walls. "Enough. Is there any need thus to adjure me? Had I a hundred lives, would I not most gladly lay them down for Egypt?"

"Well said! well said!" answered Sepa. "Now go forth with the woman yonder, that she may make clean thy hands before they touch the sacred emblems, and thy brow before it is encircled of the diadem."

And so I went forth with the old wife, Atoua, into a chamber apart. There, muttering prayers, she poured pure water upon my hands into a ewer of gold, and having dipped a fine cloth into the water, therewith wiped my brow.

"O happy Egypt!" she said; "O happy Prince, that art come to rule in Egypt! O royal youth!—too Royal to be a priest—so shall many a fair woman think; but, perchance, for thee they will relax the priestly rule, else how shall the race of Pharaoh be carried on? O happy I, who dandled thee and gave my flesh and blood to save thee! O royal and beautiful Harmachis, born for splendor, happiness and love!"

"Cease, cease," I said, for her talk jarred upon me; "call me not happy till thou knowest my end; and speak not to me of love, for with love comes sorrow, and mine is another and a higher way."

"Ay, ay, so thou sayest—and joy, too, that comes with love! Never talk lightly of love, my King for it brought thee here! La! la! but it is always the way—'The goose on the wing laughs at crocodiles,' so goes their saying down at Alexandria; 'but when the goose is asleep on the water, it is the crocodiles who laugh.' Not but what women are pretty crocodiles. Men worship the crocodiles at Anthribis (Crocodopolis), but they worship women all the world over! La! how my tongue does run on, and thou about to be crowned Pharaoh! Did I not prophecy it to thee? Well, thou art clean. Lord of the Double Crown! Go forth."

And I came forth with the old wife's foolish talk ringing in my ears, though of a truth her folly had ever a grain of wit in it.

As I came, once more the Dignitaries rose and bowed before me. Then my father, without delay, drew near me, and placed within my hands a golden image of the divine Goddess Ma (Truth), and golden images of the arks of the divine God Amen-Ra, of the divine Mout, and the divine Khons, and spake solemnly:

"I CROWN THEE PHARAOH."

"Thou swearest by the living majesty of Ma, by the majesty of Amen-Ra, of Mout, and of Khons?"

"I swear!" I said.

"Thou swearest by the holy land of Khem, by Sihor's flood, by the Temples of the Gods and the eternal Pyramids?"

"I swear!"

"Remembering thy doom if thou shouldst fail therein, thou swearest that thou wilt in all things govern Egypt according to its ancient laws, that thou wilt preserve the worship of its Gods, that thou wilt do equal justice, that thou wilt not oppress, that thou wilt not betray, that thou wilt make no alliance with the Roman or the Greek, that thou wilt cast out the foreign idols, that thou wilt devote thy life to the liberty of the land of Khem?"

"I swear!"

"It is well. Mount, then, thy throne, that in the presence of these thy subjects I may name thee Pharaoh."

I mounted upon the throne, whereof the footstool is a sphinx, and the canopy the overshadowing wings of Ma. Then did Amenemhat once again draw nigh and place upon my brow the Pshent, and on my head the Double Crown, and about my shoulders the Royal Robe, and in my hands the Scepter and the Scourge.

"Royal Harmachis," he cried, "by these outward signs and tokens, I, the High Priest of the temple of Ra-Men-Ma at Abouthis, crown thee Pharaoh of the Upper and Lower Land. Reign and prosper, O Hope of Khem!"

"Reign and prosper, Pharaoh!" echoed the Dignitaries, bowing down before me.

Then, one by one, they swore allegiance, till all had sworn. And having sworn, my father took me by the hand; in solemn procession he led me into each of the seven Sanctuaries that are in this temple of Ra-Men-Ma, and in each I made offerings, swung incense, and officiated as Priest. Clad in the Royal Robes I made offerings in the Shrine of Horus, in the Shrine of Isis, in the Shrine of Osiris, in the Shrine of Amen-Ra, in the Shrine of Horemku, in the Shrine of Ptah, till at length I reached the Shrine of the King's Chamber.

Here they made their offering to me, as the Divine Pharaoh, and left me very weary—but a King.

CHAPTER VIII.

FAREWELL OF AMENEMHAT TO HARMACHIS; COMING OF HARMACHIS TO ALEXANDRIA; EXHORTATION OF SEPA; THE PASSING OF CLEOPATRA ROBED AS ISIS; AND THE OVERTHROW OF THE GLADIATOR BY HARMACHIS.

NOW the long days of preparation had passed, and the time was at hand. I was initiated, and I was crowned; so that, although the common folk knew me not, or knew me only as Priest of Isis, there were in Egypt thousands who at heart bowed down to me as Pharaoh. The hour was at hand, and my soul went forth to meet it. For I longed to overthrow the foreigner, to set Egypt free, to mount the throne that was my heritage, and cleanse the temples of my Gods. I was fain for the struggle, and I never doubted of its end. I looked into the mirror, and saw triumph written on my brows. The future stretched a path of glory from my feet—ay, glittering with glory like Sihor in the sun. I communed with my Mother Isis; I sat within my chamber and took counsel with my heart; I planned new temples; I revolved great laws that I would put forth for my people's weal; and in my ears rang the shouts of exultation that should greet victorious Pharaoh on his throne.

But still a little while I tarried at Abouthis, and, having been commanded so to do, let my hair, that had been shorn, grow again long and black as the raven's wing, instructing myself meanwhile in all manly exercises and feats of arms. Also, for a purpose that shall be seen, I perfected myself in that magic art of the Egyptians and the reading of the stars, in which things, indeed, I already had great skill.

Now, this was the plan that had been built up. My uncle Sepa had, for awhile, left the Temple of On, giving out that his health had failed him. Thence he had moved down to a house in Alexandria, to gather strength, as he said, from the breath of the sea, and also to learn for himself the wonders of the great Museum and the glory of Cleopatra's Court. There it was planned that I should join him, for there, at Alexandria, the egg of the plot was hatching. Accordingly, when at last the summons came, all things being prepared, I made me ready for the journey and passed into my father's chamber to receive his blessing ere I went. There sat the old man, as once before he sat when he rebuked me because I went out to slay the lion, his long white beard resting on the table of stone and sacred writings in his hand. When I came in he rose from his seat and would have knelt, crying: "Hail, Pharaoh!" but I caught him by the hand.

"It is not meet, my father," I said.

"It is meet," he answered. "It is meet that I should bow me before my King. But be it as thou wilt. And so thou goest, Harmachis? My blessing go with thee, O my son, and may those whom I serve grant it to me that my old eyes may, indeed, behold thee on the throne! Long have I searched, striving, O Harmachis, to read the future that shall be, but naught can I learn by all my wisdom. It is hid from me, and at times my heart fails me. But hear this: There is danger in thy path, and it comes in the form of woman. Long have I known it, and therefore hast thou been called to the worship of the heavenly Isis, who bids her votaries put away the thought of woman till such time as she shall think well to slacken the rule. O my son, I would that thou wert not so strong and fair—stronger and fairer, indeed, than any man in Egypt, as a King should be—for in that strength and beauty may lie a cause of stumbling. Beware, then, of those witches of Alexandria, lest, like a worm, some one of them creep into thy heart and eat its secret out."

"Have no fear, my father," I answered, frowning; "my thought is set on other things than red lips and smiling eyes."

"It is good," he answered; "so may it befall. And now farewell. When next we meet, may it be in that happy hour when, with all the Priests of the Upper Land, I move down from Abouthis to do my homage to Pharaoh on his throne."

So I embraced him, and went. Alas! I little thought how we should meet again.

Thus it came about that once more I passed down the Nile, traveling as a man of no estate. And to such as were curious about me it was given out that I was the adopted son of the High Priest of Abouthis, having been brought up to the priesthood, and that I had at last refused the service of the Gods, and chosen to go to Alexandria to seek my fortune. For, be it remembered, I was by all those who knew not the truth still held to be the grandson of the old wife, Atoua.

On the tenth night, sailing with the wind, we reached the mighty city of Alexandria, the city of a thousand lights. Above them all towered the white Pharos, that wonder of the world, from the crown whereof a light like the light of the sun blazed out across the waters of the harbor to guide mariners on their way across the wine-dark sea. The vessel, for it was night, having been most cautiously made fast to the quay, I disembarked and stood wondering at the vast mass of houses, and confused by the clamor of many tongues. For here all peoples seemed to be gathered together, each speaking after the fashion of his own land. And as I stood a young man came and touched me on the shoulder, asking me if I was from Abouthis and named Harmachis. I said, "Yea." Thereon, bending over me, he whispered the secret password into mine ear, and, beckoning to two slaves, bade them bring my apparel from the ship. This they did, fighting their way through the crowd of porters who were clamoring for hire. Then I followed him adown the quay, which was bordered with drinking places, where all sorts of men were gathered, tippling wine and watching the dancing of women, some of whom were but scantily arrayed, and some not arrayed at all. And so we went through the lamp-lit houses, till at last we reached the shore of the great harbor, and turned to the right along a wide way paved with granite and bordered by strong houses, having cloisters in front of them, the like of which I had never seen. Turning once more to the right, we came to a quieter portion of the city, where, save for parties of strolling revelers, the streets were still. Presently my guide halted at a house built of white stone. We passed in, and, crossing a small courtyard, entered a chamber where there was a light. And here at last I found my uncle Sepa, most glad to see me safe. When I had washed and eaten he told me that all things went well, and that as yet there was no thought of evil at the Court. Further, he said, it having come to the ears of the Queen that the Priest of On was sojourning at Alexandria, she sent for him and closely questioned him—not as to any plot, for of that she never thought, but as to the rumor which had reached her that there was treasure hid in the Great Pyramid that is by On. For, being ever wasteful, she was ever in want of money, and had bethought her of opening the Pyramid. But he laughed at her, telling her the Pyramid was the burying place of the Divine Chufu, and that naught knew he of its secrets. Then she was angered, and swore that so surely as she ruled in Egypt she would tear it down, stone by stone, and discover the secret at its heart. Again he laughed, and in the words of the proverb which they have here at Alexandria, told her that "Mountains live longer than Kings." Thereon she smiled at his ready answer and let him go. Also my uncle Sepa told me that on the morrow I should see this Cleopatra. For it was her birthday (as, indeed, it was also mine), and, dressed as the Holy Isis, she would pass in state from her palace on the Lochias to the Serapeum to offer a sacrifice at the shrine of the false God who sits therein. And he said thereafter that the fashion whereby I should gain entrance to the household of the Queen should be contrived.

Then, being very weary, I went to rest; but could sleep little for the strangeness of the place, the noises in the streets, and the thought of the morrow. While it was yet dark, I rose, climbed the stair to the roof of the house, and waited. Presently the sun's rays shot out like arrows, and lit upon the white wonder of the marble Pharos, whereof the light instantly sank and died, as though, indeed, the sun had killed it. Now the rays fell upon the marble palaces of the Lochias where Cleopatra lay, and lit them up till they flamed like a jewel set on the dark, cool bosom of the sea. Away the light flew, kissing the Soma's sacred dome, wherein Alexander sleeps, touching the high tops of a thousand palaces and temples; past the porticoes of the great museum that loomed near at hand, striking the lofty shrine where, carven of ivory, is the image of the false God Serapis, and at last seeming to lose itself in the vast and gloomy Necropolis. Then, as the dawn gathered into day, the great flood of brightness overbrimming the bowl of night flowed into the lower lands and streets, and showed Alexandria red in the sunrise as the mantle of a king, and shaped as a mantle. The Etesian wind came up from the north and swept away the vapor from the harbors, so that I saw their blue waters rocking a thousand ships. I saw, too, that mighty mole of the Heptastadium; I saw the hundreds of streets, the countless houses, the innumerable wealth and splendor of Alexandria, set like a queen betwixt Mareotis and the ocean, and dominating both, and I was filled with wonder. This, then, was one city in my heritage of lands and cities! Well, it was worth the grasping. And having looked my full and fed my heart, as it were, with the sight of splendor, I communed with the Holy Isis and came down from the roof.

In the chamber beneath was my uncle Sepa. I told him that I had been watching the sun rise over the city of Alexandria.

"So!" he said, looking at me from beneath his shaggy eyebrows; "and what thinkest thou of Alexandria?"

"I think it is like some city of the Gods," I answered.

"Ay!" he replied, fiercely, "a city of the infernal Gods—a sink of corruption, a bubbling well of iniquity, a home of false faith springing from false hearts! I would that not one stone of it were left upon another stone, and that its wealth lay deep beneath yonder waters! I would that the gulls were screaming across its site, and that the wind, untainted by a Grecian breath, swept through its ruins from ocean to Mareotis! O Royal Harmachis, let not the luxury and beauty of Alexandria poison thy sense; for in their deadly air Faith perishes and Religion can not spread her heavenly wings. When the hour comes for thee to rule, Harmachis, cast down this accursed city, and, as thy fathers did, set up thy throne in the white walls of Memfi. For I tell thee that for Egypt Alexandria is but a splendid gate of ruin, and while it endures all nations of the earth shall march through it to the plunder of the land, and all false faiths shall nestle in it and breed the overthrow of Egypt's Gods."

I made no answer, for there was truth in his words. And yet to me the city seemed very fair to look on. After we had eaten, my uncle told me it was now time to set out to view the march of Cleopatra, as she went in triumph to the shine of Serapis. For although she would not pass till within two hours of the midday, yet these people of Alexandria have so great a love of shows and idling that had we not presently set forth by no means could we have come through the press of the multitudes who were already gathering along the highways where the Queen must ride. So we went out to take our place upon a stand, fashioned of timber, that had been built at the side of the great road which pierces through the city, even to the Canopic Gate. For therein my uncle had purchased a right to enter, and that dearly.

And with much struggle we won our way through the great crowds that were already gathered in the streets, till we reached the scaffolding of timber, which was roofed in with an awning and gayly hung with scarlet cloths. Here we seated ourselves upon a bench and waited for some hours, watching the multitude pass past, shouting, singing and talking loudly in many tongues. At length came soldiers to clear the road, clad, after the Roman fashion, in coats of chain armor. After them marched heralds enjoining silence (whereat the populace sang and shouted all the more loudly), and crying that Cleopatra, the Queen, was coming. Then followed a thousand Cilician skirmishers, a thousand Thracians, a thousand Macedonians, and a thousand Gauls, each armed after the fashion of their own country. Then passed five hundred men of those who are called the Fenced Horsemen, for both men and horses were altogether covered with armor. Next came youths and maidens sumptuously draped and wearing golden crowns, and with them images symbolizing Day and Night, Morning and Noon, the Heavens and the Earth. After these came many fair women pouring perfumes on the road, and others scattering blooming flowers. Now there rose a great shout of "Cleopatra! Cleopatra!" and I held my breath and bent forward to see her who dared to put on the robes of Isis.

But at that moment the multitude so gathered and thickened in front of where I was that I could no longer clearly see. So in my eagerness I leapt over the barrier of the scaffolding, and, being very strong, pushed my way through the crowd till I reached the foremost rank. And, as I did so, Nubian slaves armed with thick staves and crowned with ivy leaves ran up, striking the people. One man more especially, for he was a giant, and, being strong, was insolent beyond measure, smiting the people without cause, as, indeed, is the wont of low persons set in authority. For nigh to me stood a woman, an Egyptian by her face, bearing a child in her arms, whom the man, seeing that she was weak, struck on the head with his rod so that she fell prone, and the people murmured. But my blood rushed of a sudden through my veins at the sight, and drowned my reason. In my hand I held a staff of olive wood from Cypras, and as the black brute laughed at the sight of the stricken woman and her babe rolling on the ground, I swung the staff aloft and smote. So shrewdly did I strike that the tough rod split upon the giant's shoulders and the blood spurted forth, staining his trailing leaves of ivy.

VINEGAR BITTERS

Grandest Modern Discovery.

Triumph of Pharmacy.

The only true practical

ELIXIR OF LIFE AND HEALTH.

Is one that promotes digestion, improves the appetite, cleanses the liver, purifies the blood, and stimulates brain and nerves without injurious reaction, and one that may be taken alike by adult or infant. Profane compounds, made of vile rum or bad whiskey, sweetened or flavored, under the titles of bitters, tonics, &c., produce effects far worse than the disease for which they are taken.

Vinegar Bitters is a pure tonic, a nervine without being narcotic, a blood purifier without poison a liver tonic without purging, and above all, a life-giving stimulant without alcohol. The only medicine with such powers in the world.

A GENUINE TEMPERANCE BEVERAGE,

far surpassing alcohol in any shape as a tonic, and it might be called

LIQUID LIFE,

since it stimulates, invigorates and regulates digestion, nutrition secretion, excretion, respiration, and all the functions whereby life is maintained—we literally take in vitality in spoonsful.

It is not too much to assert that the equal of Vinegar Bitters does not exist, and no counterpart or compound with similar virtues has ever been known.

CALIFORNIA,

if remarkable for nothing else, would be immortalized by the production of the medicinal fruits, roots and herbs of which this Bitters is composed. Many of them used by the Indians and the medical profession in the treatment of chills and fevers, rheumatism, catarrh, consumption, neuralgia, headache liver complaint, kidney disease, jaundice, gout, piles, boils, skin diseases, &c., &c., too numerous to mention, but easily understood when the action of the Bitters on the vital functions is remembered. The discovery was partly accidental but the present

PERFECT BITTERS IS THE RESULT OF SCIENCE.

Millions of sufferers have gratefully and gladly endorsed, during the past quarter of a century, the wonderful success of this

PHENOMINAL TONIC OF THE WORLD.

In order to meet every probable demand, two formulas of the same ingredients are now put up.

THE OLD STYLE IS STRONGER, SLIGHTLY BITTER AND MORE CATHARTIC.

THE NEW STYLE, PLEASANT TO THE TASTE AND EXPRESSLY ADAPTED TO DELICATE WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

REMEMBER,

There is no disease of low vitality, debility of functions, or nervous prostration for which

VINEGAR BITTERS IS NOT CURATIVE.

and its singular power over the lower organisms renders it the implacable foe of

THE DEADLY MICROBE AND OMNIPRESENT BACTERIA

in malarial diseases cholera, consumption, internal diseases, &c., and so great is its power as a germicide that it is an

UNEQUALLED VERMIFUGE.

A book could be written of its virtues, and another of testimonials, but it is only necessary to remember its general action upon the liver, blood, brain and nerves, to realize its use in a majority of the ills that flesh is heir to, and that no family should ever be without a bottle of

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC

Having purchased M. P. Brown's photo gallery, I will move into his rooms on Nov. 4. I still retain the rooms now occupied by me, but will do operating in Mr. Brown's gallery. This enables me to furnish the public with a better class of work than heretofore. I intend to make a specialty of life-size photo work and all kinds of enlarged pictures. You will also find a good line of picture frames,and in fact anything connected with my line of business. Hoping to be able to retain Mr. Brown's trade, I will endeavor to please the public and furnish them with a class of work second to none in Southern Michigan, and at reasonable prices. Thanking one and all for their past favors, I hope to retain their further patronage. Call and see me in my new quarters.

W. L. HECK.

N.B.—Mr. Brown will be at the gallery a short time to assist in any thing that needs attention from his old customers.

Scrofula in Children.

The following is taken from a letter written under date of July 1, 1889, by Mrs. Ruth Berkley, a most charitable and christian lady, of Salina, Kan.: "In the early part of 1887 scrofula appeared on the head of my little grandchild, then only eighteen months old. Shortly after breaking out it spread rapidly all over the body. The scabs on the sores would peal off on the slightest touch, and the odor that would arise would make the atmosphere of the room sickening and unbearable. The disease next attacked the eyes and we feared she would lose her sight. Eminent physicians from the surrounding country were consulted, but could do nothing to relieve the little innocent, and gave it as their opinion, "that the case was hopeless and impossible to save the child's eyesight." It was then that we decided to try Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) That medicine at once made a speedy and complete cure. For more than a year past she has been as healthy as any child in the land."

Cured His Little Boy.

My little boy had impurities of the blood that were of a scrofulous nature, which resulted in the breaking out of an abscess on the hip. I gave him Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) It purified his blood and restored his health. As a blood purifier it certainly has no equal. FELIX SINK, Salem, N. C.

HISTORY OF UTAH

The only true history of Mormonism from its origin to the present time; endorsed alike by Mormons and Gentiles. Written without prejudice so you can see

UTAH AS IT IS.

Nothing so near approaches the miraculous as the rise of a new religion, founded by an illiterate man, in the keenest country in the world, and in the age which has given us the greatest inventions.

The finding of the plates, their translation, the first preaching, obtaining converts, founding of Navoo, origin of Polygamy, the exile from three states, founding a prosperous state in a desert beyond civilization, to be overtaken and passed by '49ers, the executive ability of Brigham Young, the struggle between Mormonism and the United States—this is thrilling as a novel, yet true history. Everybody wants it.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Farmers who are doing fall plowing say it plows finely.

Little May Jones is on the sick list at present.

Mrs. Wm. Riggs is very sick with neuralgia of the stomach, and her recovery is somewhat doubtful.

Guy Pocklington was compelled to leave school last week with sickness.

We, the undersigned, agree to close our respective places of business at 8 o'clock, P. M., except Saturday's, until further notice. Wm. F. Clack, Chas. Culbertson, Jr., H. J. Williams, General Supply Co., S. P. Smith.

The Secretary of the Hall library association requests that those members who have not as yet paid their annual dues, pay the same at as early a date as possible to the new librarian Miss Salome Clark.

Ed. Smith lost a valuable cow last week by getting fast in the fence and hurting herself.

On Thanksgiving day, next week Thursday, a thanksgiving service will be held in the church at 10:30 A. M. and it is hoped a good attendance will be present.

We understand, from pretty good authority, that we are to have another meat market in our village.

The General Supply Co. have placabove the front entrance of their place of business a very attractive sign. The lettering was done by A. R. Arner, in a very tasty manner.

W. J. Helm made a business trip to Toledo last week.

Mrs. Susan Clark visited relatives at Raisinville, Monroe Co., from Saturday until the forepart of this week.

Mrs. Sarah Rappleye and Lawrence, arrived home from their visit with relatives at Wilmington, Ills., Saturday evening.

Prof. H. W. Daniels spent Saturday and Sunday with his parents at Onsted.

Misses Clara Temple and Jennie Osgood visited Tecumseh friends from Friday evening until Sunday P. M.

Gip and Lou Arner enjoyed a pleasant time with their sister Rhoba, at uncle C. G. Crego's, at Adrian, Sunday and Monday.

Mrs. Hall and Ella accompanied Mr. Bush to Brooklyn; they left Friday morning.

The W. C. T. U. will meet at the home of the President, Mrs. G. P. Waring, on Tuesday afternoon instead of Thursday, as it is Thanksgiving; a full attendance of the members is desired as it is the election of officers. By order of President.

Lawyer Wightman of Tecumseh, was in the village Tuesday.

G. P. Waring went to Adrian Monday on business.

Gerard VanVleet returned Tuesday evening from a few days visit at Howell, with Wm. Snedicor and family, and reports a pleasant time.

On account of the dark and stormy night the attendance at the supper given at the church on Wednesday evening of last week to raise the amount needed to renew the insurance on the church, was somewhat limited. The receipts amounted to $25.00 however.

The General Supple Co., have just received a splendid assortment of door mats and rugs; also a goodly number of samples of ingrain carpets. But the article that attracts the most attention is the little shaver's highchair and rocker combined.

FRANKLIN FACTS.

School commenced last Monday in Dist. No. 2, with an enrollment of 37 pupils and several more to come by and by. Dist. No. 1, Mrs. Wilson teacher, also opened Monday.

Frank Lampkin has moved his family into Wm. Fisher's house so as to be handy to his school.

Bert Billington starts for Tennessee Thursday, Mrs. Billington, her children and her mother, Mrs. Ezra Simmons, follow him on Monday. For several months Mrs. B. has suffered from a bad cough accompanied with hoarseness and pain in her lungs and her friends have become alarmed about her condition. The party will go to Cleveland, 28 miles from Chattanooga, in the extreme south east part of the state, where they intend to spend the winter at least. That Lottie may be fully restored to health and strength by the balmy southern breezes is the fervent prayer of her very many friends.

There are two forms of chronic rheumatism: one in which the joints are swollen and red without fever: in the other the joints are only stiff and painful. In either form Salvation Oil may be relied on to effect a cure. It kills pain. 25 cents.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Mrs. Carrie McCollum has been visiting friends in Clinton, during the past week.

Mrs. Ed. Rowland and Mrs. Henry Stevens of Tecumseh, visited friends here Tuesday.

James Hamilton left for Detroit Tuesday afternoon.

C. S. Burroughs went to Jackson on business Wednesday.

W. V. Fisk started Monday for Newton, Iowa, where he is interested in the grocery business with his son Frank.

Robert Nourse delivered the first of a series of entertainments Monday night. His lecture was interesting and humorous. The hall was well filled with an appreciative audience.

Miss Belle Hogan and Miss Hattie Kanouse went to Tecumseh Tuesday.

Miss Maggie McKolloff of Albion, arrived here Tuesday afternoon for a short visit.

A tailor from Jackson has opened a shop in the rooms lately vacated by Lavern Sutfin. Enough work goes away from Clinton in this line to keep one busy.

Lavern Sutfin has closed out his cigar and tobacco store, and has hired with S. W. Demuth. He makes a good clerk and we hope he will stay in his present quarters.

Mr. Chas. Ward has purchased a lot of Mrs. Bruce on Franklin street, and will proceed at once to erect a residence.

The music at the M. E. church Sunday night was especially fine. Coffin played the violin, Rogers the flute and Mattison the trombone. The singing was good also. Presiding Elder Joslin faced an interested and devout audience during his discourse.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

Mrs. Geo. Sudborough of Adrian, has been having a delightful visit with the family of H. E. Wilson, Esq.

The deer hunters are having an excellent time up north. L. B. Spencer and Mr. Lowe have each enjoyed a shot at deers, but owing to some unaccountable obstinacy of the frisky animals, had failed to secure any venson at last accounts.

Miss Edith Parker of Adrian, Sundayed at the home of Uncle John Richards.

The Presbyterian church of Raisin is to have a new furnace and will also undergo other needed repairs.

The Presbyterian Ladies' Social is to be held at the house of Mrs. Geo. Kishpaugh, on Friday the 22d. inst., at 11 o'clock, A. M.

A Sabbath school concert is to be held at the above named church next Sabbath evening.

A crafty young man visited the bower of a prominent man's daughter at Raisin Center, and captured a prize in the matrimonial lottery, resulting in the wedding of Mr. Jay Craft and Miss Louisa Bowerman.

Mrs. Barrett of Ridgeway, visited her daughter, Miss Nettie, at this place on Sunday last.

We expect the next edition of the HERALD will chronicle the completion of the public hall.

Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Macham are visiting in Oakland county, driving to Milford on Tuesday of last week. They do not expect to return home until Monday of next week.

Rain rain, the welcome and much needed gentle rain has come, but not even a poem have we yet had on the beautiful snow.

Mrs. Mary Holdridge is in very poor health.

Mrs. S. R. Rogers seems slowly improving in health and strength.

Floyd Florence no longer faces his former festive field of famous feats and foibles, but following forth his father's footsteps, he faithfully frees the full and fruitfull field of its firm, formidable fodder and feed.

Miss Mary Palmer and Miss Sue Billmeyer attended the Star course concert at Adrian on Saturday evening.

Mrs. James Lane entertains a large number of Macon friends to a thanksgiving dinner.

All is as quiet as the "Grave" along the Potomac, with the exception of a few who have indulged in too many exaggerated and repeated doses of Radway's Ready Relief.

Experience is a wise teacher as the following extract from the Adrian Press of the 15th inst. goes to prove: J. F. Slayton, of Dundee, contracted to run a P. of I. grocery store. Then he thought it all over and after a little experience, he "kerflunked" on ten per cent. profits and withdrew from the contract, and proclaims that he will sell goods for one price to everybody. The Patrons will try and find another man who will stick.

NOTES FROM THE NORMAL.

YPSILANTI, Nov. 17, '89.

The fact that there is a larger 'Students Christian Association' at the Normal than at any other institution in the State, speaks well of the moral influences here. In fact, the students who attend the Normal are as a class serious thinking, well minded young men and women. They are fitting themselves for a calling that demands in the one who follows it, a good moral character. They realize this and also the fact that the teacher's success depends much on the influence for good that he by his position may exert in a community. The association have a large, well furnished room in the second story of the Observatory, capable of holding from three to four hundred. A prayer meeting is held every Wednesday night and the hour devoted to prayer is always too short to allow all to take part. The spirit manifested at these meetings cannot well be described. Three and four often rise at the same time, and no more sincere and earnest words could be uttered than come from the hearts and lips of these earnest christian young men and women.

This association is doing a noble work. Young men and women who come here from christian homes and influences are in no danger of being led astray, and not many attend the Normal for any length of time, who are not brought to a knowledge and confession of Christ through the influences of this association and intercourse with its members, who are zealous workers in God's cause.

In spite of the many slurs cast at the Normal by outsiders, who know nothing of it, its popularity is steadily growing and it is throwing out influences that are being felt in the farthest corners of our great state. Young men and women are yearly going out from this institution, well fitted not only mentally but morally to fill the high calling of teacher in the public schools of the State, and it is a recognized fact that the majority of successful teachers in our public schools to-day are graduates of the Normal.

TECUMSEH AND FRANKLIN FARMERS' CLUB.

As previously announced this society met at W. S. Osborn's on the evening of Nov. 18th. Were we allowed to judge by the number of bright, intelligent, infantile members present, the decision on the question of the evening might well be rendered—"Farming does pay."

The next meeting will be at the home of B. Hurrey, Nov. 27th. Program:

Music.
Rec.—Jennie Osborn.
Reading—Mrs. Wm. Waldron.
Dec.—Austin Swartz.
Music—Hattie Hurrey.
Essay—Emma Drake.
Reading—Mr. Swartz.
Whistling Solo—Mr. Langton.
Dia.—Mrs. Hoag and Mrs. Haire.
Dec.—Roy Langton.
Music—Hettie Waldron.

Paper on Thanksgiving, by Henry Wilson, followed with short talks on the subject, by C. Bramble, H. Hoag Mrs. VanValkenburg, Mrs. Munger and others.

STATE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The Michigan State Sunday School Association, whose pleasant and profitable sessions at East Saginaw last winter are recalled by hundreds of Sunday School workers, is planning for another large and enthusiastic gathering at Grand Rapids, Dec. 3, 4 and 5. It is confidently expected that Brethren Jacobs and Reynolds, of Illinois, will be present to aid by their wise council and stimulating addresses, and also that brother E. O. Excell of Chicago will lead the singing, while some of the best talent of our own State will be called into requisition. Our motto for the December meeting:

A large gathering; interesting sessions; the projection of board plans of work, and entire dependence on the holy spirit. Further particulars respecting the coming meeting and program will be furnished the public in a few days.

HISTORY REPEATING ITSELF.

In 1852, the Democrats swept eyery Northern state from Pennsylvania to California. Only two Northern states, Massachusetts and Vermont—voted for General Scott against General Pierce, and two Southern states—Kentucky and Tennessee—were the only break in the Democratic sweep in the south. Every indication pointed to a long period of Democratic supremacy, and it could have been long maintained had wisdom increased with power; but the very cause that gave the Democrats their overwhelming victory in 1852, broke them into fragments in 1854, gave them a minority triumph in 1856, and then doomed them to a quarter century of unbroken rule by their opponents.

Slavery aggression not only did not cease when the people voted in 1852 by an exceptional majority, to end slavery agitation, but it became bolder and advanced its standard by the Dred Scott decision and by the desperate and bloody struggles to enslave Kansas and Nebraska. The latent anti slavery sentiment was thus kindled into a flame, and in 1854, every New England and Northern state, excepting only California—lost by a few hundreds—voted against the administration and the party they had but lately given the most triumphant summons to power ever given in any national contest since the re-election of Monroe. Stubborn Democratic states like Maine, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa and Michigan, swung from their Democratic moorings and, with the single exception of Indiana, have been as stubborn Republican states for the period of a full generation.

In 1854 when the profound anti-slavery sentiment asserted itself, the answer was made that "local issues" had temporarily disrupted parties and the blind leaders continued to lead their blind followers until the deluge came. True, local issues were seized upon in many states and magnified into potential importance, but a party united in conviction is not thus disrupted by local questions. It is only when a great party assails the sincere convictions of its people that "local issues" can rise to the importance of swinging such states as Virginia, Ohio, Iowa, New York, and New Jersey, against the party just on the threshold of power by almost unprecedented majorities.

The issue that is repeating the revolutionary work of the slavery issue of 1854 is the now vital question of tariff reform. It had many pretexts in the shape of "local issues" to open the way for party revolt; but if there had not been profound unrest in New England, in the Middle states and in the great West because of aggressive and needless taxation upon the necessaries of life, and of the open prostitution of the policy of protection to monopoly greed, no local issues could have defeated a Republican governor and legislature in Ohio, defeated a Republican governor in Iowa, and elected Democrat state tickets in New York, New Jersey and Virginia by majorities which equally surprised the leaders of all parties. And the revolt of 1889, like the revolt of 1854, will grow in power and become more and more revolutionary in every section of the union, until needless taxation of the people shall be overthrown and banded monopoly shall cease to have special protection at the cost of consumers.

The people of this country believe in the liberal protection to American labor. It was first thought of by Washington, and has been sustained by every President from Washington to Harrison, and it never will be overthrown in the nation unless protection leaders engulf their cause and themselves in the exacting greed of monopoly. Massachusetts and Iowa will heartily protect the wages of labor in our tariff laws, but tariff taxes employed for protection must cease with protection to wages. With our manufacturers put upon equality with competitors abroad on the question of wages, every dollar of additional tax imposed is simply inexcusable oppression of the people. Iowa and Massachusetts want cheapened American products without reducing wages of labor; they want free raw materials; they want free coal, free wool, free iron ore, and free scrap iron to enable the New England industries to live, and the farmers of Iowa, with their crushing tariff taxes on everything they use, eat and wear, and growing mortgages on their farms, want cheapened clothing, implements and household effects. And they not only want them, but they must have them; and the recent elections simply emphasize the purpose of both East and West to have honest and thorough tariff revision and reduced taxes or revolution. It is only history repeating itself, and whether it shall be a brief rebellion or a sweeping revolution, will depend upon the leaders of the party in power. The Democratic leaders in 1854 learned nothing, forgot nothing, and were hopelessly overthrown; what will the Republican leaders of 1889 do? History is repeating itself.—Philadelphia Times.

TAXATION AND AGRICULTURE.

Ex-Commissioner Coleman's Idea of the Way the Former Bears on the Latter.

[From ex-Commissioner Coleman's speech at the Wheat Grower's Convention.]

Our lawmakers have the highest regard for the manufacturer, legislate to secure for him a large profit on the cost of his products, but do they ever do anything to secure even the cost of the farmer's product, much less any profit? And do they not on the other hand lay a heavy burden upon him by compelling him to pay this heavy taxation to the manufacturer? Was there ever greater injustice? Is it any wonder that the farmers can't carry this heavy load? Is it any wonder that farms are being so abandoned in some of the Eastern States, and turned out to the commons, under the blessing of this protective system to the American farmer? Is it any wonder that our statistics show a most amazing increase of wealth among our manufacturers—the wealth of the country pouring a steady stream into their hands, while they show an equally declining condition in farm lands in all the older States, and in all those States that are not benefitted by a heavy immigration of farmers who hope in some way to better their condition?

THE TARIFF AND THE LABORER.

[Here the speaker was interrupted by a delegate, who asked if this extra duty paid by the farmer did not go to sustain the American laborer. The speaker said:]

I am a friend of the laborer, no matter in what field of labor he may be. I know what it is to labor myself, for in my early life I had to earn money by the toil of my hands. My sympathies are with this class of our people. But the idea that the manufacturers of this country, or any other country, will pay any more for labor than they are compelled to, is too ridiculous to discuss. The price of labor is everywhere regulated by the law of demand and supply. A surplus of labor anywhere and everywhere means cheap labor; a scarcity of labor anywhere and everywhere means dear labor.

But, for the sake of argument, let us concede that the present high tariff makes wages higher for those employed by manufacturers. Does it not make the cost of living higher? Does not an average tax of 47 per cent. upon everything consumed and used by himself, his wife, his children, more than counterbalance any increase of wages he receives? If the manufacturer should pay him a little more with one hand does he not immediately take it out with the increased price on every manufactured product which he buys?

And let us go a little farther and concede that the laborers in our manufactories do derive some benefit, which I deny, by this high tariff, how are those laborers affected who do not work in manufactories? They are all taxed on everything consumed, without any corresponding benefit. Are only those who work in manufacturing establishments to be called laborers? Are only the interests of those who work for those privileged classes to be regarded? How does it affect that great class of laborers without the walls of these establishments? It gives them no increased wages, but it does give them increased taxation on every manufactured product they purchase.

THE FARMER AS LABORER.

People don't stop to consider the farmer is a laborer. No one labors harder. He has no eight hours or even ten hours' law to protect him. From the earliest dawn to the darkest twilight he is toiling with the endeavor to make a living for his family. No matter how intense the heat or severe the cold, he must keep up the struggle. Sick or well, the work must go on. Half of our population nearly are farmers. Has this great class no rights? Shall they continue to be taxed by a protected class until they become paupers? Where is that high regard paid for this class of toilers that is pretended to be paid to those who work for manufacturers, and those who work on farms outnumber them 20 to 1.

The farmers are ignored. The interests of the real creators of wealth are lost sight of, that manufacturers may amass great fortunes. They are taxed by these classes on everything they buy; not to go into the coffers of the United States Treasury, but to go into their own plethoric pockets. Their princely residences, their livery servants, their costly turnouts in every manufacturing town, testify to the wealth they are making, and the farmer is toiling early and late and by the sweat of his brow, supporting them in this style of living.

It is time, brother farmers, to call a halt. This condition of things cannot be continued much longer without general bankruptcy to that class to which we belong. You know better than I can tell you of the truths I express. You have been watching for years the black clouds that have been hovering over you, hoping against hope, that the silver lining might appear; but they have only grown denser and blacker as time has rolled on. Can any of you see any hope for the future? Will the farmers become enlightened as to their true interests? If they have been blind in the past, will they not tear the scales from their eyes; will they not remove the yoke from their necks, and with united purpose, move forward and throw off the unjust burdens which have been laid upon them?

Brother farmers, I know that I have spoken earnestly, perhaps too earnestly, before a convention like this, where views may be entertained that differ from mine, but I feel the situation keenly; feel that I have a duty to perform for that class for which the best years and labors of my life have been given. I believe that a crisis is approaching which cannot long be averted, unless a most radical reform is made in our tariff laws, which shall have as much regard for the farmer as the manufacturer, for the toiler on the farm as the pretended regard for the toiler in the manufactory.

SOME OLD POLITICAL SECRETS.

The Lincoln papers in the Century are stirring up other writers to give reminiscences. James R. Gilmore (Edmund Kirke) in the N. Y. Sun tells the story how General Garfield schemed with other republican politicians to defeat the renomination of Lincoln in 1864. Gen. Rosecrans was mentioned as the most fitting and available man for the nomination and Mr. Gilmore was the messenger sent by Garfield to interview Gen. Rosecrans. He reports the interview as follows:

Gen. Rosecrans heard me through with evident surprise and gratification, and said: "The good opinion of those gentlemen is exceedingly gratifying to me, and so is yours, and I assure you that I have not had the remotest suspicion that you were here for any such purpose. I have supposed you were merely gathering literary material; but my good friend, it can not be. My place is here. The country gave me my education, and so has a right to my military services, and it educated me for precisely this emergency. So this, and not the presidency, is my post of duty, and I cannot, without violating my conscience, leave it. But let me tell you, and I wish you would tell your friends who are moving in this matter, that you are mistaken about Mr. Lincoln. He is in his right place. I am in a position to know, and if you live you will see that I am right about him."

An added tear will fall in memory of Old Rosy as these heroic sentiments are read.—Toledo Bee.

HOW THE FARMERS HAVE BEEN FOOLED.

The process of "fooling the farmers" must have an end. They are proverbially the most conservative class of American citizens, but like others, they will begin to think when they feel the pinch, and when thoroughly hungry, they will, no doubt, decline to be further fed with wind. The sheriffs are busy selling the fertile acres of bankrupt farmers in all the eastern states, where that great interest, whose prosperity lies at the bottom of the healthy prosperity of all other interests, is rapidly and fatally declining. With New Hampshire and Vermont bestirring themselves to secure foreign emigrants to settle their abandoned farms, and with the frightful depreciation in the money value of agricultural land nearest to the boasted home markets, afforded by fraudulent "protection," and closest to the great railroad arteries of trade, the eastern farmer cannot long contemplate the actual situation without asking himself and answering for himself, whether or not the existing system of taxation is plundering him and enriching someone else.—Saturday Globe.

Gross Cruelty.

Parents too frequently permit their children to suffer from headache, fits, St. Vitus Dance, nervousness, etc., when they can be cured. Mrs. P. was cured of sick headache, dizziness, dyspepsia, nervous prostration of eighteen years standing, after failure of sixteen physicians; Mrs K., of sick headache for 35 years; Mrs. P. of twenty to fifty fits a night; others from this vicinity could be mentioned who have been cured by that wonderful nerve food and medicine—Dr. Miles' Nervine, which contains no morphine, opium or dangerous drugs. CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic researches, however, has proven this to be a fact, and result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to the applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet of this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. KIRK'S AMERICAN FAMILY SOAP.

Is a constitutional and not a local disease, and therefore it cannot be cured by local applications. It requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, working through the blood, eradicates the impurity which causes and promotes the disease, and effects a permanent cure. Thousands of people testify to the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for catarrh when other preparations had failed. Hood's Sarsaparilla also builds up the whole system, and makes you feel renewed in health and strength.

"I used Hood's Sarsaparilla for catarrh and received great relief and benefit from it. The catarrh was very disagreeable, especially in the winter, causing constant discharge from my nose, ringing noises in my ears, and pains in the back of my head. The effect to clear my head in the morning by hawking and spitting was painful. Hood's Sarsaparilla gave me relief immediately, while in time I was entirely cured. I think Hood's Sarsaparilla is worth its weight in gold." MRS. G. B. GRIM, 1029 Eighth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

SOLOMON'S WISE CHOICE.

LESSON VIII, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 24.

Text of the Lesson, 1 Kings iii, 5-15. Commit Verses 12-15—Golden Text, Prov. viii, 11—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

The last days of David were devoted to gathering together materials for the Temple of the Lord, to be built by Solomon, his son, at Jerusalem. Because he had set his affection upon the house of his God he gave and gathered in great abundance wood, iron, brass, silver, gold and precious stones, and gave to Solomon a solemn charge concerning the house and kingdom. David also purchased a site for the house, the very place where Abraham had centuries before offered up Isaac (II Chron. iii, 1; Gen. xxii, 2, 14), and there he built an altar unto the Lord and offered sacrifice, the Lord answering him by fire from Heaven (I Chron. xxi, 22-26).

"So David slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David; having reigned over Israel forty years; seven years in Hebron and thirty-three years in Jerusalem." (I Kings, ii, 10, 11.)

"Then Solomon sat on the Throne of the Lord as king instead of David, his father, and prospered, and all Israel obeyed him." (I Chron. xxix, 23.)

5. "In Gibeon the Lord appeared to Solomon in a dream by night." The ark of God was in a tent which David had pitched for it in Jerusalem, but the tabernacle and altar of burnt offering were at Gibeon (II Chron. i, 3, 4), and thither Solomon and all the congregation had gone to offer sacrifice. The Lord had appeared to Samuel at the tabernacle in Shiloh and to David at the threshing floor of Araunah (I Sam. iii, 21; II Chron. iii, 1), but we do not read that He ever appeared to Saul, for Saul was thoroughly disobedient and rebellious, but David and Solomon, though great sinners and often overcome, sincerely sought the Lord. The Lord appeared to Solomon a second time on another occasion, and these great favors should have drawn and kept him very close to God (I Ki. ix, 2; xi, 9).

"And God said, Ask what I shall give thee." It is written that Ahasuerus said to Queen Esther, "What is thy request? It shall be even given thee to the half of the kingdom." And that Solomon gave unto the queen of Sheba all her desire, whatsoever she asked (Esther v, 3, 6; I Kings x, 13); but here is the King of Kings saying to King Solomon, "Ask what I shall give thee." This same Lord said once to a poor blind beggar, "What wilt thou that I shall do unto thee?" (Luke xviii, 41) and is saying today, "Ask and ye shall receive."

Our lesson today seems to divide itself naturally into four parts: The Lord's appearance and offer to Solomon in verse 5, which we have briefly considered; Solomon's request, verses 6-9; the Lord's reply, verses 10-14; Solomon's thank offering, verse 15.

6-9. "And Solomon said, Thou hast shewed unto thy servant David, my father, great mercy." Acknowledgment of mercies received is always most appropriate in all our approaches to God; "Acknowledge Him in all thy ways," "In everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known to God." (Prov. iii, 6; Phil. iv, 6.)

"He walked before Thee in truth, and in righteousness, and in uprightness of heart with Thee." This is his testimony to God concerning his father; happy the fathers who can have such testimony given concerning them by their sons.

"I am but a little child; I know not how to go out or come in." This is his testimony concerning himself, and his unfitness in himself, for the high position to which he had been called.

"Thy people which Thou hast chosen." They are the Lord's people whom He has chosen to make Him a name, and Solomon is the Lord's representative among them.

"Give therefore Thy servant an understanding heart to judge Thy people." In the parallel passage in II Chron. i, 7-12, his request is stated to be for wisdom and knowledge that he may go out and in before the people and judge them.

10-14. "And the speech pleased the Lord, that Solomon had asked this thing." It is beautiful to read of any one pleasing God; Jesus said of Himself, "I do always those things that please Him" (John viii, 29), and the Father testified of Jesus on two different occasions, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased" (Matt. iii, 17; xvii, 5.)

"Understanding to discern judgment." It pleased the Lord that he had not asked riches nor long life, but this one thing—the power to discern right and wrong and to do the right, or in one word, "Righteousness." This is one peculiar feature of the character of Jehovah that "The righteous Lord loveth righteousness" (Ps. xi, 7), and above all places is this desirable in a ruler.

"Behold, I have done according to thy words; lo, I have given thee a wise and an understanding heart." In chapter iv, 20-29, we read that Judah and Israel were many as the sand which is by the sea in multitude, and that God gave Solomon wisdom and understanding exceeding much, and largeness of heart, even as the sand which is on the seashore; which certainly indicates that, though the people were so numerous, Solomon would have wisdom given him to govern them aright, yet none like him.

"I have also given thee that which thou hast not asked, both riches and honor." How diligently people seek that which may get them food and raiment and have little or no time left to seek God, while He keeps saying, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added into you;" offering to do for us exceeding abundantly above all we ask or think (Matt. vi, 33; Eph. iii, 20).

"If thou wilt walk in my ways, * * * then I will lengthen thy days." Wisdom is given him for the asking, riches and honor without being asked for, but length of days is promised only on condition of obedience.

15. "And Solomon awoke; and behold it was a dream." It was, however, a dream to some purpose, for the Lord was in it as He was in the dreams of Jacob, Joseph his son, Nebuchadnezzar, Daniel, Joseph, husband of Mary, Pilate's wife, and others. God does sometimes even to this day reveal His will in a dream or vision of the night, concerning special guidance on unusual matters; but ordinarily He does not reveal Himself except by His Word, and never in conflict with it. Whatever is not in perfect agreement with the Word of God proceeds not from God but from the prince of darkness. (Isa. viii, 20.) "He came to Jerusalem * * * and offered up burnt offerings and peace offerings." The burnt offering typified our Lord Jesus offering Himself wholly to God, every thought, word and deed acceptable, and appreciated only by God. The peace offering was partly burnt and partly eaten, partaken of both by God and man, and shows how when we truly believe in Jesus we have fellowship with God, God being well pleased with His Dear Son and delighting in Him, when we become well pleased with Jesus and delight in Him as our Saviour, then God is well pleased with us for Jesus' sake and we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. He is our Peace. (Rom. v, 1; Eph. ii, 14.)

The Great Cronin Trial Nearing the End.

EVIDENCE AGAINST THE SUSPECTS.

Bourk, Coughlin, O'Sullivan and Kunze in a Very Unpleasant Position—Sensational Testimony Given by a German Washwoman—She Heard the Murdered Doctor's Death Cries and Struggles.

CHICAGO, Nov. 11.—The testimony in the Cronin case Saturday was not sensational, the most important probably being that of the expert physicians as to the character of the blood found on the cottage floor and in the trunk. A teaspoonful of liquid blood was found in the latter and Professor Haines and Dr. W. T. Belfield, both of this city and both microscopists of many years experience, swore that it was human blood. The defense tried to weaken their evidence by showing that the blood of puppies of a certain age is identical with that of human beings, but taken with all the circumstances under which the blood was found the effort did not prove much of a success.

The Doctor's Hair.

A few human hairs were found on a piece of soap in the cottage and these had been also examined. The doctors both held to the view that they were identical with hairs taken from Cronin's head.

Gerhard Wardel said he saw two men, one about 5 feet 11 inches high and the other about 5 feet 8 inches go into the Carlson cottage the night of the murder about 10:30. Another witness passed the cottage about 7 a. m. May 5 and saw drops of blood on the sidewalk in front of the cottage and remarked at the time that somebody's nose had been bleeding. Other witnesses testified to seeing Coughlin and Kunze together as though they were friends.

The prosecution announced just after adjournment that all the state's evidence would be in probably by Wednesday night.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this receipt in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. Noyes, 149 Powers block, Rochester, N. Y.

THE DOCTOR'S DEATH CRY.

Heard by a German Woman Who Tells the Tragic Story in Court.

CHICAGO, Nov. 13.—The missing link in the drive of Dr. Cronin to the Carlson cottage was the fixing of his arrival at that place of murder. This link was supplied yesterday by the state producing Mrs. Paulina Hoertel, a small, plain-looking German woman of the laboring class, who gave her evidence in a positive manner, as if she was sure of her statements. She said that on the night of the murder she was returning from a search for her husband, who was a too-frequent visitor to a neighboring saloon. It was about 8:30 p. m. when she arrived near the cottage, when she saw a buggy with a white horse drive up, two men occupying the vehicle. One of them, a tall man, got out, picked up a box or sachel, and went up to the cottage door. The other drove off in the direction of the city. The man who got out looked like a gentleman and was well-dressed. She then proceeded:

"The man went up the steps not very fast, and when he got to the top the door was opened and he went inside, and the door closed. I was just passing the house then, and I heard some one inside cry 'O God! O Jesus!' then there was the sound of a blow, then some one fell. I thought there was a fight going on. The voice of the one I heard seemed to be muffled, and then it died out. Then I went home."

Police Officer McKinnon, of Winnipeg, Man., testified that when Bourk was arrested there he had $53 in money and tickets to Montreal and for passage across the Atlantic, made out in the name of W. J. Cooper. He acknowledged that his name was Bourk.

Destructive Blaze at Davenport, Iowa.

DAVENPORT, Iowa, Nov. 16.—The Bettendorf Wheel works burned Saturday. The works were one of the leading manufacturing industries of the city, and were owned by Mr. Bettendorf and the Eagle Manufacturing company. The loss will reach $150,000.

Thirty-Two Trotting Horses Cremated.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 15.—Shortly after 12 o'clock yesterday morning Look & Smith's stables, in the southeast part of the city, together with thirty-two head of trotting stock, were destroyed by fire. Loss, $25,000; insurance, unknown.

K. B KING OF THE BLOOD

The Most Thorough Purifier of the Blood Yet Discovered.

Cures all Humors, from a Common Pimple to the worst Scrofula.

It purifies the Blood.
It invigorates the Liver.
It regulates the Bowels.
It strengthens the stomach.
It gives vivacity in place of lassitude; cheerfulness in place of gloom, and robust vigor in place of debility.

Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Disordered Liver, Constipation, Nervous Affections, General Debility, in short all the numerous diseases and discomforts caused by impure blood are speedily conquered by this powerful corrector, the chief and sovereign of all ancient or modern medical discoveries—KING OF THE BLOOD.

Its name is its best description as it is a royal dispenser of the blessings of health and vanquishes the foes that lurk in the blood.

It banishes PIMPLES, SALT RHEUM, SCALY ERUPTIONS, ULCERS, SCALD HEAD, FEVER SORES, and all SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

It checks CONSUMPTION in its early stages. It has frequently cured it when advanced.

It disperses TUMORS and CANCERS without the Surgeon's knife.

It cures DROPSY, general or partial.

It cures FEMALE WEAKNESS and DISEASE.

It reduces in a safe and effectual manner all swellings, external or internal.

It eradicates the effects of Venerial Disease and Mineral Poisons and establishes a sound constitution.

Many certificates, much further information and full directions for using, will be found in the pamphlet, "Treatise on Diseases of the Blood," in which each bottle is enclosed.

Price $1 per bottle containing 12 ounces, or 50 doses. Sold by druggists or by mail.

If your druggist does not happen to have it on hand, request him to order a supply of it for you and it will be cheaper than for you to order direct of us, and less trouble.

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railroad has over 3000 miles of road, magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the coast, still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Cassleton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China, Japan, and the journey to the Pacific Coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a lifetime once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

WEDDING BELLS.

About fifty friends and relatives from Detroit, Tecumseh and Clinton assembled at the home of S. P. Sheldon at Newburg Thursday evening, Nov. 14, to witness the marriage of his daughter, Helen L. to Charles W. McNeil. During the execution of the wedding march by Miss Etta Coddington, the bridal couple took their places, attended by Miss Mary Adkins and Mr. Earle Sheldon, and the nuptual ceremony was then performed by Rev. F. Adkins. The usual congratulations and refreshments followed and a pleasant evening of social enjoyment was passed by the guests. The injunction of "no presents" on the cards of invitation was generally neglected, for there was a beautiful display of wedding gifts, not only from friends who were present, but from those who sent regrets from New York, Illinois and other states. The bride's early life was spent in the state of New York, but since her removal to Michigan she has made many warm friends. The groom is a young man of excellent social position and personal worth, of whom nothing but good can be said. The HERALD cordially extends its congratulations and heartily joins with their other friends in wishing them a long life of happiness and prosperity.

HIGH SCHOOL HAPPENINGS.

Items have been quite scarce for the last few weeks.

There will be no school next Thursday or Friday.

Monday's essay was delivered by Mattie Kehoe and Wednesday's by Maggie Hain.

Miss Elida James and Royal DeWolf visited our school Tuesday morning.

Tuesday morning we received a letter from our former teacher, Miss Lamb. It was dated at Perington, Mich., where she seems to be enjoying herself to the fullest extent.

Friday is examination day. It is hoped it will be a holiday for some.

Miss May Kingan is suffering from the effect of one of "Job's Comforters."

The Pupils of the High School would be very glad if the council would take it in hand, and build a new side walk on Ottawa Street.

The seventh and eighth grades are preparing for Thanksgiving exercises to be given on Wednesday of next week.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

It is with pleasure that we announce to our many patrons that we have again made arrangements with that wide awake illustrated farm magazine, the American Farmer, published at Fort Wayne, Ind., and read by nearly 200,000 farmers, by which that great publication will be mailed direct free, to the address of any of our subscribers who will come in and pay up all arrearages on subscription and one year in advance from date, and to any new subscriber who will pay one year in advance. The American Farmer is a 16 page journal, of national circulation, which ranks among the leading agricultural papers. It treats the question of economy in agriculture and the rights and privileges of that vast body of citizens—American Farmers—whose industry is the basis of all material and national prosperity. The regular subscription price of the American Farmer is $1.00 per year. It costs you nothing. From any one number ideas can be obtained that will be worth thrice the subscription price to you or members of your household, yet you get it free. Call and see sample copy.

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.

Having purchased M. P. Brown's photo gallery, I will move into his rooms on Nov. 4. I still retain the rooms now occupied by me, but will do operating in Mr. Brown's gallery. This enables me to furnish the public with a better class of work than heretofore. I intend to make a specialty of life-size photo work and all kinds of enlarged pictures. You will also find a good line of picture frames, and in fact anything connected with my line of business. Hoping to be able to retain Mr. Brown's trade, I will endeavor to please the public and furnish them with a class of work second to none in Southern Michigan, and at reasonable prices. Thanking one and all for their past favors, I hope to retain their further patronage. Call and see me in my new quarters.

W. L. HECK.

N.B.—Mr. Brown will be at the gallery a short time to assist in anything that needs attention from his old customers.

The breath of a chronic catarrh patient is often so offensive that he becomes an object of disgust. After a time ulceration sets in, the spongy bones are attacked and frequently entirely destroyed. A constant source of discomfort is the dripping of the purulent secretions into the throat, sometimes producing inveterate bronchitis, which in its turn has been the exciting cause of pulmonary disease. The brilliant results which have attended its use for years past properly designate Ely's Cream Balm as by far the best and only cure.

We want some wood and we want it now.

Popular discrimination in favor of Dr Bull's Cough Syrup has given it a larger sale than any other remedy of its class. Price 25 cents.

ORANGE BLOSSOMS.

Tecumseh parted with another of her fair daughters yesterday, as also did Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Heesen. At two o'clock in the afternoon about sixty five guests assembled at Mr. Heesen's residence and witnessed the ceremony that made Miss Honah Heesen and Mr. Will Meyer of Nashville Ill. man and wife. The words were pronounced by Rev. W. H. Babbitt, after which followed congratulations.

The couple took the afternoon Lake Shore train for Toledo, and they will go from there to the groom's home. Mr. Meyer holds a position as bookkeeper in a large flour mill in Nashville, and although we are not acquainted with him, he certainly shows good taste in the selection of a help mate for life's journey. The array of presents was large and beautiful. Among the out of town guests present were Miss Anna Nyland and Mrs Ellen Niheamp, of Cleveland; Mrs. J. L. Trann, of Ithica, Mrs. Keuhl of Nashville Ill, Mrs. Dr. Todd and Miss Helen Todd, and Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Wiggins of Adrian. The HERALD heartily joins in the good wishes and God-speeds, which will accompany the bride to her western home.

BRAINARD'S MUSICAL WORLD.

The October number of this popular musical monthly is on our table, and contains besides the usual large amount of interesting musical leading the following new music:

"Love,s Golden Dream" a new waltz-song by Lindsay Lennox the latest London success; "Happy May Rondo" and "Witches Dance" two charming compositions by Karl Merz and "Kirmess Parade March" a very effective aud pleasing composition for piano. The publishers of the World have just issued a 200 page volume entitled "The Musician's Guide" which contains a vast amount of musical information, portraits and biographies of prominent composers, etc., and the following new music:

"Sounds from St. John,' polka staccato by C.S. Brainard now all the rage; "By-Lo-Land" cradle song, by J. C. Macy; "When the Whip-poor will is singing" waltz-song by George Maywood; "The World's Exposition March" by George Schleiffarth, and "Cradle Song" by Rosabel.

Upon receipt of 15 cents in stamps the publishers will mail post-paid a copy of the October World and "The Musician,s Guide" containing all the above new music--nine pieces in all. This music is alone worth about five dollars, ($5 00) in usual sheet form. Address

THE S. BRAINARD SONS CO,
CHICAGO, ILL.

On the 12th of last October was given to the world what all the world has been waiting for—not a new religion, nor a new prophet, but what Hubert Howe Bancroft, in his forthcoming History of Utah, has to say of the many-wived religion, and the prophets Joseph Smith- Brigham Young, and their successors. It is in many respects the most startling episode in the evolution of the American nation. Among the unlearned and superstitious of New York arises a so-called prophet and seer, who soon counts his followers by thousands, the multitude not long afterwards being obliged, from the enmity of their neighbors, to flee first to Ohio, and then to Missouri, and Illinois, and finally to the sandy wilds of Utah, where they gather fresh females from Europe, whom they marry early and often, and multiply prodigiously.

A great commonwealth blossoms in the wilderness; a political trinity appears, founded on the combined principles of theocracy, hierarchy, and patriarchy. All goes well until California gold opens a stream of adventurers through their sacred gardens, to the serious disturbance of practical husbands and spiritual wives. The railroad inflicts another stab, while the gentiles swear that this thing shall not be.

In the fair and philosophical delineation of this phenomenal episode there is a field for the best efforts of the highest historical genius. There is manifest elsewhere nothing like this freak of human progress. It has no parallel in history. We await with deep interest, in common with thousands of others, the appearance of this volume, in the writing of which Mr. Bancroft certainly possesses advantages superior to any who have gone before him, and the best use of which we are confident he has made.

See advertisement in another column for Agents, to whom most liberal terms are offered.

The November Magazine of American History must be seen to be appreciated. It is rich with timely and readable papers, four of which are illustrated. The frontispiece is a new portrait of Charles Carroll of Carrollton, from a bronze medallion by Dr. Charles L. Hogeboom, and the opening article is a brief sketch of the interesting home of this last surviving signer of the Declaration of Independence, by the editor. The second illustration contribution is "A Chapter from the History of Utah," by Hubert Howe, Bancroft. The public has long been impatient for Mr. Bancroft's forthcoming work—to learn what he has to say about the many-wived episode in human progress—and will find in this appetizing chapter that he has treated the beginnings of settlement and government at Salt Lake City with masterly vigor.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH., NOV. 14, 1889

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

J. A. Munger, of Clinton, spent Sunday with his family.

C. K. Spafford, of Manitou Beach, was in town this week.

Jas. Wilson, of Owosso, is visiting Tecumseh friends this week.

See our line of horse blankets and robes. ANDERSON & CO.

Frank Hall has secured a position in the chief engineer's office of the Mich. Central Ry. at Detroit.

There will be services at the Universlist church next Sunday, both morning and evening at the usual hour.

Miss Edith King, of Jackson, a neice of Mrs. J. Davidson, is attending the Tecumseh schools this winter.

Mr. S. Fitzgerald and daughter Inez started for California last Monday afternoon, where they intend to make their future home.

Mrs. M. L. Root heard from some of her dear friends up north Monday. A deer came to her address that day by the American express from AuSable.

The remains of Grant Roper, a colored boy of Detroit, was brought here for interment last Thursday night. He was 17 years old, and a former resident of Tecumseh.

Frank Nyland, Will Hall and Fred Kishpaugh came home Friday from Agricultural college for the winter vacation. Mr. and Mrs. Lyster Dewey will remain at the college.

We see by the Washington papers that our old friend, Col. D. S. Curtis read a paper at the last session of the Industrial Congress, which was very highly commended.

The second social hop of the winter's series will be given at Armory hall, Thanksgiving Eve, Nov. 27th. Music by Hubbard & Macham's orchestra. Bill 50c.

Abner Wilson has begun putting up "Swiss Process Sauer Kraut," and made his first shipments yesterday. He had a good trade in this article last year and expects to largely increase his sales this winter.

Postmaster Underwood, of Addison, was in town Tuesday. He still fills the postoffice chair in that burg, and he fills it in more senses than one. Capt. Allen can't better matters any at Addison. He should allow Mr. Underwood to stay right there.

The two halls in Bidwell's block formerly occupied by the K. of L. and the city band have been rented by the G. A. R. They will be used by the G. A. R. post and Woman's Relief Corps, and will make admirable quarters for the two organizations.

By an oversight in sending the wrong copy, the card of Bancroft's History of Utah which appeared last week was misleading. Agents who want Michigan territory send $1.25 to the History Co., 723 Market st., San Francisco.

Thomas Murphy, of Macon, was in town, yesterday, and gave us a call. We are very glad to see him out again. Although he is still confined to his crutches, he can't stop working. We venture to say that he has husked as much corn this fall as any man on the ridge.

The semi-annual meeting of the Ladies' Missionary societies of the Lenawee Baptist association will be held at the Baptist church of Rollin, Dec. 4, beginning at 7 p.m. Program:
Singing and Scripture reading.
Prayer by pastor.
Address of Welcome.
Response—Mrs. Emma Whitmore of Adrian.
Report of Home Miss. Sec.—Mrs. Wooden of Fairfield.
Report of Foreign Miss. Sec.—Mrs. Nellie Smith of Addison.
Paper, Lord What Will Thou Have Me to do—Mrs. Nellie Adams, of Tecumseh.
Singing. Poem.
Singing—From Greenland's Icy Mountains.
Map exercise—Mrs. Clatworthy of Adrian.
Thursday, Dec. 5, 9:30 a.m.—Devotional meeting led by Mrs. Wooden of Fairfield. Singing and bible reading.
Paper—Mrs. Heck of Tecumseh.
Business. Singing.
MRS. A. P. CODDINGTON, Sec'y.

Tecumseh was treated to a highway robbery on a small scale last Saturday evening. Charlie Wylie and a man named Jim Cooley were talking in the old feed barn corner R. R. and Logan sts. Wylie had a roll of bills in his hands, when suddenly Cooley snatched them and ran. He succeeded in escaping in the darkness, and was not captured until Sunday morning, when Officers Stevens and Kyle found him on Chris. Pocklington's farm, and safely landed him in the village lock-up. Wylie says the amount taken was about $20, but only $5 was found on the prisoner. He was taken to Adrian Monday, but brought back yesterday and had his examination before Justice Davidson. Lawyer Wightman appeared for the defendant and Prosecutor Morgan represented the people. The prisoner pleaded not guilty and was bound over to circuit court, his defense being that the arrest on Sunday without a warrant was illegal.

L. P. Tribou spent Sunday at the state metropolis.

Mrs. L. E. Ogden returned from Charlotte last Friday.

Buy your underwear of Anderson & Co. and save money.

I. N. Hathaway, of Addison, was in town last Tuesday on business.

It took 28 boys, eight men and five dogs over an hour to catch one turkey on Chicago st. last Saturday.

The Library Association have a new lot of books lately purchased in New York, through S. P. Hosmer.

The M. E. church society have purchased of S. P. Hosmer 6 doz. knives and forks to be used at the church suppers.

M. P. Brown expects to have a sample of the sewing machine that took the grand prize over all competitors at the Paris exposition.

Mrs. Spaulding has a night blooming cereus which produced a beautiful blossom last week in the day time. Who can account for that freak?

Twenty tickets for the Adrian Star course have been sold in Tecumseh. A big load drove over last Saturday evening to hear the Levy concert.

We have a few copies of Porter's Naval History of the War for sale. It is altogether the best work of the kind extant. Call at this office and see a copy.

Ex-Sheriff Whitmore and wife, of Adrian, have just returned from a summer's visit in California. Ance is in the best of health since his summer's respite from hard work.

Geo. W. Kinnecut, of South Lyon, in remitting for the HERALD, has a good word to say for the paper, which is fully appreciated. The outlook for next season's wheat crop is very bad in that section.

Beginning with January 1st next, the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., will become one of the editors of The Ladies' Home Journal, of Philadelphia. The famous preacher will have a regular department each month written by himself, with the title, "Under my Study Lamp."

The statistics of land in farms in the spring of 1889, as reported by the supervisors for the farm statistics of 1888-9 shows the whole number of farms reported in the state at 138,913; acres of improved land, 7,865,168; acres of unimproved land, 4,657,082; average size of farms, 90.63 acres.

During a business call at Dundee one day last week we spent half an hour in Gainsley's store. During that time he himself and four clerks were on the jump to wait on customers. Mr. Gainsley is having a big run of trade now. He is evidently leading them all in the dry goods line at Dundee.

M. W. Goodrich is forging right ahead at Dundee. He runs a restaurant and confectionery store, takes regular boarders and gets warm meals at all hours. He also now runs a feed barn for the farmers. He is worked pretty hard, but he doesn't mind that for he is gathering in the ducats.

Judge Robbins has issued a circular tersely and clearly pointing out the duties of administrators of estates, guardians of minors and commissioners, embodying the legal requirements in such a manner that no one need go astray. It is just what has long been needed and will be appreciated.

The W. C. T. U. will give a supper at their temperance rooms, on Chicago street, one door west of Dr. Jenkins, Friday, Nov. 29. Let all friends of temperance come out and by their presence show whether temperance or the saloon has their sympathies. Supper ten cents, served from 5 to 7 p. m.

The apple crop of Lenawee county this year was probably the largest ever known. The bulk of the crop has been marketed at Clinton, Tecumseh, Blissfield, and Weston. The total number of barrels sold is estimated at 130,000, and the money paid for the crop including cider apples will exceed $250,000.

A private letter from John R. Clarke contains good news. He is now connected with the Redpath Lyceum Bureau, and most of his time throughout the year is filled. He says: "I am in the best courses in the country with the brightest prospects of my life before me. I spent a few hours at Chicago, Sunday the 10th, at the National W. C. T. U., and it was a grand sight to witness the largest aggregation of womanhood this country brings together. I am glad to get the HERALD and wish you continued success."

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." This is a good motto and it is the one adopted by the "Whatsoever Society," a new social club organized among our young people. The club held its first social last Thursday evening at Armory hall. An oyster supper was served at the usual supper hour and ice cream and cake later in the evening. Fortunes were told in a gypsy camp and a fish pond yielded some very strange and remarkable specimens of the finny tribe. Although the weather was awful, yet a fair gathering was present during the evening.

Will Anderson has a change of card this week.

John McCaughan, of Oscoda, is visiting his mother and brother in this village.

On Thursday, Nov. 28th, Thanksgiving day, the Tecumseh postoffice will be open from 7:00 till 9:00 A. M., and from 11:00 A. M. till 1 P. M.

Tecumseh coopers have quit coopering for this fall for the apple barrels are all cooped. Sixteen thousand is a pretty good record for one season's work.

A union Thanksgiving service will be held in the Methodist Episcopal church of Tecumseh, on Thanksgiving day, Nov. 28, at 10:30 a. m., the congregations of the Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian churches uniting in the service. The sermon is to be given by Rev. Wm. H. Babbitt, pastor of the Presbyterian church. A collection will be taken in behalf of the poor, to be divided equally between the uniting churches.

In the December HARPER, George William Curtis will have a word to say about truth-telling in the newspapers. The true Christmas feeling, he thinks would enable one who doubts the veracity of the press to see that "the daily press, in its accumulation of interesting information, and in the variety, interest, and ability of its treatment of great public questions, is just what it claims to be—one of the greatest wonders of the world."

A first-class cow which wants to be traded for a first-class sewing machine should apply at the office of the Adrian LANCE. Cows that give milkpunches, milk shakes with "sticks" in them, or milk containing more than ten per cent, of alcohol, or whose milk ferments in warm weather, need not apply. Rather than have such a cow the LANCE man will drink his tea and coffee without milk, even if the beverages be so strong that his nerves will be shattered, and his head ache as if he had been taking diluted quinine. —Hudson Post.

—Have you seen the five A five mile horse blanket? If not, why not? If you have a horse you need it.

—G. W. Mead has commenced canvassing this town and is meeting with good success. Farmers will save money by waiting to order their nursery stock of him as he represents the largest firm in the world.

—Bankers and brokers can use their money to better advantage than any large corporation. It is for this reason that so many bankers throughout this whole country get their life Insurance of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York. It sells Life Insurance pure and simple. It does not deal in banking. It believes its mission is to furnish life Insurance. And it does this at actual cost. It owns no large and costly buildings, but has on deposit with Insurance Departments more money for the security of its policy than any other company in the world. The Mutual Reserve is the Pioneer Natural Premium Company. It leads the reform movement in life insurance. It is represented here by Millard P. Brown.

—Mrs. H. S. Russell is out of the city for a few days. Anyone wishing instruction in Mme. Kellogg's system of cutting and fitting ladies' and children's garments please leave word with Mrs. G. D. Ellis, cor. Pearl and Shawnee sts.

—The Patrons of Industry have opened a store at L. D. Dewey & Son's on Railroad st., and will pay you the highest price given for poultry or ship it for you for ten per cent. to any eastern city. Bring on all your turkeys next week for Thanksgiving.

—If you want pure buckwheat flour go to the Steam Mill. Delivered free anywhere in the city.
B. BURTCH.

—Plain sewing promptly and reasonably done by Mrs. Ella C. Moir.

—Brown's Cough Syrup is for sale at the H. McClure Co's grocery store.

—Vitalized air or gas for the extraction of teeth without pain at Dr. Snyder's dental office.

—Sixty-five dollars buys the best buggy in the market. Call on Sholes.

—Serviceable and natural looking artificial teeth can be had at Dr. B. F. Snyder's dental office.

—Aching teeth are an abomination and a nuisance. Have them filled at Dr. B. F. Snyder's dental office before they commence to ache, thereby saving much valuable time, trouble, pain and expense.

—We are agents for Smith & Angell's black stockings. If they crock, stain the feet or fade, we will return money to purchaser.

PEDRO BANISHED.

The Brazilian Emperor Shipped Off to Lisbon.

PERSONNEL OF THE NEW EXECUTIVE

A President and Cabinet Chosen and All Quiet—Dom Pedro Given Twenty-Four Hours to Emigrate, but Well Provided for—Portugal on the Anxious Seat.

LONDON, Nov. 16.—Private cablegrams from Rio de Janeiro announce the outbreak of a revolution in Brazil, but give no particulars.

Late dispatches fully confirm the previous reports. The revolution aims at the overthrow of the government and the proclamation of a republic. The army supports the movement. A provisional government has been established, including Senhors Da Fonseca and Benjamin Constant. Among the dispatches received, but not yet officially confirmed, is one saying that Baron Ladario, the minister of marine, has been killed.

PRINCE PEDRO. DOM PEDRO II. EMPRESS OF BRAZIL.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Nov. 18.—The emperor has sailed for Lisbon. He was notified by the provisional government of his deposition, requested to leave Brazil within twenty-four hours, and informed that his civil list would be continued. He was treated with the utmost courtesy.

Bahia opposes the new regime, but most of the other provinces recognize the republic. Dr. Barboza, the new minister of finance, announces that all contracts made by the late imperial government will be maintained by the new government. The city is tranquil, but business is at a standstill.

The New Men in Charge.

An entire new government has been formed, the personnel being as follows: President, Gen. Dodoro da Fonseca; minister of the interior, Aristide Lobo; minister of foreign affairs, Equintin Bocayura; minister of finance, Dr. Barboza; minister of justice, Campos Salles; minister of war, Benjamin Constant; minister of marine, Admiral Vanderholtz; minister of agriculture, Demetris Ribero.

Bocayura is a journalist. Barboza was a member of the chamber of deputies. Constant is a journalist, and a professor in the polytechnic school. Gen. da Fonseca held command of the province of Minas Geraes. He was recently punished for insubordination. The new government has issued a manifesto announcing that the monarchy has been abolished.

The Emperor Hears the News.

The ex-emperor was at his summer palace when the first open step in the revolution was taken. The palace is located at Petropolis, twenty-five miles north of this city, and it is understood that when news of the rebellion reached him his first impulse was to come to Rio de Janeiro at once. His family entreaties, aided by the advice of friends, sufficed to make him abandon this determination. Had he come here there is every probability that much blood would have been shed, as his friends would doubtless have rallied around him. A collision between the loyalists and republicans could only have resulted in easy victory for the latter, who have control of the 5,000 or 6,000 soldiers now in the city.

The Shooting of Baron de la Ria.

It was reported last evening that Baron de la Ria, minister of marine, had been killed, but the rumor was incorrect. He was shot by a party of revolutionary soldiers and seriously wounded, but will recover. With the exception of this attempt to assassinate Baron de la Ria very little disorder has accompanied the revolution, public opinion inclining toward permitting a peaceful experiment with the new government.

Too Zealous for Liberty.

Scarcely more than a year ago the daughter of the venerable Dom Pedro, the emperor of Brazil, acting as a regent in the absence of her father, who was at that time seriously ill in Europe, signed a decree emancipating the slaves throughout the empire in advance of the time when they would become free by the operation of a law fixing the time for their manumission. This act was execrated by the upper classes as an attempt on the part of Princess Isabel to win popular favor at their expense, and this is believed to have had much to do with the revolution.

Portugal May Go the Same Way.

BRUSSELS, Nov. 18.—The Lisbon correspondent of The Independance Belge telegraphs that in Portuguese official circles the overthrow of the empire in Brazil is regarded as final. The royal family of Portugal feels a special sympathy with the deposed imperial family of Brazil, not alone on account of family relationship, but because similar events are not regarded as impossible in Portugal.

The New Brazilian Flag.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—A special to The Times from Rio de Janeiro says Dom Pedro received $2,500,000 in cash and will receive an annual pension of $450,000. The new Brazilian flag is composed of green and gold stripes on a blue field, with nineteen stars.

Thinks Blaine Will Interfere.

BERLIN, Nov. 18.—Commenting upon the chaos likely to result in Rio de Janeiro, The Cologne Gazette says: "Mr. Blaine will hardly resist the temptation to bring America's influence to bear upon the destinies of the south."

Locked Her Children In.

HOPKINSVILLE, Ky., Nov. 16.—A colored woman living in Montgomery county, Tenn., left home, having shut her three little children up alone in her cabin. During her absence the house caught fire and the three children were burned to death; their charred bodies being found in the ruins.

Perhaps It's Jack Himself.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—A man was caught by the Frankfort police Friday night in the act of murdering a woman in the street, a la Jack the Ripper. The body of his victim was horribly mutilated. The fiend gave the name of Bender, but it is believed to be an alias.

Heavy Failure in the Lumber Trade.

OTTAWA, Ont., Nov. 16.—The lumbering firms of J. R. Bost & Co., of Oswego, and James Moir & Co., of Albany, have assigned. Both firms were large purchasers of Ottawa lumber. Nearly $200,000 is involved in the Post failure.

PROSPEROUS COTTON FACTORIES.

Some of Them at Fall River, Mass., Pay 24 Per Cent. Dividends.

FALL RIVER, Mass., Nov. 18.—The prosperity of the cotton mills of this city during the past year is unprecedented. Dividends of thirty-three corporations, representing $18,558,000 capital, amount to $1,950,700, or 9.97 per cent. Dividends in 1888 amounted to 9.85 per cent. Some of the leading mills pay as follows: Granite, 24 per cent.; Troy, 24; Union Cotton, 20; Seaconnet, 17; Wampanoag, 17; Bourne, 14.

The dividends represent but a small part of the earnings. In nearly every mill large amounts have been paid for machinery and extensive improvements, large debts cancelled or diminished, and large sums charged to depreciations.

Indiana's Text Books.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 16.—The commissioners appointed under the act of the legislature providing for a uniform system of text books for the common schools will meet Tuesday, and an investigation of the charges against the company supplying the books will be entered upon. The charges have been formulated, and consist of non-compliance with the contract by furnishing imperfect binding, and by failure to conform in other respects to the samples submitted to the commissioners. A number of witnesses will be summoned and some of the objectionable books will be produced. The company will be formally notified of the proceedings, and given an opportunity to appear before the commissioners.

Mrs. Parnell's Destitute Condition.

BORDENTOWN, N. J., Nov. 18.—Dr. Mozart Jenkins, of Trenton, was called to the residence of Mrs. Delia Parnell Saturday for the purpose of treating that lady. He told a United Press reporter that he found her verging on complete collapse. She is suffering from congestion of the brain and heart. When he called she was about to dine on vegetables without either bread or coffee.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 18.—The members of the Irish National league in this city propose taking immediate action to extend financial relief to Mrs. Parnell.

The Iowa Election.

DES MOINES, Ia., Nov. 14.—The Register claims the election of Poyneer, Rep., for lieutenant governor, by over 2,000. The News by 275, while The Leader's figures do not vary much from the last figures. The errors arising from transmission by telegraph could easily change that result. All the rest of the Republican ticket—that is, judge of the supreme court, superintendent of public instruction and railway commissioner—is elected. The legislative situation is not fully known, but the Republicans have a majority on joint ballot.

The Flood Breeds the Pestilence.

LOCK HAVEN, Pa., Nov. 16.—The evil effects of the June flood on the health of the people of this city and adjacent river towns are beginning to appear. In this city alone 150 cases of malarial and typhoid fever have developed during the last two or three weeks, while at Farrandsville, Wayne, Pine, North Point, Mill Hall and other places a large proportion of the residents are sick. Several deaths have occurred.

The President's Message.

WASHINGTON CITY, Nov. 16.—President Harrison's duck-shooting expedition is the very best of evidence that he has about completed his message to congress, and, in fact, it is known that he has already carried it as far as he can, and is only waiting for the reports of some of his cabinet officers to give it the finishing touches and complete the statistical statements such documents always contain.

Suicided at Shaw's Garden.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 16.—About 10 o'clock Friday night the body of a woman, well dressed and with every appearance of belonging to the best class of society, was found at the entrance of Shaw's garden. The woman had a bullet hole through her head, and it is a case of supposed suicide. So far there is no clew as to her identity except a ring with the letter "H." The police are investigating.

Epidemic of Diphtheria.

ELKHART, Ind., Nov. 16.—Elkhart is undergoing a severe epidemic of diphtheria that has compelled the authorities to close all the schools. Four members of the family of E. N. Bullock have died within a few days, and four others of the family have the disease. Numerous deaths have occurred throughout the city, and the authorities are putting forth strenuous efforts to suppress the malady.

A 11-Year-Old Forger.

BLOOMINGTON, Ind., Nov. 16.—Ottis Brinson, a young boy, aged 14 years, has been arrested here, charged with forgery. In September last he presented a check at the First National bank for a small amount signed by Doyle & Co., and received the same. He has been repeating the work until he has drawn about $250. The young lad confessed the forgery.

Whole Family Frozen to Death.

VIROQUA, Kan., Nov. 18.—Two men came in yesterday morning from the Kenyon ranch, situated on the neutral strip, for five coffins in which to bury the bodies of the Fenn family, consisting of father, mother, and three children, who perished in the terrible blizzard which raged throughout the west two weeks ago.

Eighty-Five Thousand Men Wanted.

WASHINGTON CITY, Nov. 16.—In his annual report Gen. Schofield, commanding general of the army, gives a detailed statement of the number of men necessary to equip seacoast defenses in time of war, and estimates the total number for this at 85,000 artillerymen. There are now on hand 3,325 seacoast guns.

Failure of a Candy Manufacturer.

ATLANTA, Ga., Nov. 16.—M. E. Goldsmith, candy manufacturer, has announced his inability to meet his obligations. His liabilities are estimated at $100,000, and assets at the same amount. A receiver has been appointed to wind up the affairs of the concern.

Foraker's Running Mate Beaten.

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 18.—Secretary of State Ryan gave out last evening tabulated returns of the election by counties on all candidates and amendments. The Republican candidate for lieutenant governor is defeated by only 21 votes.

Beat the Ann Arbor Boys Badly.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Nov. 18.—The foot-ball match between Cornell university and the University of Michigan was played here Saturday afternoon at Olympic park, and was won by Cornell by a score of 66 to 0.

Yellow Fever at Key West.

WASHINGTON CITY, Nov. 16.—Surgeon General Hamilton of the Marine hospital service has received a telegram from Dr. Posey, reporting one pronounced, and one suspicious case of yellow fever at Key West.

MORTGAGE SALES.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of a certain mortgage bearing date March 8, A.D., 1881, made by George L. Bidwell and his wife, Frances Bidwell, to William J. Cocker and Isabella M. Cocker; which said mortgage was on the Ninth day of March, A. D., 1881, duly recorded in the office of Register of Deeds for Lenawee County, Michigan, in Liber 100 of mortgages on page 698; And which said mortgage was afterward, to wit, on the 19th day of April, A.D., 1888, duly assigned to Birdsey J. Bidwell, by said William J. Cocker and Isabella M. Cocker, which deed of assignment was on the 29th day of April A.D., 1888, duly recorded in the office of Register of Deeds for Lenawee County aforesaid in Liber 117 of mortgages on page 537; by which default the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. And whereas there is at this date claimed to be due and unpaid as principal and interest on the said mortgage the sum of Five Hundred and Ninety-two and 86-100 Dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law or in equity to collect the same. Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale and the statutes of the state of Michigan in such case made and provided, for the purpose of realizing the money now as aforesaid due and owing on said mortgage, together with the interest to accrue thereon and costs and charges of this foreclosure, including an attorney fee of Twenty-five Dollars as provided by law and stipulated for in said mortgage, I shall on the Twenty-seventh day of January, A.D., 1890, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at the east front door of the court house in the city of Adrian, in said Lenawee County, (that being the place where the circuit court for said county is holden) sell at public vendue to the highest bidder all that parcel of land situate in the city of Adrian, Lenawee County, Michigan, described as follows, viz.: All the land of the parties of the first part situate on the "Flats," (so called) in said city, bounded on the easterly limit by Winter street, on the south by the northern boundary line of Remington's addition, on the west by College avenue, (or Water street, as is designated on Willitts & Bird's Wall map of 1871) and on the north by the southern boundary line of residence lots, said lots fronting on Church and Winter streets in said city, being in all Three (3) acres of land, more or less; and being same land conveyed in part to said George L. Bidwell by Andrew Clement by deeds recorded book 52, follos 248, 249, and book 52, follos 472, 473, and in part convey to George L. Bidwell by Langford G. Berry by deed, recorded in book 52, follos 250, 251, and in part by William K. Choate by deed of record in book 53, follos 116, 117, and in part by deed from Nathan Choate, of record in book 68 follos 115, 116. Books refered to being part of Lenawee County records.

Dated Oct. 28th, 1889.

ESTATE OF JOHN BECKLEY.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, ss.

At a session of the Probate Court for the county of Lenawee, holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, on Monday, the 4th day of November, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine.

Present Richard B. Robbins, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of John Beckley, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of George Smith, executor of the last will and testament of said deceased and upon the estate of said deceased, respectfully represents that the funeral expenses and debts of said deceased and the expenses of administration thus far incurred have been fully paid, and that he is now ready to close said estate and to render his final administration account, which he prays may be allowed, and that he may be discharged, and his bond cancelled, and for such other order and decree as to this court shall seem proper.

It is ordered, That Monday, the 2d day of December next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate office, in the City of Adrian, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of said Petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said Petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County of Lenawee for three successive weeks, previous to said day of hearing.

RICHARD B. ROBBINS, Judge of Probate.

THE ODELL TYPE WRITER

$15 will buy the ODELL TYPE WRITER. Warranted to do as good work as any $100 machine.

It combines simplicity with durability—speed ease of operation—wears longer without cost of repairs than any other machine; has no ink ribbon to bother the operator. It is neat, substantial, nickel plated—perfect and adapted to all kinds of typewriting. Like a printing press it produces sharp, clean, legible manuscripts. Two to ten copies can be made at one writing. Editors, lawyers, ministers, bankers, manufacturers, business men, etc., cannot make a better investment for $15. Any intelligent person in a week can become a good operator, or a rapid one in two months.

$100 offered any operator who can do better work with a typewriter than that produced by the ODELL. Remember Agents and salesmen wanted. Special inducements to dealers. For pamphlets, giving endorsements, etc., address the

CLEOPATRA.

Being an Account of the Fall and Vengeance of Harmachis, the Royal Egyptian.

Then, with a shriek of pain and fury—for those who smite love, not that they be smitten—did he turn, and spring at me! And all the people round gave back, save only the woman who could not rise, leaving us twain in a ring, as it were. On he came with a rush, and, as he came, being now mad, I smote him with my clenched fist between the eyes, having naught else wherewith to smite, and he staggered like an ox beneath the first blow of the priest's axe. Thereat the people shouted, for they love to see a fight, and the man was known to them as a gladiator victorious in the games. Gathering up his strength, the knave came on with an oath, and, whirling his heavy staff on high, struck at me in such a fashion that, had I not by nimbleness avoided the blow, I had surely been slain. But as it chanced, the staff hit upon the ground, and so heavily that it flew in fragments. Thereon again the multitude shouted, and the great man, blind with fury, rushed at me to smite me down. But with a cry I sprang straight at his throat—for he was so heavy a man that I knew I could not hope to throw him by strength—ay, and gripped it. There I clung, though his fists battered me like bludgeons, driving my thumbs into his throat. Round and round we turned, till at length he flung himself to the earth, trusting thus to shake me off. But I held on fast as we rolled over and over on the ground, till at last he grew faint for want of breath. Then I, being uppermost, drave my knee down upon his chest, and, as I believe, should thus have slain him in my rage, had not my uncle and others there gathered fallen upon me and dragged me from him.

And meanwhile, though I knew it not, the chariot wherein sat the Queen, with elephants going before and lions led after it, had come even to the spot, and because of the tumult had been halted. I looked up, and thus torn, panting, my white garments stained with the blood that had rushed from the mouth and nostrils of the mighty Nubian, I for the first time saw Cleopatra face to face. Her chariot was all of gold, and drawn by milk-white steeds. Therein she sat with two fair girls, clad in Greek attire, standing one on either side fanning her with glittering fans. There she sat in the splendid car. On her head was the covering of Isis, the golden horns between which rested the moon's round disk and the emblem of Osiris' throne, with the uræus twined around. Beneath the covering was the vulture cap of gold, the blue enameled wings, and the vulture head with gemmy eyes, under which her long, dark tresses flowed toward her feet. About her rounded neck was a broad collar of gold studded with emeralds and coral. Round her arms and wrists were bracelets of gold studded with emeralds and coral, and in one hand she held the holy symbol of life (crux ansata) fashioned of crystal, and in the other the golden rod of royalty. Her breast was bare, but under was a garment that glistened like the scaly covering of a snake, everywhere sewn with gems. Beneath this robe was a skirt of golden cloth, half hid by a scarf of the broidered silk of Cos, falling in folds even to the sandals that, fastened with great pearls, adorned her white and tiny feet.

All this I discerned at a glance, as it were. Then I looked upon the face—that face which seduced Cæsar, ruined Egypt and was doomed to give Augustus the scepter of the world. I looked upon the flawless Grecian features, the rounded chin, the full, rich lips, the chiseled nostrils and the ears fashioned like delicate shells. I saw the forehead, low, broad and lovely, the crisped, dark hair falling in heavy waves that sparkled in the sun, the arched eyebrows and the long bent lashes. There before me was the grandeur of her imperial shape. There burnt the wonderful eyes, hued like the Cyprian violet—eyes that seemed to sleep and brood on secret things as night broods upon the desert, and yet as the night to shift, change and be illumined by gleams of sudden splendor born within their starry depths. All those wonders I saw though I have small skill in telling them. But even then I knew that it was not in these charms alone that the might of Cleopatra's beauty lay. Rather was it in a glory and a radiance cast through the fleshy covering from the fierce soul within. For she was a Thing of flame like unto which no woman hath ever been nor ever will be. Even when she brooded, the fire of her quick heart shone through her. But when she woke, and the lightning leapt suddenly from her eyes, and the passion-laden music of her speech chimed upon her lips, ah! then who can tell how Cleopatra seemed? For in her met all the splendors that have been given to woman for her glory, and all the genius which man has drawn from Heaven. And with them dwelt every evil of that greater sort which fearing nothing and making a mock of laws, hath taken empires for its place of play, and, smiling, watered the growth of its desires with the rich blood of men. In her breast they gathered, together fashioning that Cleopatra whom no man may draw, and yet whom no man, having seen, ever can forget. They fashioned her grand as the Spirit of Storm, lovely as Lightning, cruel as Pestilence, yet with a heart; and what she did is known. Woe to the world when such another comes to curse it!

For a moment I met Cleopatra's eyes as she idly bent herself to find the tumult's cause. At first they were somber and dark, as though they saw, indeed, but the brain read naught. Then they awoke, and their very color seemed to change as the color of the sea changes when the wind is shaken. First, there was anger written in them; next, an idle noting; then when she looked upon the huge bulk of the man whom I had overcome, and knew him for the gladiator, something, perchance, that was not far from wonder. At the least they softened, though, indeed, her face changed not a wit. But he who would read Cleopatra's mind had need to watch her eyes, for her countenance varied but a little. Turning, she said some words to her guards. They came forward and led me to her, while all the multitude waited silently to see me slain.

I stood before her, my arms folded on my breast. Overcome though I was by the wonder of her loveliness, I hated in my heart, this woman who dared to clothe herself in the dress of Isis—this usurper who sat upon my throne, this wanton squandering the wealth of Egypt in chariots and perfumes. When she had looked me over from the head to the feet she spake in a low full voice and in the tongue of Khemi, which she alone had learned of all the Lagidæ:

"And who and what art thou, Egyptian—for Egyptian I see thou art—who darest to smite my slave when I make progress through my city?"

"I am Harmachis," I answered, boldly—"Harmachis the astrologer, adopted son of the High Priest and Governor of Abouthis, who am come hither to seek my fortune. I smote thy slave, O Queen, because for no fault he struck down the woman yonder. Ask of those who saw, Royal Egypt."

"Harmachis!" she said; "the name hath a high sound—and thou hast a high look." And then speaking to a soldier who had seen all, she bade him tell her what had come to pass. This he did truthfully, being friendly disposed toward me, because I had overcome the Nubian. Thereon she turned and spoke with the girl bearing the fan who stood beside her—a woman having curling hair and shy, dark eyes, very beautiful to see. The girl answered somewhat. Then Cleopatra bade them bring the slave to her. So they led forward the giant, who had found his breath again, and with him the woman whom he had smitten down.

"Thou dog!" she said, in the same low voice; "thou coward! who, being strong, didst smite down this woman, and, being a coward, wast overthrown of this young man. See, thou, I will teach thee manners. Henceforth, when thou smitest women, it shall be with thy left arm. Ho, guards, seize this black coward and strike off his right hand."

And her command given, she sank back in her golden chariot, and again the cloud gathered in her eyes. But the guards seized the giant, and, notwithstanding his cries and prayers for mercy, struck off his hand with a sword upon the wood of the scaffolding, and he was carried away groaning. Then the procession moved on again. As it went the fair woman with the fan turned her head, caught my eye, and smiled and nodded as though she rejoiced, whereat I wondered somewhat.

The people cheered also and made jests, saying that I should soon practice astrology in the palace. But as soon as we might I and my uncle escaped, and made our way back to the house. All the while he rated me for my rashness; but when we came within the chamber of the house he embraced me and rejoiced greatly, because with so little hurt to myself I had overthrown the giant.

CHAPTER IX.

OF THE COMING OF CHARMION, AND OF THE WRATH OF SEPA.

THAT same night while we sat at supper in the house, there came a knock upon the door. It was opened, and a woman passed in, wrapped from head to foot in a large dark peplos or cloak in such fashion that her face could not be clearly seen.

My uncle rose, and as he did so the woman uttered the secret word.

"I am come, my father," she said in a sweet, clear voice, "though of a truth it was not easy to escape the revels at the palace. But I told the Queen that the sun and the riot in the streets had made me sick, and she let me go."

"It is well," he answered. "Unvail thyself; here thou art safe."

With a little sigh of weariness she unclasped the peplos and let it slip from her, giving to my sight the face and form of that beauteous girl who had stood to fan Cleopatra in the chariot. For she was very fair and pleasant to look upon, and her Grecian robes clung sweetly about her supple limbs and budding form. Her wayward hair, flowing in a hundred little curls, was bound with a golden fillet, and on her feet were sandals. Her cheeks blushed like a flower, and her dark soft eyes were downcast, as though with modesty, but smiles and dimples trembled about her lips.

My uncle frowned when his eyes fell upon her dress.

"Why comest thou in this garb, Charmion?" he asked, sternly. "Is not the dress thy mothers wore good enough for thee? This is no time or place for woman's vanities. Thou art not here to conquer, but to obey."

"Nay, be not wroth, my father," she answered, softly; "perchance thou knowest not that she whom I serve will have none of our Egyptian dress; it is out of fashion. To wear it would have been to court suspicion—also I came in haste." And as she spoke I saw that all the while she watched me covertly through the long lashes which fringed her modest eyes.

"Well, well," he said, sharply, fixing his keen glance upon her face, "doubtless thou speakest truth, Charmion. Be ever mindful of thy oath, girl, and of the cause to which thou art sworn. Be not light-minded, and I charge thee forget the beauty with which thou hast been cursed. For mark thou this, Charmion; fail us but one jot and vengeance shall fall on thee—the vengeance of man and the vengeance of the Gods! To this service," he continued, lashing himself to anger as he went on, till his great voice rang in the narrow room, "hast thou been bred; to this end hast thou been instructed and placed where thou art, to gain the ear of that wicked wanton whom thou seemest to serve. See thou forget it not; see that the luxury of yonder court does not corrupt thy purity and divert thy aim, Charmion." And his eyes flashed and his small form seemed to grow till it attained to dignity—nay, almost to grandeur. "Charmion," he said, advancing toward her with outstretched finger, "I say to thee that at times I do not trust thee. But two nights gone I dreamed I saw thee standing in the desert. I saw thee laugh and lift thy hand to heaven, and therefrom fell a rain of blood; then the sky sank down on the land of Khem and covered it. Whence came the dream, girl, and what is its meaning? Naught have I against thee as yet; but hearken! On the moment that I have, though thou art of my kin, and I have loved thee—on that moment, I say, will I doom those delicate limbs, which thou lovest so much to show, to the kite and to the jackal, and the soul within thee to all the tortures of the Gods! Unburied shalt thou die, and bodiless and accursed shalt thou wander in Amenti!—ay, forever and ever!"

He paused, for his sudden burst of passion had spent itself. But by it, more clearly than before, I saw how deep a heart had this man beneath the cloak of his merriness and simplicity of mien, and how fiercely the mind within him was set upon his aim. As for the girl, she shrank from him terrified, and, placing her hands before her face, began to weep.

"Nay, speak not so, my father," she said, between her sobs; "for what have I done? Naught know I of the evil wandering of thy dreams. I am no soothsayer that I should read dreams. Have I not carried out all things according to thy desire? Have I not been even mindful of that dread oath?"—and she trembled. "Have I not played the spy and told thee all? Have I not won the heart of the Queen so that she loves me as a sister, refusing me nothing, ay, and the hearts of those about her? Why dost thou affright me thus with thy words and threats?" And she wept afresh, looking even more beautiful in her sorrow than she was before.

"Enough, enough," he answered; "what I have said I have said. Be warned, and affront our sight no more with this wanton dress. Thinkest thou that we would feed our eyes upon those rounded arms—we whose stake is Egypt and who are dedicated to the Gods of Egypt? Girl, behold thy cousin and thy King!"

She ceased weeping, wiping her eyes with her chiton, and I saw that they seemed but the softer for her tears.

"Methinks, most Royal Harmachis and beloved cousin," she said, as she bent before me, "that we are already made acquainted."

"Yea, cousin," I answered, not without shamefacedness, for never before had I spoken to so fair a maid; "thou wert in the chariot with Cleopatra this day when I struggled with the Nubian."

"Assuredly," she said, with a smile and a sudden lighting of the eyes, "it was a gallant fight, and gallantly didst thou overthrow that black brute. I saw the fray, and, though I knew thee not, greatly did I fear for one so brave. But I paid him for my fright, for it was I who put it into the mind of Cleopatra to bid the guards strike off his hand—now, knowing who thou art, I would I had said his head." And she looked up, shooting a glance at me, and then smiled.

"Enough," put in my uncle Sepa, "the time draws on. Tell thou thy mission, Charmion, and be gone."

Thereon her manner changed. She folded her hands meekly before her and spake:

"Let Pharaoh hearken unto his handmaiden. I am the daughter of Pharaoh's uncle, the brother of his father, who is now long dead, and therefore in my veins also flows the Royal blood of Egypt. Also I am of the ancient faith, and hate these Greeks, and to see thee set upon the throne has been my dearest hope now for many years. To this end have I, Charmion, become serving-woman to Cleopatra, that I might cut a notch wherein thou couldst set thy foot when the hour came to climb the throne. And behold! O Pharaoh, the notch is cut.

"This, then, is our plot, Royal cousin: Thou must gain an entrance to the Household and learn its ways and secrets, and, so far as may be, suborn the eunuchs and captains, some of whom I have already tempted. This done, and all things being prepared without, thou must slay Cleopatra, and, aided by me, with those whom I control, in the confusion that shall ensue throw wide the gates, and, admitting those of our party who are in waiting, put such of the troops as remain faithful to the sword and seize the Bruchium. Which being done, thou shalt within two days hold this fickle Alexandria. At the same time, those who are sworn to thee in every city in Egypt shall rise in arms, and within ten days from the death of Cleopatra thou shalt be Pharaoh indeed. This is the counsel which has been taken, and thou seest, Royal cousin, that, though your uncle yonder doth think so ill of me, I have learned my part—ay, and played it."

"I hear thee, cousin," I answered, marveling that so young a woman, for she had but twenty years, could weave so bold a plot, for in its origin the scheme was hers. But in those days I little knew Charmion. "Go on; how then shall I gain entrance to the palace of Cleopatra?"

"Nay, cousin, as things are it is easy. Thus: Cleopatra loveth to look upon a man, and—give me pardon—thy face and form are fair. To-day she noted them, and twice she said she would she had asked where that astrologer might be found, for she held that an astrologer who could well-nigh slay a Nubian gladiator with his bare hands must indeed be a master of the stars. I answered her that I would cause inquiry to be made. So hearken, Royal Harmachis. At midday Cleopatra sleeps in her inner hall that looks over the gardens to the harbor. At that hour, then, will I meet thee at the gates of the Palace, whither come thou boldly asking for the Lady Charmion. I will make appointment for thee with Cleopatra, so that she shall see thee alone when she wakes, and the rest shall be for thee, Harmachis. For much she loves to play with the mysteries of magic, and whole nights have I known her stand watching the stars and making a pretense to read them. And but lately hath she sent away Dioscorides, the Physician, in that, poor fool! he ventured on a prophecy from the conjunction of the stars that Cassius would defeat Mark Antony. Thereon Cleopatra dispatched to the General Alliénus, bidding him add the legions she had sent to Syria to help Antony, to the army of Cassius, whose victory, forsooth, was, according to Dioscorides, written on the stars. But, as it chanced, Antony beat Cassius first and Brutus afterward, and so Dioscorides hath departed, and now he lectures for his bread on herbs in the museum, and hates the name of stars. But his place is empty, and thou shalt fill it; and then we will work in secret and in the shadow of the scepter. Ay, we will work like the worm at the heart of a fruit till the time of plucking comes, and on thy dagger's touch, Royal cousin, the fabric of this Grecian throne crumbles to nothingness, and the worm that rotted it bursts his servile covering, and in the sight of empires, spreads his royal wings o'er Egypt."

I gazed at this strange girl once more astonished, and saw that her face was lit up with such a light as I had never seen upon the face of woman.

"Ah!" broke in my uncle, who was watching her, "ah! I love to see thee so, girl. There is the Charmion that I knew and I bred up—not the Court girl, whom I love not, draped in silks of Cos and fragrant with essences. Let thy heart harden in this mold—ay, stamp it with the fervid zeal of patriot faith, and thy reward shall find thee. And now cover up that shameless dress of thine and leave us, for it grows late. To-morrow shall Harmachis come, as thou hast said. And so, farewell."

Charmion bowed her head, and, turning, wrapped her dark-hued peplos around her; then, taking my hand, she touched it with her lips and without any further words she went.

"A strange woman!" said Sepa, when she had gone; "a most strange woman and uncertain."

"Methought, my uncle," I said, "that thou wast somewhat harsh with her."

"Ay," he answered, "but not without a cause. Look thou, Harmachis, beware of this Charmion. She is too wayward, and, I fear me, may be led away. In truth, she is a very woman; and, like a restive horse, will take the path that pleases her. Brain she has, and fire; and she loves our cause; but I pray that the cause come not face to face with her desires, for what her heart is set on that will she do—at any cost will she do it. Therefore did I frighten her now, while I may; for who can know but that she will pass beyond my power? I tell thee that in this one girl's hand lie all our lives; and if she play us false, what then? Alas! and alas! that we must use such tools as these! But it was needful; there was no other way; and yet I misdoubt me. I pray that it may be well; and still, at times, I fear my niece Charmion—she is too fair, and the blood of youth runs too warm in those blue veins of hers. Oh! woe to the cause that builds its strength upon a woman's faith; for women, I say, are faithful only where they love, and when they love their faithlessness becomes their faith.

"AYE, WE WILL WORK LIKE THE WORM AT THE HEART OF THE FRUIT."

ELIXIR OF LIFE AND HEALTH.
Is one that promotes digestion, improves the appetite, cleanses the liver, purifies the blood, and stimulates brain and nerves without injurious reaction, and one that may be taken alike by adult or infant. Profane compounds, made of vile rum or bad whiskey, sweetened or flavored, under the titles of bitters, tonics, &c., produce effects far worse than the disease for which they are taken.
Vinegar Bitters is a pure tonic, a nervine without being narcotic, a blood purifier without poison a liver tonic without purging, and above all, a life-giving stimulant without alcohol. The only medicine with such powers in the world.
A GENUINE TEMPERANCE BEVERAGE,
far surpassing alcohol in any shape as a tonic, and it might be called
LIQUID LIFE,
since it stimulates, invigorates and regulates digestion, nutrition, secretion, excretion, respiration, and all the functions whereby life is maintained—we literally take in vitality in spoonsful.
It is not too much to assert that the equal of Vinegar Bitters does not exist, and no counterpart or compound with similar virtues has ever been known.
CALIFORNIA,
if remarkable for nothing else, would be immortalized by the production of the medicinal fruits, roots and herbs of which this Bitters is composed. Many of them used by the Indians and the medical profession in the treatment of chills and fevers, rheumatism, catarrh consumption, neuralgia, headache, liver complaint, kidney disease, jaundice, gout, piles, boils, skin diseases, &c., &c., too numerous to mention, but easily understood when the action of the Bitters on the vital functions is remembered. COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

Village of Tecumseh Mich.
Council Room, Nov. 4, 1889.

Regular Session.

Present—President Heesen, Messrs. Elliott, James, Kennedy, Smith, Heck Ames and the recorder.

The minutes of the last regular meeting were read and approved.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The chairman of the health committee reported that he had caused the marshal to remove nuisance on Temple, McClare & Co's land.

The president stated that he had collected the license on the opera house for the years 1887, 1888 and 1889.

The street committee reported the new bridge across Evans creek on Maumee street completed at a cost of about $150.00. Report accepted.

REPORTS OF OFFICERS.

The sexton reported one adult interment for the month of November and three lots sold, together with the treasurer's receipt for $10.00 interment fees and vault rent. Accepted and placed on file.

The street commissioner submitted the following report for October;

Hand work 42 days; street commissioner 23 days; team work 5 days, Corporation team 21½ days. Poll tax worked, 10 days. Accepted and placed on file.

The marshal submitted the following report:

Total tax on roll	$5406.00
Poll tax collected	6.27
	$5412.28
By 2 per cent deduction on $3651.87 collected in July	73.03
" unpaid tax returned	129.86
" 3 per cent on $5269.71	153.49
" Cash paid to treasurer	5116.22
	$5466.60
Total per roll	5412.27
	$54.33

The marshal's report on tax-roll was accepted and ordered filed.

The marshal further reported that the following persons had not laid sidewalks as ordered:—Henrietta Keyser, estate of Richard Ford, Mrs. Jas. Mitchell, John McLain. Accepted.

On motion the council passed the following resolution:

RESOLVED, that the common council of the village of Tecumseh do hereby require that a new sidewalk be constructed along that portion of the east line of Ottawa street in this village, which lies along and adjoining the west line of that parcel of land situate in the village of Tecumseh, county of Lenawee and state of Michigan, known and described as follows, viz: Bounded on the north by Central School lot; east by Sabina Frost's lot; south by lot of S. Crane estate; west by Ottawa street. Said walk to be 4 feet in width, of sound pine plank 1½ inches thick, and not exceeding 6 inches in width, laid lengthwise and well spiked down on sound burr or white oak stringers 2x4 inches in size and placed not more than 2½ feet apart and double at joints in the planking, under the supervision of the street commissioner and to be completed within ten days from personal service upon the owner or occupant of said above described land of a copy of this resolution; and in case of any default in the construction and completion of said walk as herein directed, the street commissioner is hereby ordered to construct said walk, and payment therefor shall be required of the owner of said above described land, and the expense thereof assessed and levied on said land in the same manner as other taxes.

On motion J. W. Patterson's tax was remitted.

PETITIONS AND APPLICATIONS.

A committee from Beers Post, G. A. R. appeared before the council and renewed their request, that the Post be allowed to erect a flag staff on the G. A. R. lot in the cemetery. On motion the petition was referred to the cemetery committee.

NEW BUSINESS.

The following bills were received and referred to the finance committee: A. James, $37.60; L. H. Salsbury, $10; Albert Hyde, $3.79; Milan Sage, $127.50; E. A. Doke, $15.00; Satterthwaite Bros. & Boyd, $15.59; Frank Pattison, $18.62; T. R. Kyle, $7.25; L. M. Waldron, $8.90; Jno J. Orr, $29.35, and the following for street labor: E. A. Hodges, $36.00; Robt. A GOOD COUGH SYRUP.

There is nothing parents should be so careful about as selecting a cough syrup. Begg's Cherry Cough Syrup costs no more than the cheap and inferior nostrums thrown on the market. The best is none to good, be sure and get BEGGS' CHERRY COUGH SYRUP. We keep it on hand at all times.

NEWS OF THE STATE

Flint folks have concluded that there is not much profit in illuminating the zodiac, and so have lowered their electric lights to point where they will be of some service in lighting the streets.

Haggai Westbrook, a Kent county farmer, cracked the skulls of his wife and three daughters with a hammer while they were asleep. He also tried to kill a 17-year-old son, but the first blow was a glancing one and awakened the young man, who wrested the weapon from his father's hand. Westbrook then fled to the kitchen below, and seizing a razor, cut his own throat. Financial difficulties are thought to have unbalanced his mind.

It's not often that a girl gets to be both deacon and postmaster, but Ella Deacon is trying her hand at running one of Uncle Sam's letter shops in Alcona county.

Robert Dutton is a wealthy Portland farmer who had lived 73 summers on this 'ere planet without ever so much as taking one little fall in love. But one day not long since he chanced to meet a Leslie widow, and—well, 'twas a case of love at first sight, and straighway he sought the legal credentials that made their fond hearts beat as one. Who says that sentiment is confined to years of youth.

Save your old postage stamps. A Pontiac gentleman has just swapped his collection for $3,000 of Uncle Sam's currency.

Scarlet fever and diphtheria are cutting a wide swath among the young folks at Battle Creek.

The supreme court says that ex-Governor Swineford may return the balance of that $1,000 intrusted to him to make an upper peninsula exhibit at the New Orleans exposition, which means that he'll soon be minus $750 worth of pocket change.

The citizens of far off Japan will do well to be on their guard in future, as one of their number is now at Michigan university studying law and learning Yankee short cuts to other people's wealth.

The recent death of Representative Smith, at Owosso, makes the fourth vacancy in the present legislature caused by death, while three others have accepted better paying jobs, making seven seats to be filled by special elections in case an extra session shall be called.

The course of lectures to be given under the auspices of Perry high school, the coming season, includes the name of Governor Luce among its talkers.

However much the state authorities may dispute the claim, it seems that the stranger who dies within our gates is entitled to decent burial. The case in point was the dead body a man washed ashore in Mackinac county, the local justice providing the necessary cost of burial at state expense, whereupon the Lansing authorities kicked. But the supreme court says the state must pay just the same, kick or no kick. Civilization is evidently advancing.

John Gott, a blind Michigan veteran of the civil war, undertook to fall a tree near his home at Gowen, and succeeded, too. But he'll not cut another as this one came down upon him, crushing him to the earth.

Wherever the new tobacco law has been enforced in this state the sale of cigarettes is said to have fallen off more'n 80 per cent. But the towns where this state of affairs obtains are few and very, very far between.

THE big publishing corporation known as the Methodist Book Concern is preparing to celebrate its centennial anniversary. All churches of the denomination are asked to make December 8 Book Concern day. From the profits of the concern, during its existence, $1,600,000 have been appropriated for denominational interests aside from the fund decreed for the support of superannuated ministers. Rev. John Dickins started the Book Concern with $600, which he borrowed. A feature of the celebration will be the removal into a new home which has cost a million dollars.

Parents cannot always carry the baby on a trip for the recovery of its health. But they can keep Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup in the house, and it will compensate for the trip by its prompt relief.

APPLES WANTED.

The undersigned will pay the highest market price for evaporating apples. Apples can be delivered any day.

About his Brother.

Several years ago my brother, who lives with me, had a very strange sore, to break out on his leg—about half way between the body and the knee—which afterwards developed into a rose cancer. It resulted from a bruise made by the rubbing of the stirrup-leather while riding.

The cancer continued to grow until it was about five inches long; and three wide. The flesh sloughed off, black, rotten and foul, and it was almost impossible to procure a servant to wait upon him, the air in the room where he lay being so foul that it would sicken anyone who entered. Every physician of any prominence in the State was consulted, and treated my brother without success. One doctor finally advised him to try Swift's Specific (S. S. S.), he did so, and used nothing else. He commenced to improve immediately, and after taking several bottles was completely cured, and since 1881 not a symptom of the disease has manifested itself.

C. A. GRIFFITH,
Mayflower, Ark.

His Health Broke Down.

Last summer my appetite failed, my health became poor and I was in a very feeble condition, in fact I was compelled to give up all business on account of my health. I tried physicians and their medicines, but without avail. At length I began taking S. S. S. and nothing else. After taking several bottles I was entirely cured and able to resume business. I increased nineteen pounds in weight in less than a month after I commenced taking S. S. S. J. M. MABRY, Abbeville, S. C.

ST. NICHOLAS.

The Century Co's Magazine for Young Folks. Enlarged and Printed in New Type.

Since 1873, when under the editorial mangement of Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, the publication of St. Nicholas for Young Folks was begun, it has led all magazines for boys and girls. Nothing like it was known before, and today, as the Chicago Inter Ocean recently said, "it is the model and ideal juvenile magazine of the world. Thro' its pages the greatest writers of our time are speaking to the youth of America and England, and the best artists and engravers are training the eyes of the boys and girls to appreciate the highest in art. Nobody knows how many readers St. Nicholas has. In the third largest public library in America—that in Indianapolis—more than 3000 people read each month's number.

Since the first issue Mrs. Dodge has remained as editor. Tennyson, Bryant, Longfellow, Whittier, Miss Alcott, Mrs. Burnett, Charles Dudley Warner, W. D. Howells, and almost every every well-known writer of our time have contributed to its pages. There is only one way in which its conductors can make it better, and that is by making more of it, and so they announce that, with the beginning of the 17th vol., (Nov. 1889) St. Nicholas will be enlarged by the addition of 8 and sometimes 16 extra pages in each number.

During the coming year there are to be four important serial stories by four well-known American authors. Athlethic and outdoor sports will be a special feature, and there will be stories of character and adventure, sketches of information and travel, outdoor papers, articles of special literary interest, etc.

The price will be the same as heretofore, $3.00 a year, 25c a number, and all dealers and the publishers (The Century Co., New York) take subscriptions. New subscribers should begin with November.

JOSEPH JEFFERSON.

The Century Magazine in 1890—Joseph Jefferson's Autobiography—Novels by Frank R. Stockton, Amelia E. Barr and others—A Capital Programme.

During 1890, the Century Magazine (whose recent successes have included the famous "War Papers," the Lincoln History and George Kennan's series on "Siberia and the Exile System") will publish the long-looked for autobiography of Joseph Jefferson, whose "Rip Van Winkle has made his name a household word. No more interesting record of a life upon the stage could be laid before the public. Mr. Jefferson is the fourth in a generation of actors, and with his children and grand-children, there are six generation of actors among the Jeffersons. His story of the early days of the American stage, when, as a boy, traveling in his father's company, they would settle down for a season in a western town, playing in their own extemporized theatre—the particulars of the creation of the famous "Rip Van Winkle," how he acted "Ticket-of-Leave Man" before an audience of that class in Australia, etc.

Amelia E. Barr Frank R. Stockton, Mark Twain, H. H. Boyesen, and many other well-known writers will furnish the fiction for the new volume which is to be unusually strong, including serial novels, illustrated novelettes, and short stories.

Prof. George P. Fisher of Yale University is to write a series on "The Nature and Method of Revelation," Bishop Potter, of New York will be one of several prominent writers who are to contribute a series of "Present-day Papers" on living topics.

Every bookseller, postmaster and subscription agent takes subscriptions to The Century. ($4 a year) or remittances may be made directly to The Century Co., of New York. Begin new subscriptions with November, the first issue of the volume, and get Mark Twain's story, "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," in that number.

MR. LEE. "Why, Addie, you needn't cry about it! I only said Mrs. Allen was a very well-informed woman, and I wished you would follow her example."

MRS. LEE. "Yes, and last week you said you wished I could manage to look as stylish as Mrs. Allen,—and she makes all her own clothes. But she has what I haven't."

MR. LEE. "What is that?"

MRS. LEE. "Well, she gets all of her information from the Magazine they take. I admit that she knows all that is going on, and is bright and entertaining in conversation; but I could do as well as she does if I had the same source of information. She lent me the last number of her Magazine lately, and I learned more in one hour's reading, about various social matters and the topics of the day, than I would pick up in a month by my occasional chats with friends. It certainly covers every topic of interest, from the news of the day down to the details of housekeeping; and everything is so beautifully illustrated, too. Every time Mamie goes over to 'the Allens' she comes back and teases me to get you to take Demorest's Family Magazine, as the stories are so good. Even the boys watch for it every month, as a place is found for them also in its pages; and Mr. Allen swears by it. It is really wonderful how it suits every member of the family!"

MR. LEE. "Well, perhaps I had better send for a Specimen Copy; for, if it is anything like what you say it is, it will amuse and instruct the whole of us."

MRS. LEE. "I see that W. Jennings Demorest, the publisher, 15 East 14th Street, New York, is offering to send a Specimen Copy for 10 cents, so we can't lose anything, as each number contains a 'Pattern Order' entitling the holder to any Pattern she may choose, and in any size—which alone makes each copy worth 30 cents; and I just want a jacket pattern like Mrs. Allen's. The subscription price is only $2.00 a year; and I must say I can't see how they can publish so elegant a Magazine for so little money."

HISTORY OF UTAH

The only true history of Mormonism from its origin to the present time; endorsed alike by Mormons and Gentiles. Written without prejudice so you can see

UTAH AS IT IS.

Nothing so near approaches the miraculous as the rise of a new religion, founded by an illiterate man, in the keenest country in the world, and in the age which has given us the greatest inventions.

The finding of the plates, their translation, the first preaching, obtaining converts, founding of Nauvoo, origin of Polygamy, the exile from three states, founding a prosperous state in a desert beyond civilization, to be overtaken and passed by 49ers, the executive ability of Brigham Young, the struggle between Mormonism and the United States—this is thrilling as a novel, yet true history. Everybody wants it.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

The latest move in the village is the moving of the meat market, formerly owned by N. M. Hindes, located on east street and recently purchased by Dr. D. W. Loree, who moved it on his corner lot between S. P. Smith's grocery and the store once owned by Peter Sharp. Harrison & Bannister will move their location on north street to the new site, this week.

Burt Lawton having rented the building recently vacated by the post office department, will open a meat market there this week.

Several of the small children attending school have been obliged to leave on account of sickness with jaundice, the past two weeks.

E. W. Rappleye moved with his family to his mothers, north of the village, the latter part of last week, as his mothers health is failing, of late quite rapidly,

Mrs. Wm. Riggs is improving slowly at present and will recover unless a relapse should occur.

Dr. D. W. Loree visited his children at Ypsilanti, last week several days.

Fannie Gifford of Holloway, visited her uncle, W. L. Jones, over Sunday.

M. P. Brown of Tecumseh, made a business call in the village Monday.

Ace Smith of Pennington's Corners, was in the village Monday.

Frank Zimmerman of Augusta, was in the village Monday on a business call.

Ira Fox, who has been helping F. J. Temple to get his drug store arranged, returned to his home at Manchester Monday evening.

Chas. Culbertson, Jr., moved the post office fixtures to his new quarters Saturday. He has a very pleasant location in one corner of the newly remoddled drug store.

F J. Temple opened his place of business Saturday, and it would be a hard days journey to find a more complete, tasty and pleasant drug store in Southern Michigan than he has.

H. J. Williams having disposed of his paints and oils to F. J. Temple, has replaced them with a stock of groceries.

Samuel McClure of Tecumseh, called on friends Monday afternoon.

Bert Lawton Sundayed with relatives at Onsted, returning Monday.

The Osgood sisters visited Ypsilanti friends last week.

A. R. Arner is at Pittsburg, Pa., this week.

Mrs. Hause moved her household effects to her sons, Elmer Hause of Tecumseh, the fore part of the week.

The first issue of the Ridgeway Record made appearance Saturday evening. It is a four page, twelve column, little sheet, with several editorials, conundrums, etc. It gives the business places of the village a grand breeze, with a card from each house in regard to their business.

The new furnace furnished by H. J. Williams, is being placed in the basement of the school building at present writing.

Since our last letter to the HERALD the General Supply Co. have received quite a large invoice of furniture, mattresses, picture frame mouldings, etc., and will in a few days be ready to do all kinds of picture framing.

A missionary concert will be held in the audience room of the church next Sabbath evening.

BRITTON BUDGET.

Muddy roads, indeed,

J. B. Coller went to Toledo and Detroit on business Tuesday and returned on Wednesday night.

Ed. Daykin moved into Irve Osborn's front rooms last week.

Irve is bound to build up Britton. He has commenced a new house on Second street, south of the G. A. R. hall. If the money men of the place were half so liberal as Irve is we would have quite a town.

Mrs. Nancy Aten and son, of Macon, and Sarah Ayers of Ovid, Mich., were in town Tuesday of last week.

Herbert Cranshaw commenced work in the hotel last Monday. They can't get along without Herbert.

Somebody has got to get well or die, for the way Dr. Farlin went over to Coller's drug store the week he was here, and got medicine, something will surely happen. He had many a pint put up there.

Dave Sloan of Macon, was in town last week—"we wonder what for."

Will Randall has got his new barn done. It improves the looks of his place.

Sleeper & Loose shipped a car load of hogs from here Saturday; price paid was $3.25.

Osgood Bros. have gone into the Poultry business, they have just finished a very fine poultry house and I should think they intend to turn out chickens by the hundred.

Thanksgiving next Thursday and Britton people talk of having a great hunt. The side that brings in the most game is the side that will eat the oysters, and the other side buys.

Dave Sloan of Macon, has bought a half interest in Will Randall's meat market. Now look out for a fine cut, as Dave is a good one.

Laban Babcock went to Adrian Monday to file his bonds as he is town treasurer.

The new crosswalk in front of the school house is a long needed improvement.

Miss Susie Osgood, just from the Pacific Coast, is visiting Will Osgood and wife.

Chas. Hoagland and wife are after a Thanksgiving turkey in Clinton Co. this week.

L. H. Hause has moved into his village house, and is getting settled; at least he can be seen nearly every hour during the day with a piece of stove pipe under his left arm and a step-ladder under his right, making regular trips between his house and the hardware store.

The only greatest Irve Osborne on earth is putting up a cottage on his lot on Short street, near the drying establishment of Bowerman & Rogers. This we believe is the thirteenth building Irve has put up in the town, all good ones, too—"He's all right."

Mrs. Ezra Sink has moved her millinery establishment into one of the brick stores in the Beasley building, and now has as neat a store of the kind as you would wish to see. Ezra is still looking after the decoration of the village and farm houses and seems to be very busy.

We now have two meat markets in full blast, the last one being a sort of annex to Dakin's grocery, and under the immediate supervision of Pearley.

He represented himself to be the advance agent of "Draper's Uncle Tom's Cabin Troupe" and he struck the town on Thursday, and the proprietor of the Exelby hotel with an eye single to the business of that popular hostlery, stimulated by the prospective patronage of the immense company which was to follow in the near future, took a lively interest in the comfort of the advance agent, who proceeded to bill the town, which he accomplished by hanging two or three bills in the post office announcing that this double aggregation would give one of their popular entertainments in G. A. R. hall on Saturday evening. This arduous task over, he eat one of the best suppers, slept in the best bed and buttoning his coat over an excellent breakfast, gave George a check on the company for his hotel bill and and took the C. J. & M. 10 a. m. train for Toledo. Saturday night came. Nix show, nix co., nix cash check. As the bills do not specify what Saturday night, we suggest that he meant the Saturday before next 4th of July.

Thos. Hoagland is the possessor of a two year old steer with a left hind leg nineteen and one-half feet long. "Monte" says so, and this is how he knows. He was driving this bovine across the Clara Jane & Marthy, and getting too close to his highness, his Nibs let out with his left hind, and caught Montie just over his right optic. Montie says the lesson he took in astronomy at that instant upsets some of the popular theories of the day. He says Saturn looked more like a fourth of July spinning phizle than anything else. The North star was over in Mr. Borden's yard, and the whole universe had the general appearance of a bulls foot. A quarter of a yard of court plaster put Montie in fair shape, but he don't think any human skill can put the demoralized firmament in order.

About fifty of the young friends of Miss Nellie Easterly were invited to the residence of J. B. Coller one evening last week and enjoyed one of those pleasant evening parties of which we have dim recollections, way back in our boyhood days. A young lady from the country, Miss Cherry, was voted to be the belle of the evening, and Ernest Dubois was in high feather all the evening because he got the inside track and went home with the belle aforesaid. Ask him if he can explain. No one gets an introduction without his consent.

Rheumatism

Is undoubtedly caused by the lactid acid in the blood. This acid attacks the fibrous tissues, and causses the pains and aches in the back, shoulders, knees ankles, hips, and wrists. Thousands of people have found in Hood's Sarsaparilla a positive cure for rheumatism. This medicine, by its purifying action, neutralizes the acidity of the blood, and also builds up and strengthens the whole body.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Q. A. Sinclair attended a dance in Blissfield, Tuesday night. Must be a strong attraction to draw so far.

Miss Hattie Updyke has been engaged as clerk at Freese's dry goods store, commencing on Monday next. She is very popular and efficient.

Mrs. Geo. Freese started, Tuesday, for Paines Hollow, N. Y., on a visit to her parents. She will remain until after the holidays.

We note with pleasure the fact that Charles Wood is pushing the work on the foundation of his new house.

Prof. Hopkins and wife spend Thanksgiving in Detroit.

Miss Anthony, of Jackson, who has taught in the first primary room during the illness of Miss Morey, returned home Friday last.

Mrs. E R Smith went to Saline, Saturday, to visit friends and returned the first of the week.

F. D. Lancaster went to Detroit, Wednesday, on business.

Charlie McDermott has returned to Clinton to remain.

Andrew McDermott had quite a serious time Monday. In attempting to draw crude oil from a tank car the coupling bothered and several barrels of the oil ran out on the ground and over Andrew and Charles Fabrique.

Miss Nellie Kishpaugh visited in Ann Arbor over Sunday, as did Chas. Clark. Howard House went over Tuesday, to visit Neil Williams.

Rev. Williams was unwell part of last week, but is around again.

All interested in St. Johns church fair and supper are requested to meet at the residence of Mrs. John Amspoker on Wednesday afternoon, December 4, as business of importance is to be transacted.

Rev. Whipple, of Detroit, conducted services at St. Johns church on Sunday last. The vestry have given him a call and are awaiting his decision.

Varnie Larzelere is around, but don't improve very fast. He is obliged to use a cane and crutch.

Dr. Morden, of Macon, was in town, Monday. He reports business in his line good.

J. T. Clark's creamery will be completed this week. It is expected every thing in this mill will be in apple pie order and the machinery the latest and best. He talks of cheese making.

ONSTED ODDS.

Not very bad winter weather yet.

Hiram Taylor from Battle Creek, visited his father, A. Taylor, last week.

M. O. Aldrich and wife returned last Saturday from a ten days visit among friends in Hillsdale county.

Herman Onsted is taking in the sights around Battle Creek at present.

Albert Townsend and family have moved back upon their farm at Rollin village.

The spring-gun craze has struck this vicinity and the small boy shoots away pounds of B. B. shot daily.

A. P. Onsted and wife visited friends near Jonesville lately.

F. W. Aldrich has added to his already growing business a nice line of men and boys clothing, which he says he intends to sell as cheap as any one, and we are pleased to see the increase of business in our little hamlet.

The Onsted school commenced on Monday with Miss Maggie Kane of Napoleon, installed as teacher, and may she be successful in her undertaking as a teacher among us.

David Aldrich and wife have moved to Rome Center, and Ezra Horton and family have moved onto Mr. A's farm with the intention of working the same during next season.

Bucklen's Arnica Salve.

The Best Salve in the world for cuts, Bruises, Sores, Tetter, Chapped Hands, Chilblains Corns, and all skin Eruptions, and postively cures Piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box FOR SALE BY C. A. Wright & Co.

We want some wood and we want it now.

If the gentleman whose lips pressed the lady's snowy brow and thus caught a severe cold had but used Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, no doctor's bill would have been necessary.

Some genius proposes to introduce paper shirts. Wearing paper shirts means bearing rheumatism. With Salvation Oil, however, paper shirts might still be a success. Price 25 cents.

BEGGS' CHERRY COUGH SYRUP.

Is giving splendid satisfaction to the trade and the sales are positively marvelous, which can be accounted for in no other way except that it is without doubt the best in the market. Ask for and be sure that you get the genuine. We keep it.

BEVERLY FARMS.

A THANKSGIVING IN OLD VIRGINIA, BY FELIX G. DE FONTAINE.

[Copyright, 1889, by American Press Association.]

BEVERLY-ON-THE-ROANOKE is an old historical place that has long been famous in the annals of Virginia hospitality. Located in one of the most fertile sections of the mother state and comprising many hundreds of acres that under skillful tillage had become a model of their kind, remote from the whir of the railway and the din of traffic, yet with neighboring plantations that provided a wealth of sociability, and adjacent forests and streams that tempted the fox hunter and sportsman, there reigned throughout a sense of peacefulness and content that well comported with the brave and gentle character of the men and women who, generation after generation, had gone forth from the old family to grace with their influence the outside world.

Just before the war, the members of the household consisted of Col. Bainbridge, his son Will, cadet in the naval academy at Annapolis, and three daughters, Dorothy, the elder, upon whom by reason of the death of her mother devolved the care of the family, Margery and Clara—all of them belles of the neighborhood. Like most Virginia homes, this did not escape the afflictions of the time. Death laid upon it a heavy hand. Col. Bainbridge was killed in the valley while leading one of the regiments of Stonewall Jackson. Margery was left a widow at twenty-two, but had never laid aside her mourning, and always spoke of her husband as if he had died within the past year, her only consolation being that, instead of dying of his wounds amid the agonies of a battle-field, he had been taken a prisoner and tenderly cared for by some Federal officer, she knew not whom.

Dorothy likewise was not without her grief. Before the breaking out of hostilities, she had found among the officers stationed at Fortress Monroe one who had promised to brighten her life, and to him had plighted her heart and hand. At the call of his state he went to the front, and a monument, around which Dorothy in her grave way every Sunday strews flowers, tells the story of his gallant death at Manassas. Clara, the youngest sister, after the close of the war, while visiting friends in the north was wooed and won by Col. Hartley, formerly of the Federal army, and at the time at which this story opens was living in New York among the surroundings of wealth, a daughter, Kate, being the only fruit of the union. Will was still following the sea and was the captain of a steamship on the Pacific.

To her aunts Kate was a comparative stranger, for they had not seen her since early childhood, and of her father they knew less. The wounds of the strife had not yet healed. Yet Dorothy had written time and again for her handsome northern niece to come down and spend a winter on the plantation only to be met with an excuse, for a visit to Old Roanoke and the two ancient relatives was suggestive of anything but pleasure to a young city girl who counted the figures on her dial plate chiefly as they scored the change from one scene of gayety to another. So, in her own words, "the evil day was put off as far as possible."

Finally, however, Miss Dorothy made such a point of it—Kate being, after her mother, "next of kin"—that further resistance became an offense, and the journey was made. At the outset it seemed like retirement into rural seclusion. We shall see.

On arriving at the station of the dilapidated little town that marked the end of her travel by rail, Kate found awaiting her Daddy Hercules, with the old fashioned cinnamon colored coach, swinging high up on its springs, the family coat of arms emblazoned on both door panels—an ancestral ark that had been a figure head in Roanoke for nigh on to a century—and it was with no little amusement that she ascended the flight of steps let down with an air of immense importance by Tony the footman, while Hercules informed her that 'de basket on de front seat wur filled wid good things by Miss Doroty to keep young missis comp'ny while he fetches her home." Then the old coachman went back to his perch on "the dickey seat," Tony mounted the trunk rest behind, seized the straps whereby he preserved a perpendicular, and they started for Beverly Farms.

And right royal company did Kate find in that basket of fried chicken, hard boiled eggs, "beat biscuit" and home made cake, for she was ravenously hungry and the bouncing of the coach had speeded her appetite. It was a ride novel to the young city girl in other respects. The scenery was such as she had never looked upon or dreamed of. The road ran over a lovely landscape, smooth undulations, among wind mills, corn and grass, beautiful fields and wild flowers, where the birds poured out their songs and the shadows of the branches interlaced and made a trembling carpet on the road, while the overhanging trees formed aisles and arches dimmed with the softened light that crept through the leaves.

And the old mansion, as the big white gates swung open at the entrance of the broad, oak lined avenue at the end of which it stood, how inviting it looked! Dorothy and Margery were waiting on the porch, and such a warm Virginia welcome as they gave to their handsome niece!

It did not take Kate long to find herself the queen and fairy of that household, with subjects, both white and black, for whom she had nothing but love. True, her kingdom at first looked prim, but in a little while every object had in her eyes acquired a golden tint. The dear old aunts in their ruffled caps, immaculate aprons and crossed neckerchiefs, seemed like ancient bits of history that had stepped out from their ancestral portrait gallery to make themselves agreeable. Perfect harmony reigned between the place and its occupants. Everything seemed to belong to the same age, and that a past age. Not an object had the vulgarity of newness about it. Stiff, high backed rockers confronted one another from each side of the old fashioned broad chimney, on the hearth of which stood the heavy brass andirons polished to mirror like brightness, that had kept watch and ward for generations, and it seemed a sacrilege to disturb their position. Bolt upright against the wall, with its full moon face and perpetual coo-coo, was the grandfather's clock, and among the traditions was one that the coo-coo never had failed to announce the time, save once—the day when Col. Bainbridge was killed in the valley.

The household preserved much of its antebellum characteristics, and to Kate these were also strange. The family servants had grown old in their duties. Daddy Hercules, the coachman, and Silas, the butler, had heads as white as cotton. Aunt Dilsey, the cook, was the tyrant of the place, allowing little interference from the "white folks," and no familiarity from "dem sleepy headed niggers dat warn't no 'count no how, 'cept in de co'n fiel'." With all her peculiarities, she was thoroughly respectful, and as tenacious of the rights of her old mistresses as "in de days when I wuz er slim nigger an' wuz ole miss's boddy servant an' Miss Madg'ry's nuss." Jerry, her grandson, whose mission it was to keep the wood pile well stocked, came in for a large share of Aunt Dilsey's maternal attention, especially when "de light'ood knots gin out," and his life was anything but a happy lot, for then "ole mammy," as he called her, made things lively for him.

Take it all in all, Beverly was a home amid whose quiet Kate began to feel she could be happy for the remainder of her life. She might not have been able to add to its beauty, but she infused into it the brightness of her fresh, young nature. Her songs mingled with those of the birds, and the influence of her cheery presence pervaded every nook and cranny on the place, from the solemn old parlors in the big house to the quarters of the "yard folks," where she romped with the picaninnies or listened to the ghost stories of Mammy Angeliner.

After making herself acquainted with all the home surroundings, Kate started out one day on a journey of exploration through the neighboring country. And this is a part of the story that may best be told in her own words, for it is as she wrote it in a letter to a New York friend, and it more or less concerns her fate:

SUCH A WARM VIRGINIA WELCOME.

"You know, Flora, that sentiment was never a very important factor in my life, and yet, here I am already the victim of a small romance. The other day, in going out for a walk, Aunt Dorothy suggested that I should take the path leading down to an old mill, near the banks of the river. I had scarcely reached the spot, when—bang! a gun was fired and something flew by me as swift as the wind. Naturally frightened, I screamed as only a girl can scream who is sure she has been shot. In a minute or two the offending cause made his appearance in the person of a young gentleman in gray shooting jacket, high top boots, a game bag and a gun, followed by three or four dogs. Raising his hat, he apologized, but said that the sight of a deer had been a temptation too strong to resist, and saucily added that he suspected the deer was suffering from the same cause as myself, namely, 'fright, rather than injury.'

"The October wind had sufficiently disarranged his hair to make it fall carelessly about his head and shoulders, and he was as handsome as a picture. How glad I was that I screamed, for it brought about one of those delightful social incidents—so naturally, too, which, although it may not be safe to enjoy too frequently, are very charming while they last, and in this instance it compensated for any amount of fright.

"In the course of conversation I learned that his name was Gerald Bruce, and he was Aunt Dorothy's nearest neighbor. The news was very agreeable. Then he found out that I was Aunt Dorothy's niece from New York, which information seemed to be agreeable to him, too. It is marvelous how small a part conventionality plays in these chance meetings; how much we are willing to take on faith, and how apt we are to silence our consciences in the matter of propriety.

"Well, we walked and we talked, and we talked and we walked. He forgot that he had come out gunning, and I quite lost sight of the object of my own expedition. It seemed as if I had known him forever and a day. I wondered as I sat there, what Tom Waring or Henry Lawrence would say if they could see Kate Hartley in this rustic position, chatting as merrily with a perfect stranger as if I had known him from childhood.

TWO WHITE WINGED MESSENGERS.

"Under the circumstances, neither of us took much notice of time until I spied our boy Jerry coming. When he reached us, he pulled off his hat and said: 'Miss Doroty's mon'sus oneasy 'bout you, young miss, an yo' better come home fas' ez yo' kin, fur she's sho' sump'n has happen to yo'.' Poor Aunt Dorothy, how wrong it was for me to worry her!

"And so I was brought from heaven to earth again. The young gentleman walked home with me, but instead of leaving me at the gate, as I wished him to do, deliberately went in, and said to auntie, 'Miss Dorothy, why didn't you prepare me for this pleasant surprise? You see, I am indebted to a stray shot and this lady's scream for a delightful acquaintance.'

"He then explained the incident to Aunt Dorothy, who laughed and said, 'Well, well, young folks will gravitate toward each other like loadstones, and we old ones can't help it. My little New York niece, if she is anything like her mother, will never suffer for the want of companionship if there's anybody worth knowing around her, and I think Gerald, she's hit it right this time.'

"I was so glad to hear Aunt Dorothy say this, I loved her twice as much as I did before, because she appreciated Gerald. When he made his adieu, she told me it was a queer coincidence that the first person I met in old Roanoke should turn out to be the son of mother's old lover, Randolph Bruce. Then she added, with an odd smile, 'I wonder if the feeling will be inherited by the children?'"

After this occurrence it was not a difficult matter to induce Kate to prolong her visit at least until the holidays.

"Yes," said Aunt Margery, "Beverly farms shall this year, if never before, witness a genuine Thanksgiving, as well as a Christmas."

And so it was arranged that Aunt Dorothy, as the head of the family, should at once write to Col. and Mrs. Hartley, inviting them to the old Virginia home.

"And Uncle Robert, too," suggested Kate, "our old bachelor uncle, he must also come, for he lives with father and mother, and there could be no real thanksgiving with his dear

Blood vs. Nerves.

Great mistakes have been made in the world, by supposing many of [illegible] troubles were due to bad blood. [illegible] headache, fits, dizziness, sleeplessness, etc., are always due to weakness or irritation of the nerves of the brain; dyspepsia, pain, wind, etc., to weakness of the nerves of the stomach; weak lungs is caused by weakness of the parts; biliousness, constipation, etc., to weakness of the nerves of the liver or bowels; pains, irregularity, sterility to derangement of the uterine nerves. For all weaknesses, Dr. Miles' great nerve and [illegible] food suppresses all other remedies. [illegible] Baker & Hall's Drug Store.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic researches, however, has proven this to be a fact, and result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to the applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet of this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 303 west King street, Toronto, Canada. [Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully.

J. M. LOOSE RED CLOVER CO., Detroit:

I cheerfully furnish the following for publication.

Mrs. S., age 36, cancerous face [cell cancer,] has tried many physicians, and on presentation to me was a horrible sight to look upon, nose partly eaten away, deep pits in cheeks, forehead and chin. As a last hope I put her on Loose's Extract of Red Clover—large doses enternally, and as a local application, I used the solid extract in plaster form. SHE IMPROVED RAPIDLY FROM THE FIRST WEEK, and in four months was entirely well. Now eighteen months since first treatment and no signs of return.

JOHN J. WEAVER.

Ulceration of the leg (Indolent Ulcer.) Recovered entirely after three months' treatment with Red Clover Extract and Solid Extract Dressing. Now one year since treatment, and no sign of return.

Cancer of Lip and Skin Disease. Entirely cured with three months' treatment with Red Clover Extract and Solid Extract Dressing. H. B. Secondary Syphilis was entirely cured by Red Clover Extract in three months, with none of the after results such as are left by MERCURY in such cases.

If you have any doubting physicians, they can write to me and I will give them a full history of each case. Dr. W. H. YARNALL. Write for testimonials.

KIRK'S AMERICAN FAMILY SOAP

Is a constitutional and not a local disease, and therefore it cannot be cured by local applications. It requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, working through the blood, eradicates the impurity which causes and promotes the disease, and effects a permanent cure. Thousands of people testify to the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for catarrh when other preparations had failed. Hood's Sarsaparilla also builds up the whole system, and makes you feel renewed in health and strength.

"I used Hood's Sarsaparilla for catarrh and received great relief and benefit from it. The catarrh was very disagreeable, especially in the winter, causing constant discharge from my nose, ringing noises in my ears, and pain in the back of my head. The effect to clear my head in the morning by hawking and spitting was painful. Hood's Sarsaparilla gave me relief immediately, while in time I was entirely cured. I think Hood's Sarsaparilla is worth its weight in gold." MRS. G. R. GINN, 1029 Eighth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

I ran him right at the lion, wheelbarrow fashion, the bewildered nigger instinctively putting one hand before the other before he knew what he was about. This brought us within a spring of the lion. I hurled his legs forward over his head with such force that when they struck the ground his body rose and he described a convulsive somersault. This carried him two lengths ahead of me into the very jaws of the lion, if the latter had stayed"—

WILHELM'S IMPROVED CREAMERY CAN.

Unequalled for private dairies of from one cow to full size Creamery. $5.00 will buy FOUR 3-GAL. CANS making a capacity of 12 gallons of milk, and will PRODUCE ALL THE CREAM FROM 4 TO 8 HOURS, in a vat, tub, or any receptacle the farmer may choose, holding water from 10 to 14 inches in depth, and at a temperature from 40 to 60 degrees cold. IT MAKES A PERFECT CREAM and combines the advantage of deep setting, rapid cooling, protecting the milk from all impurities of the atmosphere which so quickly taints cream. Also preventing souring by thunder storms, from flies, insects, dust, and all bad odors, thus preserving both cream and milk, clean and sweet. Over 200,000 in actual use in the U. S. One setting of milk is all that is needed to prove the merit of the can. Usual size of can, 3-gal., price $1.25. A liberal discount on orders of one dozen Cans and upwards. Write for descriptive circular and testimonials. I also make a specialty of building Creameries and furnishing all the best improved machinery and apparatus. JOHN WILHELM, Wooster, Wayne Co. O.

C. L. Osgood, Samaria, Mich. says—The Milk Cans I bought of you give perfect satisfaction. We can make just as good and just as much butter in the most unfavorable season of the year by the use of your Cans as at any other time of the year. I have 4 Cans. Have used them 3 years and would not be without them.

THE TEMPLE DEDICATED.

LESSON IX, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, DEC. 1.

Text of the Lesson, I Kings viii, 54-63. Commit Verses 62, 63—Golden Text, Hab. ii, 20—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

54. "And it was so, that when Solomon had made an end of praying all this prayer and supplication unto the Lord." Between the last lesson and this one we have passed over all the most interesting and instructive account of the building of the most wonderful edifice that ever stood on this earth; and also the remarkable prayer of Solomon at its dedication; the lesson assigned us for today being the words of Solomon's blessing upon the people after he had finished his prayer.

The Temple was to be exceeding magnifical, of fame and of glory throughout all countries (I Chron. xxii, 5). The gold and silver alone (brass and iron being without weight) amounted to 1,125,000 talents, which at 114 pounds per talent would be 64,125 tons, worth over four and a half billions of dollars (I Chron. xxii, 14; xxix, 4, 7). One room in the building, the Holy of Holies, was covered with six hundred talents, or more than thirty-four tons of gold, worth over sixteen millions of dollars (II Chron. iii, 8). The laborers were 153,000 strangers, or Gentiles, found in Israel (I Ki. v, 13-18; II Chron. ii, 17, 18), who brought from the mountains and quarries the wood and stone for the house. Some day we may see a connection between these and the 153 great fishes of John xxi, 11, and something else. There was neither hammer, nor ax, nor any tool of iron heard in the house while it was in building (I Ki. vi, 7).

55. "He stood and blessed all the congregation of Israel with a loud voice." When David brought the Ark to the tent which he had pitched for it in Jerusalem, he offered sacrifice and blessed the people in the name of the Lord of Hosts. (II Sam. vi, 17, 18.) Solomon, having now brought up the Ark, the tabernacle and all the holy vessels (v. 4), does the same thing.

56. "Blessed be the Lord that hath given rest unto His people Israel." He had given rest on every side, so that there was neither adversary nor evil occurrent. (Chap v, 4.) Rest and Peace shall be among the blessings of His Kingdom when it comes. (Ps. lxxii, 7; Isa. xxxii, 17, 18.) We get a foretaste even here when we consider and obey. (Matt. xi, 28-30.) We who have believed do enter into rest; but there remaineth a Sabbath rest for the people of God. (Heb. iv, 3, 9, R. V.)

57. "The Lord our God be with us, * * * let Him not leave us, nor forsake us." Moses prayed, "If Thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence." And the Lord said, "My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest." This word of the Lord, "I will be with you," or "I am with you," is one of the grandest and most comprehensive words in Scripture.

"Let Him not leave us nor forsake us." When David gave Solomon the plans of the temple which he had received from God Himself, he said to him: "The Lord God, even my God, will be with thee; He will not fail thee nor forsake thee until thou hast finished all the work for the service of the house of the Lord." (I Chron. xxviii, 19, 20.)

58. "That He may incline our hearts unto Him, to walk in all His ways." This was just what God desired from them, and what He would be delighted to grant them, an undivided and obedient heart; they could not ask anything more in accord with His will. On these conditions He had promised at Sinai to make them a peculiar treasure unto Him above all people, a kingdom of priests, an holy nation, and to this end He had brought them forth from Egypt and given them the lands of the heathen. (Ex. xix, 5, 6; Ps. cv, 43-45.)

59. "Let these my words * * * * be nigh unto the Lord our God day and night, that He maintain the cause of His servant, and the cause of His people Israel." Seven times in his prayer he had pleaded for "Thy people Israel," and had also said: "For they be Thy people and Thine inheritance," and now he indicates his reliance upon God to maintain his and their cause.

60. "That all the people of the earth may know that the Lord is God, and that there is none else." Israel was redeemed and given the good land, that they might make Jehovah a name in the earth (II Sam. vii, 23); their obedience to Him would draw forth His power on their behalf, and thus He would be glorified in them. This, God's earnest desire, shall be fulfilled in Israel's restoration at the return of their Messiah (Isa. xxv, 8, 9; xl, 1-5; lx, 1-3; Ezek. xxxvii, 21-28).

61. "Let your heart, therefore, be perfect with the Lord our God." The word "perfect" here signifies "whole," or "full," as in Josh. viii, 31; Ruth ii, 12, where it is so translated. Solomon now urges the people to have what his father had prayed that he might have (I Chron. xxix, 19). In Gen. xvii, 1, the word "perfect" signifies "upright," or "sincere," as in the margin and in Deut. xviii, 13. A whole heart for God will be a sincere or upright heart, and will delight to walk in His statutes and keep His commandments. "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." "He that loveth me not, keepeth not my words." (John xiv, 21, 24.)

62, 63. "And the king, and all Israel with him, offered sacrifice before the Lord." And the Lord accepted the sacrifice by sending fire to consume it, as it is written in II Chron. vii, 1: "Now when Solomon had made an end of praying, the fire came down from Heaven and consumed the burnt offering and the sacrifices; and the glory of the Lord filled the house." Thus also was the sacrifice accepted at the dedication of the Tabernacle, and in the cases of Gideon and Elijah (Lev. ix, 24; Judges vi, 21; I Kings xviii, 38); and no doubt in the same way was the Lord's acceptance of Abel's offering and rejection of Cain's offering manifest at the Garden of Eden when the fire from the sword consumed the one but did not touch the other. Although it is not so written, it seems clear from these other Scriptures that this was His way of manifesting approval or disapproval.

"So the king and all the children of Israel dedicated the house of the Lord." And He took possession of it by filling it with His glory. We read of a time when the glory left the house because of their sins (Ezek. ix, 3; x, 4, 18; xi, 23), and of a time yet future when the glory shall return to depart no more (Ezek. xliii, 1-7). When Jesus, the brightness of God's glory, came to it He found it a den of thieves, and twice He cleansed it; but He too was driven away by their sins, and all is desolate till His return. Believers are now the temples of the Holy Spirit, urged to glorify God in these bodies, and warned "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy" (I Cor. iii, 16, 17; vi, 19, 20). While there is no church building on earth that is in any true sense what the temple was, yet if we dedicate a building to God for His service and then use it for entertainment or anything but His worship, should we not fear that if He came He would either not enter it or severely cleanse it? "Dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God" (II Cor. vii, 1).

LUCY PARSON'S THEOLOGY.

The Feminine Anarchist Doesn't Believe in Any Hereafter.

CHICAGO, Nov. 18.—Mrs. Lucy Parsons entertained the members of the Arbeiter bund who gathered at Turner hall yesterday afternoon with a very lurid address. She abused the police in terms that have become familiar from frequent repetition; referred to the red flag as the only banner that would lead to freedom, and ventured into the realm of theology as she spoke of her dead husband and child.

No Beautiful Hereafter.

"Do you supposed that they kissed each other in the beautifully described hereafter?" she said. "Bah! bah! Don't be deceived; so-called Christians will tell you such things. What we want are homes in this world and let God, Christ and all religious functionaries take care of themselves. This is the teaching of anarchy and as such it will live. The principles of anarchy will prevail even though it takes blood to make them supreme."

THE KNIGHTS AND ALLIANCE.

Meeting of Representatives at Atlanta—Enthusiastic for Confederation.

ATLANTA, Ga., Nov. 16.—The feature of the K. of L. convention yesterday was the reception in the hall of Col. L. F. Livingston, president, and Judge Henderson, R. F. Gray and Henry Brown, representatives of the Farmers' Alliance. They were received with great enthusiasm, especially when Col. Livingston spoke in favor of confederation of the Knights and the Alliance. Mr. Powerly in reply said he thanked God for the day, and said the day when the farmer and mechanic should stand side by side and work for the same object had always been a dream of his. The entire meeting was most enthusiastic, and every mention of the confederation of the two orders was met with thundering applause.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this receipt in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. Noyes, 149 Powers block, Rochester, N. Y.

Holzhay Had "spells."

BESSEMER, Mich., Nov. 15.—Holzhay, the lone highwayman and murderer, was put on the stand yesterday to speak for himself. He gave a history of his life and claimed that when he committed the crimes he is charged with he was impelled thereto by a "spell" which he could not resist. He could not describe his feelings during the prevalence of these "spells," except that he felt quite strange. When asked why he carried two revolvers, knowing his infirmity, he was stumpy for a moment and then said it was to protect himself from wild beasts in the woods.

MARQUETTE, Mich., Nov. 18.—Murderer Holzhay, the "lone highwayman," was sentenced Saturday to imprisonment for life for the killing of A. G. Fleishbein. He was placed behind the bars in the penitentiary here yesterday. The law of this state does not permit hanging.

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railroad has over 3000 miles of road, magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest, to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnipeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years.

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates it cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Prices 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

CLINTON SCHOOL REPORT.

School report for Clinton township, for the year ending Sept. 1, 1889:

Value of school property,	$8,500
No. of districts	5
No. Teachers employed, 2 male 13 female,	15
Whole amount paid to teachers	2,873
Average amount per month to female teachers,	25
No. of children in township between 5 and 22 years	347

The schools are not in as flourishing condition as could be desired. The principal cause being frequent change in teachers. There are four districts, outside of the village, that employed ten teachers during the year. There should have been four. It is impossible for schools to make satisfactory progress with new teachers every term. The work is fragmentary, without system, and at the close of the year little progress has been made and the patrons complain of the incompetency of the teachers, and think their money has been wasted. Another cause, in some districts, is the diversity of text books, consequently poor classification. Other causes are irregularity and entering school at any time during the year that is most convenient. This is not as serious a matter in graded schools where the classes are formed and the work marked out, and a pupil is expected to enter the class already formed; but in a district school the teacher is expected to form classes at any time to suit the convenience of the pupil, or parents.

This is wrong. A pupil in the district school should not be allowed to enter except at the commencement of the school year, unless he expects to enter the classes already formed. The teacher in the district school has the work of all the grades to do, and frequently also, the work of the first year in the high school. This frequently has to be done in a school numbering from fifteen to eighteen pupils. If the teacher is honest and thoroughly in earnest, trying as a good workman to do good work, it necessitates order, system, and the employment of every moment of time. Is it just to a conscientious teacher to send a pupil, just commencing school, the second or third term of the year and expect attention given it, as a class, four times a day?

One other cause is the indifference of the parents. I find very few who visit the schools. They send their children to school and expect them to make satisfactory progress without troubling themselves to visit the schools to know whether the teacher is competent to have charge of the intellectual or moral training of the pupils. The Superintendent of schools visits the schools once or twice a year, but should the care of the schools rest entirely with him? It is time parents aroused and began to take a personal interest in the matter. Visit the school regular working days, and do not be afraid to encourage the teacher when there. Honest praise will not hurt either teacher or pupils.

NOVELTIES AND KNOWLEDGE.

A new book of attractive reading, brimful of good things worth knowing and illustrated, is just issued. It contains a large collection of valuable autographs, excellent receipts for plain dishes, humor in rhyme and prose, monthly calendars, and can be had of all druggists and dealers, or, by sending a two-cent stamp to the publishers. An important feature of the work is its offer of Free Music, which offer is set forth therein, and by procuring the book, at once, any one can be supplied with a choice selection. The little volume is the St. Jacobs Oil Calendar for 1889 90, published by the Charles A. Vogeler Company, Baltimore, Md. It is fully the equal of any of its predecessors in the interest of the Great Remedy for Pain, St. Jacobs Oil, whose virtues never abate, and whose popularity never wanes. The demand for both book and medicine is very great.

HOW TO BE HAPPY.

If all the actual physical wants of men and women were regularly and completely supplied, and their powers intelligently directed their vital, natural and animal functions would be performed easily and perfectly, and less disease, physical pain and mental suffering would result.

To prevent disease, preserve health and prolong life, are the objects to be obtained in successful medical practice. Dr. Farlin has made the phenomena of Functional and Organic Diseases the study of his life. Early realizing that disease is discord, and health concord, he uses his best of skill in so prescribing for his thousands of patients as to restore concordance of functions, and overcome destructive forces which undermine constitutional vigor. No person whose case has baffled the skill of their family physician should fail to consult Dr. Farlin, who has few, if any, superiors as a skilled expert in functional and organic diseases.

Dr. Farlin, of New York, Specialist in Chronic, Nervous and Uterine Diseases, who will visit this vicinity regularly once a month can be consulted at the Lancaster House, Clinton every day this week.

He positively cures Spasmodic Asthma, Phthisic and Hay Fever, Nervous and Catarrhal Deafness, Sympathetic Diseases of the Heart, and diseases of Lungs, Liver, Stomach, Bowels, Kidneys and Spine, Rheumatism, &c.

THE GRAND ARMY DIRECTORY.

The new G. A. R. Directory is in course of completion, and will be issued soon. The work will be sold only by subscription at a cost of $10.00 Below are some of the leading features of the work:

The complete book will make over 2,000 pages of fine print, handsomely bound and embellished. It will contain many fine engravings on steel, including the portraits of Past Commander in-Chief John P. Rea, during whose term it originated; that of Past Commander-in-Chief William Warner, through whom it has much progressed; that the present Commander-in-Chief Russell A. Alger, during whose administration it will be completed, as also many of the Department Commanders, and others who have aided in its preparation.

This large book is to contain more names than Webster's Unabridged Dictionary contains words. It is as difficult to compile and classify. Its publication will directly assist in the settlement of tens of thousands of claims now onthe Pension Office files, many of which have been rejected because the claimants are without money or influence enabling them to find old companions of war-times, through whom they could prove their service, injuries, wounds or other disability.

As an Historical Work it will be an heirloom in every patriot's family for generations to come. It has been properly described as "The Common Soldiers' Monument." What work of art will be more commemorative for their children and their children's children, when they have been mustered out?

Subscriptions will be taken at the Herald Office.

Despite the very best attention bestowed upon the baby, it will grow sick and troublesome by reason of colic, diarrhoea, teething etc. Do not fail, then, to use Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup. Price 55 cents.

A GOOD COUGH SYRUP.

There is nothing parents should be so careful about as selecting a cough syrup. Begg's Cherry Cough Syrup costs no more than the cheap and inferior nostrums thrown on the market. The best is none to good, be sure and get BEGGS' CHERRY COUGH SYRUP. We keep it on hand at all times.

THE CHURCH FAIR.

On the afternoon of Tuesday, December 3d, the Ladies' Guild of St. Peter's church will offer for sale at the opera house, a large and varied assortment of fancy articles, suitable for gifts for the holidays so rapidly approaching. The rooms will be open at half past one in the afternoon, and the ladies will be very grateful for a large attendance and liberal patronage. In the evening the operetta of "Titania, or the Butterflies Carnival" will be presented by about thirty young ladies and gentlemen and children, who have been practicing some time under the able and careful training of Misses Root and Grayson, assisted by several other ladies. We think we can point to our record of the past for a guarantee that our entertainment will be well worth the moderate price of admission charged. Tickets 15 cents. Doors open at seven p. m. Performance to begin promptly at half past seven.

LIBRARY ENTERTAINMENT.

The committee for the first of a series of entertainments for the Tecumseh Library, consists of J. D. Shull, Seaton Anderson, O. P. Bills, Ben Garlinghouse and Will H. Hayden. Some have dubbed them the "begging committee." Notwithstanding their begging proclivities they guarantee theater going people a first-class entertainment. They have spent considerable time in the selection of a program, and have decided to put on the play entitled: "A Scrap of Paper." This play is something entirely new, and is a dandy.

Between acts refreshments such as coffee, doughnuts, fruits, nuts, etc., will be sold through the hall. This feature is also something new. That the refreshments will be a success, no one will doubt when it becomes known that Mrs. J. Campbell will preside over the culinary department.

Let everybody come out and give the library a bouncing lift. The exact date of the affair has not been decided on, but it will come off in three or four weeks.

THE EAST BRANCH FLAG.

On Monday afternoon, at half past three, the teachers and pupils of East Branch assembled on the lawn to view with pleasure what they have anticipated for the last few weeks, viz.: their flag floating majestically from a twenty-five foot pole, the latter being a present to the school from Mr. John Temple, for which he will please accept their hearty thanks. The event was not accompanied with any exercises other than the singing of two patriotic songs. Three cheers were given for the flag, three for Mr. Temple, three for Prof. Wilson, three for Mr. Wood and three for the school.

The only thing the boys seemed to regret was that each were not in possession of an extra pair of lungs for the occasion.

One pleasing feature because so unexpected was that as the children were about to disperse Mr. Wood proposed three cheers for the teachers of the East Branch, which were heartily given and duly appreciated.

Mr. Wood did the necessary work in a very efficient manner, and has been exceedingly kind and obliging. Fred Hall has been appointed flag manager for the remainder of the school year.

The pupils have worked faithfully to obtain their flag, and it is hoped they may long be spared to enjoy it.

Nervous Derangement and Constipation.

After years of suffering from nervous derangement and constipation, and after being treated by several leading physicians, from whom I obtained no relief, I was induced to try S. S. S.

Soon after commencing its use, I found my appetite much improved, and that the use of cathartics, which I had taken almost daily for twelve months, was no longer necessary.

Since childhood I have been subject to sick and nervous headache, but since December 1, 1888, at which time I commenced taking S. S. S. I have had only one attack, and that was when I neglected to take the Specific.

I do not now have to take purgative medicines. J. A. REID, Bolling, Ala.

Miss Nellie Reynolds visited her grandmother, Mrs. Palmer, at Manchester, Tuesday.

H. L. McNair returns to Washington next Saturday, taking in Detroit and Buffalo on the way.

C. E. Williamson is in New York this week, personally superintending the sale of his immense poultry shipments.

Albert Howard and Walter Wimple went to South Lyon, Tuesday, to attend the funeral of their cousin, Miss Estella Weatherhead.

Dr. Farlin, who is delivering a course of lectures in Clinton this week is an old Lenawee boy, having lived in Raisin 25 years ago.

Joe Robbins has rented a house in Tecumseh, and will come back here to live. His many old friends will gladly welcome him home again.

The ladies society of the Baptist church will hold a social at the chapel, on Thursday, Dec. 5. Supper from 5:30 till 6:30. All are invited.

Clarence Frost, of Adrian, has published a neat little paper called Frost's Poetry and Art Journal. He was in Tecumseh Tuesday distributing the same.

J. S. Kinney has secured the exclusive sale of the Lee Folding Extension and Work tables for this vicinity, and you can buy them as cheap as the old style table.

Hannibal Osborn is buying poultry again this fall, and has very fine quarters fixed up in the rear part of Kinney's furniture building. He deals mostly in choice turkeys.

The Woman's Relief Corps will give a supper at G. A. R. hall, Tuesday, Dec. 10. Supper served from 5 to 7 p.m. at 10c, after which will occur the drawing for the silk quilt. All are invited. BY ORDER COM.

The Adrian Times says that the examination of James Cooley took place before Justice Wightman. This is a mistake. The examination was held before Justice Davidson, and lawyer Wightman appeared for the defense.

Friday evening the pupils of Raisin Valley Seminary were entertained by a lecture from Prof. Curtis of the Adrian high school. The subject of the lecture was "The Metric System." A fine description of the great pyramid was given, and afterwards the weights and measures were discussed.

While the trainmen were unloading Ed. Williamson's safe at the Lake Shore depot last Friday morning, one of the brakemen, named Ben Eagan, was unfortunate enough to have his leg broke. He was helping with a large pry, when he slipped and the safe lurched to one side, and the pry struck his leg, fracturing the bone. He was taken to his home in Adrian.

A special train made up of an engine, drawing room car and diner, passed northward on the Mackinaw Tuesday. Walston H. Brown, of New York, receiver of the Mackinaw, and his father-in-law, Robert G. Ingersoll, the great lawyer who is his solicitor, were on the train. The balance of party is made up of the officials of the road. They were on a tour of inspection, which will very likely result in substantial improvements being made on the road.—Hudson Gazette.

A private letter recently received from Cass Miller at Pratt, Kansas, contains this intelligence, which will be of general interest to the public: Alva Waring and family have just arrived at Pratt, from Ford county, and they will make their home here in the future. We have now several Tecumseh families in this town, comprising those of James Hanford, Wm. McConnell, Bert Morley, Grant Hanford, (just married last week) Alva Waring and L. C. Miller. All are well. We are feeling quite elated at present over the prospect of a big sugar refinery being located here in the spring, one of the largest in the United States.

Jerry Root went to Cleveland yesterday.

Mrs. Hattie Hurd went to Ann Arbor yesterday.

Are you going to church this morning? If not, why not?

Buy your underwear of Anderson & Co. and save money.

The Royal Arcanum will elect new officers next Tuesday. A full attendance is desired.

Geo. Stanley started for Cheboygan Tuesday, where he has secured a position in a lumber office.

The regular election of officers of the Odd Fellows' lodge will be held next Tuesday evening. A full attendance is desired.

Prof. Skinner goes to Rome Center to-night to play at a dance, and Charley Skinner goes to Manchester for the same purpose.

Wolc. Marsh is still making improvements. He has just built an addition at the rear of his market to accommodate his sausage machine.

A new orchestra is being organized by Prof. Skinner, which he is confident will be the best one Tecumseh ever had. They played for the dance last evening at Armory hall.

The M. E. Sunday school gave an interesting missionary concert last Sunday evening. The program of songs, recitations, reading, etc., was well executed, and pleased the large audience.

The state Sunday School association will hold its annual session at Grand Rapids Dec. 3, 4 and 5. B. F. Jacobs, of Chicago, and Wm. Reynolds, of Peoria, Ill., will be present. Several Sunday school workers from this vicinity will attend.

The Charlotte Republican, published by Adj. Gen. D. B. Ainger, editorially says: "The impression has gotten abroad that there will be no encampment of the state troops next year, upon what authority we do not know. There is, however, every reason to expect that an encampment will be held and that Goguac lake will again be chosen as the place."

Mother's meeting at the rooms of the W. C. T. U. opposite the Baptist church, Friday, Dec. 6th at 3 p.m. Mothers whose children are grown regret that they did not have the benefit of such meetings when their children were small, therefore special invitation is extended to mothers of young children to attend.
M. C. WOOD, Secretary.

Scribner's Magazine for December is a holiday number of striking beauty and attractiveness in its illustrations, and the text of the articles will appeal to the fancy and sympathy of readers rather than to their desire for instruction in practical affairs. With the exception of the fourth installment of Harold Frederic's serial, each article is complete in this issue.

The annual praise and thank offering service of the young ladies' Missionary Society of the Presbyterian church will be held in the lecture room of that church at 3 o'clock next Sunday afternoon, Dec. 1. Miss Patton, of Kolapoor, India, will be present and speak. The ladies of the Presbyterian and other congregations are cordially invited to attend the service.

Mrs. Warren Holdridge, sister-in-law of Supervisor Holdridge, and widow of Warren Holdridge, who died about a year ago, died at her home near Holloway, Friday afternoon. She was taken ill soon after her husband's death, and lingered along until yesterday. Thinking she had been poisoned she requested that a post mortem examination be made on her remains. In compliance with the request, Drs. F. R. and A. W. Segur and Dr. Harry Hull, of this city, made an examination with a local physician, and found that she came to her death from cancer in the stomach.—Adrian Times.

Died, at his residence south of this village, of pneumonia; Lewis C. Kenyon, aged 61 years.

Mr. Kenyon was born in Saratoga county, New York, on November 13, 1828, and was therefore, one day past sixty-one years old when he died. The deceased has been a resident of Lyons township for twelve years, coming here from Lenawee. He leaves six sons and a daughter to mourn his loss. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. F. J. Freeman, at the Crane school house, and the remains interred in the Faxon cemetery.

The above is clipped from the Lyons Herald of Nov. 16. The deceased once lived in Lenawee county and had many friends in this vicinity who will learn of his demise with regret.

The opening of the big auditorium in Chicago is destined to surpass anything in the amusement annals of this country. The auction sale of boxes resulted in first choice being purchased by George M. Pullman for $2,100. This is in addition to the regular price of the box. A party of messenger boys have been camping in line in front of the box office since Friday last, awaiting the opening of the regular sale of tickets. The season will be opened by Patti in concert; then follows a line of standard operas, assisted by all the wonderful hydraulic machinery of the stage, and a chorus and orchestra such as has never before been brought together in this country.

Born, Sunday, Nov. 24, to Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Rising, a son. Frank says he is a rock-ribbed Democrat.

Tecumseh W. C. T. U. will give a supper at their temperance room, Friday, Nov. 29. Supper served from 5 to 7 at 10 cents. Useful articles for sale at that time.

The HERALD and Detroit Free Press, both papers, or the HERALD and Detroit Tribune, both papers, four months for 50c. Good gracious, what cheap reading.

The Rev. Mr. Crousay will preach in the Reformed churches of Macon as follows: Macon, Sunday, Dec 1st at 10:30 a.m. South Macon, 2:30 p.m. At DeSpelder church, 7 p.m.

The National letter file cabinet is the best arrangement yet devised for filing away letters and papers. The business men of Tecumseh are invited to call and examine the cabinet in this office.

We have made arrangements by which we can furnish The Ohio Farmer, the leading weekly agricultural, live stock and family journal of this country, and the Herald both one year, postage paid, for only $2. This is a bargain that every farmer should accept.

Died, at Tecumseh, Mich., on Sunday, Nov. 17, 1889, in the 79th year of his age, James Gregg.

Mr. Gregg was born in Conark, county Antrim, Ireland, March 7, 1811. On December 25, 1836 he was married to Miss Esther Adams, who still survives him. In April, 1843, Mr. and Mrs. Gregg found a home in Groveland, Livingstone county, N. Y. Here they lived for twenty years and more. In 1865, they removed to Illinois and in 1883 they found a final home in Tecumseh. Twelve children were born to these parents, nine of whom are still living, three of them sons, and six daughters. Mr. Gregg bequeathed to the family he left behind, the legacy of a character unstained. He was trained religiously in younger years, and died a member of the Presbyterian church. He was very fond of singing and a teacher and leader in sacred music in his earlier years. True to his early education he was particularly fond of singing the psalms. In the last few years of his life his chosen companions were Baxter's Saints Rest and the Bible. Into the rest of which he was so fond of reading, we trust he has now entered.

kind face absent from the table." In a few days the mail brought a reply from Mrs Hartley accepting the invitation.

During the month or more that elapsed Kate and Gerald were frequent companions. A graduate of the Virginia military institute and finely educated for a profession, he found in her own ready intellect a charmful sympathy that was greater than even her beauty. He never told his love, but the eyes of both were traitors. One day he invited her to a stroll, and the path led to the old mill where they first met. They had conversed long and pleasantly when he suddenly inquired, "Are you superstitious, Kate?"

"No; why do you ask?"

"Because in a few weeks we shall probably part, not to meet again for a long time, and I want some pledge from you that our friendship shall remain unbroken. See," said Gerald, plucking two rose leaves from a flower she wore and throwing them into the river flowing at their feet, "if they float down the stream side by side, not drifting apart or sinking, they may indicate our possible future, but if"—

"What mockery!" quickly interrupted Kate, impulsively laying her hand upon his. "Don't throw our lives into the scales to be balanced by two rose leaves!" The words were spoken before she thought of their full significance.

"No, watch them—there they go!" And the two white winged messengers went out upon their mission. Steadily they continued their course, side by side, but approaching nearer and nearer each other until just as they were disappearing from view, they were merged, as it were, into one petal.

"Do you accept the omen, Kate?" asked Gerald, with a tender look that meant a volume of love songs. They clasped hands; not another word was spoken beyond the mute eloquence of their eyes, but they understood each other from that moment and for all time.

Preparations for Thanksgiving went on apace, and they were on a scale of such magnitude that even those for a Virginia Christmas could not excel. Kate's father and mother and Uncle Robert Hartley arrived in due time, and had been duly installed in the great guest chambers, and what with holly, mistletoe and flowers, the old mansion took on a festive look it had not worn for a generation. Besides the immediate members of the family and the northern visitors, the rector of the neighborhood church, Col. and Gerald Bruce and a few of the most intimate friends of the Bainbridges, living in the vicinity, were among the invited guests, but not one dreamed of the great surprise in store.

Of the Thanksgiving dinner itself, when the day arrived and the broad folding doors of the dining hall were thrown open, what need be said save that Aunt Dilsey and her satellites had expended upon it all the resources of kitchen and farm, while the old time house servants, proud of their breeding, had graced the festive board with all the beauty they could command! It was a feast to provoke an appetite. There were rare dishes, sumptuously cooked and sumptuously served; the choicest fruits and wines of the long ago; marvels of workmanship and age in family plate, china and glass, and in numerable things delicious to the senses of taste, smell and sight—all insinuated into its composition. But it was a dinner long to be remembered in more than æsthetic or culinary respect.

Conversation was in its most eloquent and reminiscent stage, when suddenly the old Colonial knocker on the front door rang out with a sharp rat-tat-tat, as it had never sounded through the house before. What can it be? A momentary silence falls upon the little company while Uncle Ben hastens to answer the summons, but in a minute he returns with his black face fairly ablaze with light.

"Miss Dorsty—Miss Madgitty"—the words almost choke him in their joyful endeavor to get out—"there's a gentlum outside wi' red face an' a big crap'er whisker, who say he like ter cum in an' git sum ob dis dinner; he talk so bresh, I 'spec I better ax him," and the faithful old servant grins from ear to ear.

The words are scarcely spoken before the burly, broad shouldered figure of a sun browned man enters, and with a hearty "Home again—How d'ye all?" rushes forward to embrace Aunt Margery, who happens to be sitting nearest to him at the head of the table. "Brother Will! Brother Will!" and with a scream of delight the three sisters throw themselves into his arms weeping for joy.

Yes, after many years of absence and adventure, the sailor boy, now a captain, had returned to the old homestead, that he had not seen since the war. And what a time they had! How the gray headed servants, forgetting the grand dinner, forgetting everything in their affection, crowded into the dining room to see young "Mar's Will" once more! The whole plantation seemed to have gone mad with joy that the first Thanksgiving over celebrated in Beverly Farms should be so blest. Indeed, for everybody the cup of happiness appeared to have been filled to the brim. But it was not so. There was yet another surprise in store.

In the evening there was such a gathering around the big fire in the chimney place as the old parlor never had witnessed. With Dorothy on one side, and Margery—her usually grave face brightened by love—on the other, each holding the brawny hand of their brother, and Kate in his lap, her eyes sparkling with delight at the possession of a new uncle, Will recounted his adventures during the preceding twenty years. He told them how, after the war, he had found service on an English steamship and, by reason of his naval training at Annapolis, had been rapidly promoted until he became a captain in the Oriental and Peninsular company, but that most of his time had been spent in voyages between far distant ports in the east under circumstances that did not permit him to take a sufficiently long furlough to visit home.

Besides, he knew from the letters of his sisters that their financial condition did not require his presence or the abandonment of a profession that was yielding him more than a competence. However, the longing had so grown upon him to return to the scenes of his boyhood, he at last had resigned his commission and determined that henceforth Beverly Farms should be his home. "And, to think of it," he added, "that I have found on the night of my arrival a Thanksgiving party in Old Virginia a brother-in-law (turning to Col. Hartley) whom I have never seen and this lovely niece. Verily, we all have reason to be thankful."

"But what's this, Kate?" continued the captain, toying with a curiously wrought locket which dangled among other ornaments from a girdle around her waist.

"That's a trinket," replied Kate, "that belongs to Uncle Robert, yonder, and I wear it only by his permission. Tell the story, Uncle Bob, for I always love to hear it."

"It is an incident of the war," was the rejoinder, "and at a time like this one has no right to recall sad memories or speak of such a thing as battle and bloodshed." Urged by the others, however, Uncle Robert proceeded: "After the assault on Pickett's division at the battle of Gettysburg, among the prisoners who fell into the hands of my regiment was one in whom I became deeply interested. He was a large, handsome, brown eyed man, a native of this state, and, like myself, a major. Though desperately wounded, and with the chances of living all against him, not a murmur of regret, save for his family, escaped his lips. I often visited him, but each visit revealed the fact that his hours were numbered. One morning while seated by his bedside, he asked me to hand him his faded, gray uniform which hung at the foot of the cot. I did so, and taking from one of the pockets a knife, he requested me to rip a place in the left breast of his coat. There I found a bit of paper wrapped around a small hard substance, which on further examination proved to be a little star. "This," said he, looking at it lovingly, "was cut from the coat of Gen. Stonewall Jackson, my noble leader. It was my fortune to be one of those who bore him to the rear when he fell at Chancellorsville, and when his coat was removed I cut this star from his collar and placed it where you have just now found it—where it would always be nearest my heart. I returned to the battlefield and fought as I never fought before. This souvenir I wish to leave with you in order that you may sometimes think of the Virginia soldier you have befriended. And this," said he, taking the crumpled paper, "is the last leave of absence Gen. Jackson ever gave me. Should you ever have the opportunity, send it to my wife." Before another word was uttered a change passed over his face and he became unconscious. The next day he died. Shortly after that I was transferred to the Army of the West. When the war ended I had the two mementoes inclosed in the little casket that Kate now wears.

During this recital, more than one pair of eyes were moist, and the voice of the manly soldier himself, who recalled this episode, trembled as he reached forward and opening the locket said: "See, here is the star of Stonewall Jackson, and here the furlough signed by him permitting Maj. Albert Fairfax to visit home for thirty days."

"Oh, poor husband!" cried Margery, with a great sob, as she fell almost swooning in the arms of her brother. Dorothy and Clara assisted her from the room to her own chamber, where for a time grief held its sway. But Margery was made of stern stuff and had been too long the mistress of her emotions to let them interfere with the happiness of such an hour as that, and when she rejoined the company, the old calm was restored and there was not a trace in the sweet, placid features of the great heart ache she had undergone.

Approaching Major Hartley as she reentered the room, she laid her hand in his and said: "You have been my good angel, and God has sent you here that I might look upon the brave man who stood by that other brave man in his hour of need, whom I loved and have mourned by day and night. Thank you, major, or Uncle Robert, as I may now call you, and remember that this Thanksgiving of ours has broken down all barriers, and henceforth, in this house, there shall be no north, no south, no east, no west—only one grand union of hearts."

And they all said—amen!

It proved especially true in the case of Kate and Gerald, for when another anniversary rolled around they sat at the same festive board as husband and wife. Uncle Robert since that time has been a frequent member of the Beverly household, enjoying with Capt. Bainbridge the sports of the season, and finding charm in the quiet companionship of Margery, who never tires of listening to the story of Gettysburg and the heroism of her brave husband and his men.

History of the Day.

Thanksgiving day was a long time in getting itself established. It is not an exclusively American affair, and was not generally observed in the west and south till after the war; but in New England it may be said to date from the middle of the Seventeenth century. Over 3,000 years ago Moses instructed the Israelites to keep a feast after they got established in the Holy Land. They called it the Feast of the Tabernacles, and for eight days, following the close of harvest, they dwelt in booths made chiefly of green boughs and feasted on corn, wine, oil and fruits. In the course of time a splendid ritual for this feast was developed, including much singing in responsive choruses. Somewhat later the Greeks held a nine days' feast of similar character, in which slaves were allowed to take part, and all criminals except murderers. The Romans had a similar feast in honor of Ceres, goddess of grain.

The Saxons had a "Harvest Honie," and after them the English, which festival was observed in a sort of way in some of the American colonies. In the year 1621 the Pilgrim Fathers tried to celebrate it, but it was rather a gloomy affair. In 1623 a ship loaded with provisions failed to arrive and Governor Bradford appointed a day of humiliation, fasting and prayer, but the expected ship arrived and so they made it a day of thanksgiving.

Ninety Indians, headed by Chief Massasoit, took part. In 1631 the Puritans ran out of provisions, and Feb. 9 was named as a day of fasting and prayer. As in the other case, the ship arrived, and they had a feast instead. June 15, 1637, there was a general service in all the churches of New England to give thanks for the great victory at Fort Mystic over the Pequots, and on the 12th of October following a general service and feast, in honor of peace and the settling of some religious differences. Forty years later Governor Andros ordered the people to give thanks on the first day of December; but they hated Andros and did not think worth a cent. Several persons were arrested for treating the proclamation with contempt, but this struck the home authorities as rather ludicrous, and his conduct was disapproved.

Thereafter Thanksgiving was pretty generally observed in all England and the states settled by her, the governor naming the day. George Washington recommended to congress the naming of a national day in 1789, for the adoption of the constitution; it was done, and the day was generally observed. In 1795 the proceeding was repeated. James Madison appears to have issued the first presidential proclamation on the subject, in 1815, in honor of the return of peace. Forty-eight years passed before President Lincoln issued the second one, in 1863. Since then every president has followed the custom and the day is nationally observed at last.

THE GREAT REMEDY FOR PAIN

WHAT IT IS. SIX STANDARD VIRTUES.

ITS EFFICACY.—1. Its effects are prompt. 2. Its relief is sure. 3. Its cures are permanent. 4. Its cures; no return of pain. 5. It cures in all cases used according to directions.

1st. It is in one word a cure; it is not merely a relief and in no sense a cure-all; it is the product of scientific research.

2nd. It strengthens while it soothes and subdues, heals and cures; it literally conquers pain.

3rd. Its effects are curative and permanent to the whole group of muscular miseries and nervous agonies.

4th. It does not merely irritate the outer surface, nor does it merely soften or relax a constricted muscle. To its specific action a superior curative virtue is superaded.

5th. It penetrates deeply but gently; searchingly and surely, seeking the pain-spot in an effort to conquer.

6th. Each constituent of the formula has a recognized intrinsic virtue to serve most surely the cure of pain.

CLEOPATRA.

A POWERFUL AND THRILLING ROMANCE

—OF—

Ancient Egypt.

—THE—

Literary Sensation of Two Continents!

They are not fixed as men are fixed; they rise more high and sink more low—they are strong and changeful as the sea. I say to thee, Harmachis, beware of this Charmion; for, like the ocean, she may float thee home; or, like the ocean, she may wreck thee, and, with thee, all the hope of Egypt!"

CHAPTER X.

OF THE COMING OF HARMACHIS TO THE PALACE; HOW HE DREW PAULUS THROUGH THE GATES; CLEOPATRA SLEEPING; AND THE MAGIC WHICH HARMACHIS SHOWED UNTO HER.

THUS it came to pass that on the next day I arrayed myself after the fashion of a magician or astrologer, in a long and flowing robe. I placed on my head a cap, about which were broidered images of the stars, and in my belt a scribe's palette and a roll of papyrus written o'er with mystic spells and signs. In my hand I held a wand of ebony, tipped with ivory, such as is used by priests and masters of magic. Among these, indeed, I held high rank, filling by knowledge of their secrets which I had learned at On what I lacked in that skill of hand which comes from use. And so, with no small shame, for I love not such play, and hold this common magic in contempt, I set forth through the Bruchium to the palace on the Lochias, being guided on my way by my uncle Sepa. At length, passing up the avenue of Sphinxes, we came to the great marble gateway and the gates of bronze within which is the guard-house. And here my uncle left me, breathing many prayers for my safety and success. But I advanced with an easy air to the gate, where I was roughly challenged by the Gallic sentries and asked of my name, following and business. I gave my name, Harmachis the astrologer, saying that my business was with the Lady Charmion, the Queen's lady. Thereon the man made as though to let me pass in, when a Captain of the Guard, a Roman named Paulus, came forward and forbade it. Now, this Paulus was a large-limbed man, with a woman's face and a hand that shook from wine-bibbing. Nevertheless, he knew me again.

"Why," he cried, in the Latin tongue, to one who came with him, "this is the fellow who wrestled yesterday with the Nubian gladiator, that same who now howls for his lost hand underneath my window. Curses on the black brute! I had a bet on him for the games! I have backed him against Caius, and now he'll never fight again, and I must lose my money, all through this astrologer. What is it thou sayest—thou hast business with the Lady Charmion? Nay, then, that settles it. I will not let thee through. Fellow, I worship the Lady Charmion—ay, we all worship her, though she gives us more slaps than sighs. And dost thou think that we will suffer an astrologer with such eyes and such a chest as thine to cut in the game? By Bacchus, no! She must come out to keep the tryst, for in thou shalt not go."

"Sir," I said, humbly and yet with dignity, "I pray that a message may be sent to the Lady Charmion, for my business will not brook delay."

"Ye Gods!" answered the fool, "whom have we here that he can not wait? A Cæsar in disguise? Nay, be off—be off! if thou wouldst not learn how a spear prick feels behind."

"Nay," put in the other officer, "he is an astrologer; make him prophecy—make him play tricks."

"Ah," cried the others who had sauntered up, "let him show his art. If he is a magician he can pass the gates, Paulus or no Paulus."

"Right willingly, good sirs!" I answered, for I saw no other means of entering. "Wilt thou, my young and noble Lord"—and I addressed him who was with Paulus—"suffer that I look thee in the eyes? Perchance I may read what is written there."

"Right," said the youth; "but I wish that the Lady Charmion was the sorceress. I would stare her out of countenance, I warrant me."

I took him by the hand and gazed deep into his eyes. "I see," I said, "a field of battle at night, and about it bodies stretched—among them is thy body, and a hyena tears at its throat. Most noble sir, thou shalt die of sword thrusts within a year."

"By Bacchus!" said the youth, turning white to the gills, "thou art an ill-omened sorcerer!" And he slunk off—shortly afterward, as it chanced, to meet this very fate. For he was sent on service and slain in Cyprus.

"Now for thee, great Captain!" I said, speaking to Paulus. "I will show thee how I will pass those gates without thy leave—ay, and draw thee through them after me. Be pleased to fix thy princely gaze upon the point of this wand in my hand."

Being urged thereto by his comrades, this he did, not willingly, and I let him gaze till I saw his eyes grow empty as an owl's eyes in the sun. Then suddenly I withdrew the wand, and, shifting my own countenance into the place of it, I seized him with my will and stare, and beginning to turn round and round, drew him after me, his face, fierce and drawn, fixed, as it were, almost to my own. Then I slowly moved backward till I had passed the gates, still drawing him after me, and having passed, I jerked my head away. But he fell to the ground, to rise wiping his brow and looking exceedingly foolish.

"Art thou content, most noble Captain?" I said. "Thou seest we have passed the gates. Would any other noble sir here present wish that I should show more of my skill?"

"By Tarnis, Lord of Thunder, and all the Gods of Olympus thrown in, no!" growled an old Centurion, a Gaul named Brennus. "I like thee not, I say. The man who could drag our Paulus through those gates by the eye, as it were, is not a man to play with. Paulus, too, who always goes the way you don't want him—backward, like an ass—Paulus! Why, sirrah, thou must have a woman in one eye and a wine cup in the other, to draw our Paulus thus."

At this moment the talk was broken, for, coming down the marble walk, followed by an armed slave, was Charmion herself. She walked calm and careless, her hands folded behind her and her eyes gazing at nothingness, as it were. But it was when Charmion thus looked upon nothing that she saw most. And as she came the officers and men of the guard made way for her bowing, for, as I learned afterward, this girl, next to Cleopatra's self, wielded more power than any one about the palace.

"What is this tumult, Brennus?" she said, speaking to the Centurion, and making as if she saw me not; "knowest thou not that the Queen sleeps at this hour, and if she be awakened it is thou who must answer for it, and that dearly?"

"Nay, Lady," said the Centurion, humbly; "but it is thus. We have here"—and he jerked his thumb toward me—"a magician of the most pestilent—um, I crave his pardon, of the very best sort, for he hath but just now, only by placing his eyes close to the nose of the worthy Captain Paulus, dragged him, the said Paulus, through the gates that Paulus swore the magician should not pass. By the same token, Lady, the magician says he has business with you—which grieves me for your sake."

Charmion turned and looked at me carelessly. "Ay, I remember," she said; "and so he hath—at least the Queen would see his tricks; but if he can do none better than cause a sot"—here she cast a glance of scorn at the wondering Paulus—"to follow his nose through the gates he guards, he had better go whence he came. Follow me, Sir Magician; and for thee, Brennus, I say keep thy riotous crew more quiet. For thee, most honorable Paulus, get thee sober, and next time I am asked for at the gates give him who asks a hearing." And with a queenly nod of her small head she turned and led the way, followed at a distance by myself and the armed slave.

We passed up the marble walk which runs through the garden grounds, and is set on either side with marble statues, for the most part of heathen Gods and Goddesses, wherewith these Lagidæ were not ashamed to defile their royal dwellings. At length we came to a portico with fluted columns very beautiful to see, but of Grecian style of art, where we found more guards, who made way for the Lady Charmion. Crossing the portico, we reached an outer marble hall wherein a fountain softly plashed, and thence by a low doorway a second chamber, known as the Alabaster Hall, most beautiful to see. Its roof was upheld by light columns of black marble, but all its walls were paneled with alabaster, whereon were graven Grecian legends. Its floor was of rich and many-hued mosaic that told the tale of the passion of Psyche for the Grecian God of Love, and about it were set chairs of ivory and gold. At the doorway of this chamber Charmion bade the armed slave stay, so that we passed in alone, for the place was empty save for two eunuchs who stood with drawn swords before the curtains at the further end.

"I am vexed, my Lord," she said, speaking very low and shyly, "that thou shouldst have met with such affront at the gate; but the guard there served a double watch, and I had given my commands to the officer of the company that should have relieved it. They are ever insolent, these Roman officers, who, though they seem to serve, know well that Egypt is their plaything. But it is not altogether ill, for these rough soldiers are superstitious, and hereafter they will fear thee. Now, bide thou here while I pass into Cleopatra's chamber, where she sleeps. But now have I sung her to sleep, and if she be awakened I will call thee, for she waits thy coming." And without more words she glided from my side.

In a little time she returned, and, coming to my side, spoke:

"Wouldst see the fairest woman in all the world asleep?" she whispered. "If so, follow thou me. Nay, fear not; when she awakes she will but laugh, for she bade me be sure to bring thee instantly, whether she slept or woke. See, I have her signet."

So we passed up the beautiful chamber till we came to where the eunuchs stood with drawn swords, and these would have barred my entry; but Charmion frowned, and drawing the signet from her bosom held it before their eyes. Thereon, having examined the writing that is on the ring, they bowed, dropping their sword points, and we passed through the heavy curtains, broidered o'er with gold, into the resting place of Cleopatra. Beautiful it was beyond imagining—beautiful with many colored marbles, with gold and ivory, gems and flowers—all art can furnish and all luxury can dream of were here. Here were pictures so real that birds might have pecked the painted fruits; here were statues of woman's loveliness frozen into stone; here were draperies fine as softest silk, but woven of a web of gold; here were couches and carpets such as I never saw. Here the air was sweet with perfume, while through the open window places came the far murmur of the sea. At the further end of the chamber, on a couch of gleaming silk and sheltered by a net of finest gauze, Cleopatra lay asleep. There she lay—the fairest thing that man ever saw—fairer than a dream, and all about her flowed the web of her dark hair. One white, rounded arm made a pillow for her head and one hung downward to the ground. Her rich lips were parted in a smile, showing the ivory lines of teeth; and her rosy limbs were damped in so thin a robe of the silk of Cos, laid about her by a jeweled girdle, that the white gleam of flesh shone through it. I stood astonished, and, though my thoughts had little bent that way, the sight of all her beauty struck me like a blow, so that for a moment I lost myself as it were in the vision of its power, and at heart was grieved that I must slay so fair a thing.

Turning suddenly from the sight I found Charmion watching me with her quick eyes—watching as though she would search my heart. And, indeed, something of my thoughts must have been written on my face, in a language that she could read, for she whispered in my ear:

"Ay, it is a pity, is it not? Harmachis being after all a man, methinks thou wilt need all thy ghostly strength to nerve thee to the deed!"

I frowned, but before I could frame an answer she touched me lightly on the arm and pointed to the Queen. A change had come upon her; her hands were clenched, and about her face, all rosy with the hue of sleep, gathered a cloud of fear. Her breath came quick, she raised her arms as though to ward away a blow, and then with a stifled moan sat up and opened the windows of her eyes. Dark they were, dark as night; but when the light found them they grew blue, even as the sky grows blue before the blushing of the dawn.

"Cæsarion?" she said; "where is Cæsarion? Was it then a dream? I dreamed that Julius—Julius who is dead—came to me, his bloody toga wrapped about his face, and, having thrown his arms about his child, led him away. Then I dreamed I died—died in blood and agony; and one I might not see mocked me as I died! Ah! who is that man?"

"Peace, Madam! peace!" said Charmion. "'Tis but the magician Harmachis, whom thou didst bid me bring to thee at this hour."

"Ah! the magician—that Harmachis who overthrew the giant? I remember me now. He is welcome. Tell me, Sir Magician, can thy magic mirror give forth an answer to this dream? Nay, how strange a thing is sleep, that wrapping the mind in a web of darkness, straightly compels it to its will. Whence, then, come those images of fear rising on the horizon of the soul like some untimely moon upon the twilight sky? Who grants them power to stalk so lifelike from Memory's thronging halls, and, pointing to their wounds, thus confront the Present with the Past? Are they, then, messengers? Doth the semi-death of sleep give them a foothold in our brains, and thus uproot the severed thread of human kinship? That was Cæsar's self, I tell thee, who but now stood at my side and murmured through his muffled robe warning words whereof the memory is lost to me. Read me this riddle, thou Egyptian Sphinx, and I'll show thee a rosier path to fortune than all thy stars can point. Thou hast brought the omen, solve thou its problem."

"In a good hour do I come, most mighty Queen," I made answer, "for I have some skill in the mysteries of sleep, which is, as thou hast rightly guessed, a stair whereby those who are gathered to Osiris may from time to time enter at the gateways of our living sense, and, by signs and words that can be read of mortals thereto duly learned, repeat the echoes of that Hall of Truth which is their habitation. Thereby also the messengers of the guardian Gods may descend in many shapes upon the half-loosed spirit of their choice. For, O Queen, to those who hold the key, the madness of our dreams can show a clearer purpose and speak more certainly than all the acted wisdom of our waking life, which is a dream indeed. Thou didst see great Cæsar in his bloody robe, and he threw his arms about Prince Cæsarion and led him hence. Hearken now to the secret of thy visions. 'Twas Cæsar's self thou sawest coming to thy side from Amenti in such a guise as might not be mistaken. When he embraced the child Cæsarion he did it for a sign that to him, and him alone, he passed his greatness and his love. When he seemed to lead him hence he led him forth from Egypt to be crowned in the Capitol, crowned the Emperor of Rome and Lord of all the lands. For the rest, I know it not. It is hid from me."

Thus, then, I read the vision, though to my sense it had a more evil meaning. But it is not well to prophecy evil unto Kings.

Meanwhile Cleopatra had risen, and, having thrown back the gnat gauze, was seated upon the edge of her couch, her eyes fixed upon my face the while her fingers played with her girdle's jeweled ends.

"Of a truth," she cried, "thou art the best of all magicians, for thou readest my heart, and out of the rough shell of evil omen drawest the hidden sweet!"

"Ay, O Queen!" said Charmion, who stood by with downcast eyes, and methought there was bitter meaning in her soft notes; "may no rougher words ever affront thy ears, and no evil passage less closely tread upon its happy sense." Cleopatra placed her hands behind her head, and leaning back looked with half-shut eyes.

"Come, show us of thy magic, Egyptian," she said. "It is yet hot abroad, and I am weary of those Hebrew Ambassadors and their talk of Herod and Jerusalem. I hate that Herod, as he shall find—and I will have none of the Ambassadors to-day, though a little do I yearn to try my Hebrew on them. What canst thou do? Hast thou no new trick? By Serapis! if thou canst conjure as well as thou canst prophecy thou shalt have a place at court, with pay and perquisites to boot, and thy lofty soul doth not scorn perquisites."

"Nay," I answered, "all tricks are old; but there are some forms of magic to be rarely used, and with discretion, that may, perchance, be new to thee, O Queen! Art thou afraid to venture on the charm?"

"Naught I fear; go on and do thy worst. Come, Charmion, and sit thou by me. But, stay, where are all the girls?—Iris and Merira—they, too, love magic."

"Not so," I said; "the charms work ill before so many. Now behold!" And, gazing at the twain, I cast down my wand upon the marble and murmured a spell. For a moment it was still, and then, as I muttered, the rod slowly began to writhe. It bent itself, it stood on end, and of its own motion moved. Next it put on scales, and behold it was a serpent that crawled and fiercely hissed.

"Fie on thee!" cried Cleopatra, clapping her hands; "callest thou that magic? Why, 'tis an old trick that any wayside conjurer can do. I have seen it a score of times."

"Wait, O Queen," I answered; "thou hast not seen all." And even as I spoke the serpent seemed to break in fragments, and from each fragment grew a new serpent. And these, too, broke in fragments and bred others, till in a little space the place, to their glamored sight, was a seething sea of snakes, that crawled, hissed and knotted themselves in knots. Then I made a sign, and the serpents gathered themselves about me, and seemed slowly to twine themselves about my body and my limbs till, save my face, I was wreathed thick with hissing snakes.

"Oh, horrible! horrible!" cried Charmion, hiding her countenance in the skirt of the Queen's garment.

"Nay, enough! Magician, enough!" said the Queen; "thy magic overwhelms us."

I waved my snake-wrapped arms, and all was gone. There at my feet lay the black wand tipped with ivory, and naught beside.

The two women looked one upon another and gasped with wonder. But I took up the wand and stood with folded arms before them.

"Is the Queen content with my poor art?" I asked most humbly.

"Aye, that am I, Egyptian; never did I see its like! Court astronomer art thou from this day forward, with right of access to the Queen's presence. Hast thou more of such magic at thy call?"

"Yes, Royal Egypt; suffer that the chamber be a little darkened and I will show thee one more thing."

"Half am I afraid," she answered; "nevertheless, do thou, Charmion, even as this Harmachis says."

VINEGAR BITTERS

Grandest Modern Discovery.

Triumph of Pharmacy.

ELIXIR OF LIFE AND HEALTH.

Is one that promotes digestion, improves the appetite, cleanses the liver, purifies the blood, and stimulates brain and nerves without injurious reaction, and one that may be taken alike by adult or infant. Profane compounds, made of vile rum or bad whiskey, sweetened or flavored, under the titles of bitters, tonics, &c., produce effects far worse than the disease for which they are taken.

Vinegar Bitters is a pure tonic, a nervine without being narcotic, a blood purifier without poison a liver tonic without purging; and above all, a life-giving stimulant without alcohol. The only medicine with such powers in the world.

A GENUINE TEMPERANCE BEVERAGE,

far surpassing alcohol in any shape as a tonic, and it might be called

LIQUID LIFE,

since it stimulates, invigorates and regulates digestion, nutrition, secretion, excretion, respiration, and all the functions whereby life is maintained—we literally take in vitality in spoonsful.

It is not too much to assert that the equal of Vinegar Bitters does not exist and no counterpart or compound with similar virtues has ever been known.

CALIFORNIA,

is remarkable for nothing else, would be immortalized by the production of the medicinal fruits, roots and herbs of which this Bitters is composed. Many of them used by the Indians and the medical profession in the treatment of chills and fevers, rheumatism, catarrh, consumption, neuralgia, headache, liver complaint, kidney disease, jaundice, gout, piles, boils, skin diseases, &c., &c., too numerous to mention, but easily understood when the action of the Bitters on the vital functions is remembered. The discovery was partly accidental but the present

HOLLOWAY HASH.

JAMAICA, Ia., Nov. 16, '89.

DEAR HASH:—Please use caution in sending the HERALD, which may contain anything from my pencil, and mark it "strictly personal." Mrs. H is a little bit ticklish how I write for the papers, since I got tangled up in a correspondence to the Perry paper, implicating some of the breakers of a certain commandment, and making them howl what they would do if they were only sure it was me who did the writing. But I must proceed with Miss Golden's dream. I stood in my office with my derby hat (which I won on old Ben) slightly cocked to one side, my spectacles resting upon the bridge of my nasal projection, my elbow resting on the ticket counter, and told her to proceed in as revised a form as possible.

"I will not detain you long, Mr. H, I presume it is unnecessary for me to refer to the fact that I am not young, yet my age does not show upon me like some peoples'; true there are a few silvery hairs sprinkled among these golden (a bright red) tresses, but still the average man would not take me to be over 27, would he?"

"Well, Miss Golden, physiollgraphically speaking, I don't think I am above the average man, intellectually, and my opinion therefore, might be that of the average man upon most subjects. If I were selling woman at auction, I would never bring you forward until I had a blind man for a bidder."

"Your opinion of my chances for marriage are good, and in unison with my own. I dreamt that I was married. We had a concourse of friends and relatives at my home, and they presented us with most elegant presents. My husband was so kind that I would sooner have died than to see him frown displeased. I have always had a vague dread of dying and filling a single grave, and making the journey to kingdom come unprotected by a kind and loving husband. You can imagine my grief when I awoke and found that there was nothing in it. 'Twas only a dream. Do you think that the dream was a sign of an approaching proposal?"

"No, my dear madam, quite the opposite. Dreams always go contrary to the impression they convey upon the victim. That dream settles it, you are not to be mated upon this earth."

Speaking of the productions of this part of Iowa, we find corn and oats raised in abundance, but that is about as far as the farmers patronize the grain industry. Wheat don't do well here. Winter wheat freezes out and spring wheat does'nt do well for some reason. Farmers make most of their money raising stock. There is a vast difference between the farm of Iowa and the Michigan farm. You seldom see the thrifty appearance, the elegant residences and barns out here that you Michigan people have. While there are some nice places, they are sadly in the minority. There is no timber to speak of and what is consumed is subject first to the $2 tariff, second the freight rates, third the wholesalers' and fourth the retailers' profit. If there was plenty of timber there would be as fine homes in Iowa as any state in the union. Corn is selling for 10c for 75 lbs., and isn't wanted very badly at that. There seems to be a great many hogs, and the prospect of a low market next year seems quite flattering. People in this section of Iowa are about disgusted with the cattle industry. They claim there is more money in hogs.

We have a coal mine within a mile and a quarter from the city limits, which is just being opened up. The vein is 32 inches thick, and is of a superior quality. 10 men are working day and night upon it, and it is hoped that it will be worked to good advantage. The vein is 79 feet below the surface and is protected by a 25 foot slate roof. This fact is a great thing for a miner for it saves having pillars to hold up the earth above the vein. It is supposed that the home consumption will clean up all that is mined this year.

I am at work drawing views of the village, which if I get drawn to suit, will send to Holloway P.O. to be posted for the benefit of those who may feel interested in knowing what kind of a place Jamaica is.

F. C. HOLDER.

During the week shipping has been quite active, as follows: Baled hay by M. H. Bowen; hogs by Stephen Hoag; potatoes and oats by Mr. Ganung of Blissfield, and a car load of shelled corn shipped in by Mr. Cole. Also, two car loads of sheep by Frank Rector.

The Nimrods have returned from the north, but alas not a deer or a bear was considerate enough to accompany the sportive gentlemen on their return trip. However all report a very interesting and pleasant excursion, just the same.

And now the young Nimrods (local talent) have waked up to the fact that thanksgiving day is the day of all days to go hunting and sally forth with death in their eyes, and guns on their shoulders, to declare vengence on all game that dares to cross their dangerous pathway.

John Heaney, Jr., leads the van for horsemanship. It certainly requires skill to train a team to perform certain acrobatic feats. The other day as he was shutting a gate he had just driven through, the team determined not to wait for him, so started in for a race and also came out ahead, hung the wagon on a fence they had jumped, and nobody hurt either.

Will Carlton enjoyed a very pleasant visit in Adrian Saturday, returning Sunday morning.

Rev. Mr. Vincent preached at the Free Methodist church on Monday evening.

Mrs. Belden returned from her Ohio visit in time to enjoy the ladies' social held at the house of Mrs. Geo. Kishpaugh on Friday. We understand she had a very enjoyable visit in the Buckeye State.

It is reported that F. G Florence is about to purchase the stock of B. E. Begel.

The widow of Warren Holdridge, who has been ill for a long time, died at her home near Holloway last Friday. The post mortem examination which she had requested was held by Dr. F. R. and A. F. Seger and Dr. Harry Hull of Adrian and Dr. Begel of Holloway, and revealed cancer in the stomach.

Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Macham returned from Milford, by the overland route last Tuesday evening, having visited in Oakland and Gratiot counties.

Mr. and Mrs. Sylvester Clark returned from their wedding trip on Tuesday morning.

LAKE RIDGE LACONICS.

Good weather for late sown wheat, fall plowing and those who never get through husking.

Mrs. S. F. Beck, of Fremont, Ohio, is visiting at the old home of J. G. Bafley.

The sixty-second birth-day of Mrs. J. Stewart, Nov. 16th, brought together over fifty friends and neighbors in kindly greeting. Many substantial tokens of esteem were manifest.

Henry Karcher has been in the northern part of the State several weeks looking up a home. At last report he was at White Cloud.

James Easlick and Valentine Hitchcock, two extensive farmers of Crawford county, Pa., have been visiting friends here the past week. They report everything at a stand still there the same as here, but say they can buy coal at the mine there for $1,75 that we pay $6 for here.

"Will" Easlick's family of four children are down with the scarlet fever but are doing as well as could be expected.

The family and friends of Mrs. Martha Osgood, (Aunt Patty) aged 82 years, held their thirty-third family thanksgiving anniversary at Richard Clarkson's, the 28th inst. A lengthy literary program was arranged for the occasion.

Vice President Morton's famous saloon—barroom'—'buffet'—'apartment' house, etc., 'puts the knob on.'—'The oldest inhabitant' is trying to draw a C. 'Take the witness.'

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.

Having purchased M. P. Brown's photo gallery, I will move into his rooms on Nov. 4. I still retain the rooms now occupied by me, but will do operating in Mr. Brown's gallery. This enables me to furnish the public with a better class of work than heretofore. I intend to make a specialty of life-size photo work and all kinds of enlarged pictures. You will also find a good line of picture frames, and in fact anything connected with my line of business. Hoping to be able to retain Mr. Brown's trade, I will endeavor to please the public and furnish them with a class of work second to none in Southern Michigan, and at reasonable prices. Thanking one and all for their past favors, I hope to retain their further patronage. Call and see me in my new quarters.

W. L. HECK.

N.B.—Mr. Brown will be at the gallery a short time to assist in anything that needs attention from his old customers.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to express our heartfelt thanks to the Orange Fraternity for the presenting of the beautiful floral gates ajar, and also to our friends and neighbors for their kindness and sympathy, in the sickness, death and burial of husband and father.

GEO. HEESEN.

Tormenting Skin Disease.

For twenty years I was troubled with a tormenting itching skin disease, which at times caused me great annoyance, and loss of sleep. I was treated by the best local physicians, but received no relief from them. I finally concluded to take Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) a half dozen bottles of which effected, what I considered a permanent cure, as I have felt no symptoms of the disease for over a year. W. T. COWLES, Terill, Texas.

$250 REWARD OFFERED.

WILLIAM PLATTE ROBINSON, of Richmond, Ind. (about 20 years of age, light hair and complexion, about five feet 10 inches high, erect in carriage, weight about 150 pounds) is missing from Lake City, Minn., since the evening of September 6th, 1889, where he was last seen rowing from shore of Lake Pepin. Was supposed to have been drowned, but is now believed to be wandering under aberration of mind, caused by a partial sunstroke suffered some days previously.

He wore a blue cutaway suit of light weight, a flamel shirt, and had with him a small bundle supposed to contain a red-striped or checked bathing suit. Is believed to have had with him a Smith & Wesson nickel plated revolver, an English lever gold watch with white open face and the name T. M. Brown engraved on back of the case, and a moderate sum of money. He had and may wear blue or green spectables, but not for any defect in sight. His nose has been broken by an accident and a cut through the upper lip left an indistinct scar, noticeable especially when laughing. He was an active member of the Y. M. C. A. a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, a member of Wheelman's Club and an ardent lover of all out-door sports and the gymnasium. Is an expert stenographer and type-writer, and an amatuer in telegraphy; might seek employment as such. Was spending vacation at Lake City, and was intending to go at an early day to St. Paul by river, spending a few days there, and at Minneapolis, thence to Chicago by rail and boat, and then home.

A liberal reward will be paid for his body or effects for any information leading to recovery of either or both.

Information may be given to or obtained from Geo. F. Benson, or H. A. Hubbard, Lake City, Minn.

Judging from the direction this boy is traveling it will not be out of the way to suppose he will be in this vicinity, and being a member of the League of American Wheelmen, it becomes the duty of every member of that order to exert his strongest efforts toward finding the whereabouts of the unfortunate boy.

MR. LEE. "Why, Addie, you needn't cry about it! I only said Mrs. Allen was a very well informed woman, and I wished you would follow her example."

MRS. LEE. "Yes, and last week you said you wished I could manage to look as stylish as Mrs. Allen,—and she makes all her own clothes. But she has what I haven't."

MR. LEE. "What is that?"

MRS. LEE. "Well, she gets all of her information from the Magazine they take. I admit that she knows all that is going on, and is bright and entertaining in conversation; but I could do as well as she does if I had the same source of information. She lent me the last number of her Magazine lately, and I learned more in one hour's reading, about various social matters and the topics of the day, than I would pick up in a month by my occasional chats with friends. It certainly covers every topic of interest, from the news of the day down to the details of housekeeping; and everything is so beautifully illustrated, too! Every time Mamie goes over to the Allens' she comes back and teases me to get you to take Demorest's Family Magazine, as the stories are so good. Even the boys watch for it every month, as a place is found for them also in its pages; and Mr. Allen swears by it. It is really wonderful how it suits every member of the family!"

MR. LEE. "Well, perhaps I had better send for a Specimen Copy; for, if it is anything like what you say it is, it will amuse and instruct the whole of us."

MRS. LEE. "I see that W. Jennings Demorest, the publisher, 15 East 14th Street, New York, is offering to send a Specimen Copy for 10 cents, so we can't lose anything, as each number contains a 'Pattern Order' entitling the holder to any Pattern she may choose, and in any size—which alone makes each copy worth 30 cents; and I just want a jacket pattern like Mrs. Allen's. The subscription price is only $2.00 a year; and I must say I can't see how they can publish so elegant a Magazine for so little money."

HISTORY OF UTAH

The only true history of Mormonism from its origin to the present time; endorsed alike by Mormons and Gentiles. Written without prejudice so you can see

UTAH AS IT IS.

Nothing so near approaches the miraculous as the rise of a new religion, founded by an illiterate man, in the keenest country in the world, and in the age which has given us the greatest inventions.

The finding of the plates, their translation, the first preaching, obtaining converts, founding of Navoo, origin of Polygamy, the exile from three states, founding a prosperous state in desert beyond civilization, to be overtaken, and passed by "Mers, the executive ability of Brigham Young, the struggle between Mormonism and the United States—this is thrilling as a novel, yet true history. Everybody wants it.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

The first snow storm of the season came on Tuesday night of last week, and your scribe enjoyed a cutter ride Wednesday P. M., being the first one to improve the occasion.

Richard Cadmus is on the sick list at present.

Little Dora Pocklington has been one of the sick children during the past week.

G. W. Clark is failing gradually and is unable to talk but is still conscious, and able to hear when spoken to.

Another change in the barber shop was made last week, Henry Luce having purchased the fixtures of Dr. Persivle, and will endeavor to conduct a first-lass barber shop in rooms of Dr. D. W. Loree's store, on the second floor.

Lawton's new meat market opens up business very encouraging.

Harrison & Bannister have very pleasant quarters in their new meat market.

The members of the Hall memorial library association will give a box social at the parlors of the library on Wednesday of next week. Ladies are requested to furnish the boxes, each to contain eatables for two, consisting of nuts, fruits and cake, or such delicacies as they may select. The boxes will be sold at auction, to the highest bidder. Those who were present at the social of like nature, given by the association last year, will remember the pleasant time enjoyed and are respectfully asked to come and help to make this one equal, if not far excel, all past like occasions.

The ladies church social will hold their next social at the home of Mrs. H. J. Williams, on Friday evening of the present week. A cordial invitation is earnestly extended to all to come and enjoy a pleasant evening.

The ladies of the W. C. T. U. prepared a basket of eatables and a small purse of cash and gave to Mr. and Mrs. Gunn on Thanksgiving day. They report them usually well. Mr. Gunn, however, has become deaf and is failing gradually.

The next meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held at the home of Mrs. Jas. Pocklington next week Thursday afternoon. The third annual election of officers took place at the meeting held at Mrs. Ella Waring's, Nov. 26th, resulting as follows:

Prest.—Mrs. Ella Waring.
1st. V. P.—Mrs. Sarah Rappleye.
2d. " —Miss Ella Pattison,
Rec. Sec.—Mrs. Addie A. Kelley.
Cor.—Mrs. Frank Pocklington.
Treas.—Mrs. Mary Sutton.
Chaplin—Mrs. Elizabeth Linn.
Ass't. Chap.—Miss Ella Pattison.

Supt. of Scientific Instruction in Public School—Mrs. Sarah Pocklington.

Supt. of the Poor.—Mrs. M. A. Barrett.

Supt. of Mothers Meeting—Mrs. Jno. Arner.

The annual election of officers of the Hall Memorial Library Association was held in the library on Tuesday P. M., Dec. 3d. '89, as follows:

Prest.—Dr. R. H. Nellson.
Vice Prest.—W. R. Wilson.
Sec.—Miss Salome Clark.
Treas.—W. L. Jones.
Directors—G. P, Waring, Dr. D. W. Loree, M. J. Martin, T. H. Temple, F. J. Temple, Mrs. H. J. Williams, G. D. Arner.

Lewis Thompson of Cooper, Mich., is visiting relatives and acquaintances here at present.

Charlie VanDeventer of Ithaca, Mich., is making relatives here an indifinite visit.

Hattie Daniels of Onsted, who is attending College at Adrian, spent several days with her brother, Prof. H. W. Daniels, at the home of Mrs. H. J. Williams.

Chas. Clark of Elkhart, Ind., spent some time with his parents, G. W. Clark and family, last week.

R S, VanVleet and wife of Battle Creek, visited relatives here the most of last week.

Those attending school at Ypsilanti spent Thanksgiving vacation at Detroit and at home.

Prof. Martin Palmer of Flat Rock, made a flying call at his parents last week.

Anna and Earl Kilpatrick, who are attending school at the Normal, spent Thanksgiving and the remainder of the week with friends here.

Geo. Hinsdale of Dundee, spent a part of last week as the guests of Agt. A. J. Sutton and Mrs. John Arner.

Will McNeal and wife spent Wednesday with their aunt, Mrs. John Arner and family.

Philip Clark of Hillsdale, visited relatives here during the fore part of the week.

Jennie Allen spent Thanksgiving with her brother, Will Allen, agent at Tecumseh.

Charlie Nichols of Tecumseh, visited Vern Allen from Friday until Sunday.

The exercises of the Missionary concert given at the church Sunday evening, passed off very pleasantly, and were very interesting. The declamation by Master Fredie Temple is worthy of special notice as he rendered it very nicely. The solo, "If I Were a Voice," given by Miss Belle Barlow, was enjoyed by all. The entire program is worthy of special comment, but time and space prevents further mention.

The following resolution was passed at the last meeting of the board of directors of Hall library association: Resolved—That the president, secretary and librarian be authorized to prohibit any further drawing of books by delinquents, after Dec. 15th, 1889. We presume this is an oversight with most of those who are in arrears, and hope they will attend to the matter promptly by handing the amount to the Librarian, F. J. Temple or R. H. Nelson.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

C. S. Burroughs went to Toledo Monday.

Mrs. E. R. Smith, Mrs. Laura Tuttle and Mrs. W. D. VanTuyle went to Tecumseh Tuesday.

Will Mattison expects to return to Brooklyn next week.

Pet VanDeMark is visiting friends in Hudson.

James Ferrick has moved into A. McDermott's house recently vacated by William Muir.

Chas Ward arrived home from Cairo the first of the week where he has been on business for a couple of weeks.

J. T. Clark went to Detroit Wednesday to buy an engine for his creamery.

Ed Coffin is on the sick list.

Geo Goosmer has typhoid fever.

The Episcopal parsonage is completed.

Clinton chapter, No. 40, R. A. M., held their annual election Tuesday evening. The following are the officers elected for the ensuing year:

Geo Runyon—High Priest.

C. C. Rowland—2nd "
John Martiney—3rd "
Wm C. Rogers—Treasurer.
D. Woodward—Secy.
J. F. Martiney—Tyler.

Mrs Guiwits is improving slowly.

David Haggart, Jr., came near losing his house Thanksgiving. He left home a little after noon and on returning about four o'clock, found the floor around the sitting room stove on fire. He quickly subdued the flames, but had he been a little later, the chances are the house would have burned. Supposed the fire caught from a spark.

The eighth annual fair given by the ladies of the St. John's Episcopal church will be held at town hall on the afternoon of Wednesday, Dec. 11 after which supper will be served from half-past five till half-past seven for 15 cents. Everyone is cordially invited. The funds raised will be used for the rectory.

On the evenings of Friday and Saturday, the 13th and 14th, will be given an entertainment at town hall. The four act comedy of "Our Bachelors," a play written for and played with great success by Robson and Crane is the play. HOLLOWAY HASH.

Who says Holloway is not on the boom? Just come down and take a look for yourselves. Three weeks ago we could count three stores, a meat market, drug store, machine shop and blacksmith shop and postoffice. We now have added to these our bran new town hall, a jewelry shop and tonsorial parlors. Hooray for Holloway.

Geo Holloway lost a very valuable mare last Sunday; from what cause we are unable to learn.

Floyd Florence, fostering fatherly fondness for family, feeling fearful of future fasting, finds fast friends feeling fairly for Floyd's fat fortune. Floyd forthwith fingers forth fortune, fastening fair features forward favorably for future fortunate feats, fatening forthwith from forking forth fine fancy fruits for fine folks. He is now duly installed in Regel's grocery as master of his own ship and will run a hair cutting establishment in connection with his groceries.

A few days of fine weather now and the farmers will have all their corn stalks drawn and stacked, the prevailing damp weather for the past few weeks preventing their getting them in sooner on account of their condition.

Maurice Nay was seen Monday in town with a crosscut saw on his shoulder. We wonder what it means.

Mr. and Mrs. Campbell, of North Morenci, visited their two daughters, Mrs. Mitchell and Mrs. Preston at Thanksgiving time.

Mrs. John Heaney entertained relatives from Clinton for Thanksgiving.

Mrs. Fred Kopke will enjoy a few days of sociability with her sister, Mrs. Ira Allen in Hanover this week and next.

Mr. and Mrs. Lester Osgood, of Lake Ridge, with Mr. and Mrs. James Osgood, of St. Johns, visited relatives at Holloway on Saturday last.

A Mr. and Mrs. Miller, newly married, visited their uncle Miles Drouliard last week.

Charles Macham is taking a short vacation and visiting his brother A. D. at the same time.

The young folks of the Presbyterian church had a very pleasant entertainment and oyster supper last Thursday evening at the house of Wm Fowler.

The concert of the Presbyterian Sunday School went off very successfully. Some very excellent essays were read and the entire program went off in an excellent manner.

Uncle Ned Broadbent went off smiling as a new dollar Wednesday morning. We shall expect some wedding cake passed down this way.

A boy made his appearance at the home of Frank Holdridge Monday afternoon.

BRITTON BUDGET.

Christmas comes next.

How do you like this weather.

Game is coming into market in great quantities.

Albert Jackson died last Thursday after a long illness.

Saturday was a great hog day. Our buyers shipped two double deckers and a car load of new milch sows.

Dave Sloan moves in Lyme Hause's house on the farm until he can get a house in town.

Geo. Smith met with quite an accident Thanksgiving, while getting ready to go to the funeral of S. Underwood's wife. He slipped and dislocated his ankle and broke a bone in his leg, which will lay him up all winter.

The big hunt is over and Will McCarby was the winner by 1400 counts.

Will Randall's brother-in-law sent him a very fine deer. It arrived just in time for Thanksgiving.

Lyman Hause gave a Thanksgiving dinner and about 40 of his relation were there.

Another store in town.

Rev. Frazee made John Britton and S. B. Coller a short call Monday even. en route to Blissfield to give a lecture. He used to be pastor of the Ridgeway M. E. church.

Nell Easterly and Carrie Dennis started for Ypsilanti, Monday. Nell to visit her grandmother and Carrie to attend the Cleary business college.

Protection does not protect. That is becoming pretty evident. Does prohibition prohibit? That is still a mooted question.

Commenting on the Australian system of voting, tried this season in Massachusetts, an eastern exchange remarks: "There is no telling what a voter will do when left alone with his God and his lead pencil."

President Harrison pleased himself in supporting Billy Mahone for governor of Virginia. Since election it is possible that he is not so well pleased with himself as he might have been if he had not pleased himself.

Gen. Butler is mentioned as a probable Prohibition candidate for governor of Massachusetts next year. Well, why not? He has been both a Republican and a Democratic candidate. Why should he not give the prohibs a chance?

It is rumored that Dudley and Tanner have formed a co-partnership to engage in the pension claim business. It will be a daisy firm to wage war on the surplus. Like Davy Crockett's coon, the surplus may as well come down now.

Mr. Reed, of Maine, has received the caucus nomination for speaker, and hence will become Mr. Carlisle's successor. The monopolies have scored another victory in this nomination. The candidates who stood for tariff reform and money reform were all snowed under.

Of all the inanimate things, an old, rusty gun is about the cussedest. If it is known to be loaded a man may explode a box of caps and labor a whole day in his efforts to remove the charge. If the gun is supposed to be empty, all a man has to do to bring out the contents is to look into the barrel.

Ex-President Cleveland has said many good things, but rarely a better one than he did when he said, in speaking of the discussion of the question, what shall we do with our ex-Presidents? "The best way of disposing of them is to give them a chance to earn their daily bread in peace."

Miss Kate Field in her interesting prospectus of her forthcoming journal says: "From an impartial public I hope for support in the welcome guise of subscription, advertising and suggestion." A long experience in journalism warrants us in assuring Miss Field that if she will hustle around and get the subscriptions and advertising, the public will take great pleasure in keeping her supplied with suggestions.

It is rank injustice to criticise Vice-President Morton because twenty cents a glass is charged for whisky in the bar of his Washington hotel. Nothing but the highest price will give the Vice President's bar tone above the ordinary saloon. Something at least is due in this matter to the dignity of the office. In mercy's name, if the Vice President must keep a bar, let him keep a high-toned—that is to say, a high priced one.—Detroit Free Press.

FARMERS IN DEAD EARNEST.

The farmers of the west in convention at St. Louis had a difficult time trying to discuss the matter of low prices for what they sell and high prices for what they buy without getting into political warfare. Mr. Lindbloom, a Chicago grain merchant, told them that he thought the state should interfere to prevent grain gambling. Mr. Colman, permanent president of the convention, said the tax of 47 percent on everything the farmer consumes with no returning compensation is what is eating out his substance, and a reform in that direction is the only thing that will relieve the farmer from the depression that weighs down his business.

Mr. Blue, a Kentucky farmer, chairman of the committee on resolutions, presented the work of his committee, the substance of which was that the farmers were the hardest workers and most economical class in this country; that their business was unprofitable; that they were in debt to the amount of half the farm value of the United States, and are yearly growing poorer; that this state of things does not exist in other callings, where men amass colossal fortunes with but small labor and capital; that as a result of their poverty their children grew up in ignorance, and their wives are carried by hard labor into early graves; that they recognize the price paid for their products in foreign markets fixes the price at home, and that certain foreign duties must also be paid before their products can go into such markets, therefore they resolved to petition congress and the president of the United States to make such reciprocity treaties with those foreign nations to whom the farm surplus is shipped as will cause the removal of foreign customs and duties from farm products, thereby causing higher prices for our exported farm surplus and increasing the price at home; that congress take such action, either by the passage of laws or the repeal of existing laws, as will destroy existing monopolies and trusts and prevent the formation of others; that to the end of securing farming implements cheap the present laws imposing a duty on such implements be repealed and the raw material entering into their manufacture be admitted free; that they are more interested in the realization of these objects than the success of any political party, and that copies of resolutions be furnished the president and secretary of state of the United States.

That is a clean diagnosis of the case and prescription for its remedy. The resolutions called forth hot discussion, and the protectionists averred that the political aspect of the question should be barred from their deliberations. An extremely hard thing to do, one would say, if legislation has anything to do with farmer's prosperity, or lack of it. Resolutions were adopted to form a permanent organization, to be known as the Interstate Wheat-growers' Association, two members from each state and territory in the Mississippi valley to form the executive board. The building of joint stock elevators and a resolution to memorialize Mr. Porter, superintendent of the census, asking that he collect data and report in his next volume what per cent of farmers own their farms free from mortgage, the gross amount of farm mortgages, etc., were adopted.

This is the most significant and cheering move among the farmers recorded in a long time. They enter upon their work in the right spirit, the spirit of honest inquiry and evince a determination showing that they will not soon be lulled into quietude by the song of any political siren who tells them they are prosperous and happy when they know their pockets are empty and they are harrassed by debt. Let them be not afraid to "tackle the tariff." The subject is of vital importance to them. Either a protective tax is a failure or they are denied their share in its benefit. It may be for the farmers of the Mississippi valley to solve the problem.

THE SILVER QUESTION.

During the session last week of the national silver convention, in St. Louis, a strong paper was presented by Mr. John Thompson, vice president of the Chase bank of New-York. He favors the coinage of silver up to the full maximum allowed by law, which is $4,000 000, to determine the disputed points. He thinks the effect would be so salutary on business that free coinage would follow. Continuing he says:

With the demonetization of silver began an era of contraction not perhaps shown by the aggregate figures of the outstanding currency, but by the disproportion between the increase of the currency and the business of the country, which has increased out of all proportion to the growth of our aggregate circulating medium. Of the mass of gold in the country obtained since resumption some $300,000,000 is kept in the treasury, and is virtually no part of the working currency. It is only drawn out when used for foreign shipment. Our working currency consists of legal tender notes, national bank notes, silver coin and silver certificates. The latter do not now increase as fast as national bank notes are retired. Therefore it can truthfully be said that the stock of currency that does the work of the country is slowly but surely diminishing, while the business demands upon it are constantly increasing. Thus there have been two influences at work tending to increase the measuring power of money in the United States and consequent depreciation of property; one of the general effect of the demonetization of silver, and the other the contraction of the peculiar kind of currency used. While our dollars are of silver, and the silver certificates are based upon them, so far both these dollars and their representatives have been restricted in amount and kept on a gold basis by a policy that has favored the gold monometallic standard. The demonetization of silver has been and is a wicked preference given to the creditor over the debtor classes of our entire population, and it is this preference that is driving our middle classes into poverty and enabling millionaires to multiply their millions. Nothing, in my opinion, will save our people from a social revolution so surely as the full remonetization of silver, and giving it all the advantages we now give to gold, both in law and in ruling of our treasury department.

This argument is in accord with general western sentiment, and it is gratifying to observe that advocacy of the silver dollar and silver certificates is growing in the east. The monometalists are learning by experience that the gold standard will not suffice for the transaction of the great business of this country, and the two precious metals, gold and silver, are bound to be the basis of our circulating medium. They started on an equal footing, and there they must remain, representative of the solidity of American institutions.

A REPUBLICAN PAPER FOR FREE WOOL.

The Chicago Tribune, Republican, recognizes that wool is the great obstacle to tariff reform. "The Democrats," it says, "proposed to free-list raw wool and cut the duties on woolen goods about one-half. That would greatly cheapen a prime necessary of life—woolen goods of all kinds—without compelling a reduction of the wages paid in the woolen factories. With free raw wool so much cheaper manufacturers could undoubtedly reduce the price of woolens very materially without cutting down the wages of their workmen. The Republican Senators, however, were determined to protect woolgrowers, and proposed a material increase of the present high tax on wool and on several kinds of woollen goods. What does Iowa want—higher protection for wool or cheaper woollen goods? Nothing connected with tariff revision is so difficult to deal with as the tax on raw wool. It has been called the key of the tariff issue. It turns really on the point whether the mass of the sheep raising farmers feel more interested in maintaining the wool tax than in cutting down the tax on woolen goods."

GOVERNMENT AND BUSINESS.

Grover Cleveland responded to a toast at the banquet of the New York Chamber of Commerce and his words were as sensible as usual. Among other things he said:

Good government is the object of every patriotic aspiration of our people. But good government is so unlike a thing to be gained by dreaming of it, and in some thing so practical and palpable, that it is best judged by business tests; and thus the condition of the business of a country is properly considered a reliable indicator of the nature of its government and the manner in which such government is administered.

Of course, the conception of business here intended must not be confused with the selfish scurry and sordid clutching after wealth which we every day see about us, heedless of the rights of others and utterly regardless of any obligation to aid in the nation's growth and greatness. This is not the business of a country; nor should the narrow and circumscribed success of such endeavor be recognized as evidence of a beneficent government or wholesome laws. The active strong impulse which, starting from important centres, steadily premeates the entire land, giving to our tradesmen everywhere healthy prosperity, to our toilers remunerative labor, and to our homes comforts and contentment, constitute phases of the business of our country which we love to recognize as proofs of the value of our free institutions and demonstrations of the benign operation of just legislation. But when these factors of general thrift and happiness are wanting, we may well fear that we are not in the enjoyment of all the blessings of good government.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

TO THE EDITOR—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their express and post office address. Respectfully,

Effects of Modern Life.

Eminent authorities unanimously agree that the high pressure methods of modern life are rapidly making us a race of helpless invalids—subject to all manner of nervous affections, headaches, insanity, dizziness, neuralgia, backache, hysteria, nervous troubles of the heart, stomach, kidneys, brain, etc. Ladies and gentlemen who are thus afflicted, or who are compelled to keep late hours, do much mental or physical work, who worry or fret about business or domestic troubles, should remember that no other remedy in the world will so spedily cure these diseases, remove worry and the blues, induce tranquil sleep, relieve pain, or build up the brain and nervous systems, as Dr. Miles' great discovery, the Restorative Nervine. It contains no opium or morphine. Trial bottles free at Baker & Hall's Drug Store.

100 Ladies Wanted.

And 100 men to call on any druggist for a free trial package of Lane's Family Medicine, the great root and herb remedy, discovered by Dr. Silas Lane while in the Rocky Mountains. For diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys it is a positive cure. For constipation and clearing up the complexion it does wonders. Children like it. Everyone praises it. Large-size package, 50 cents. At all druggists'.

The best elixir of life we know of is to take the HERALD and the Detroit Free Press four months for 50c.

Forced to Leave Home.

Over 60 people were forced to leave there homes yesterday to call for a free trial package of Lane's Family Medicine. If your blood is bad, your liver and kidneys out of order, if you are constipated and have headache and an unsightly complexion, don't fail to call on any druggist to-day for a free sample of this grand remedy. The ladies praise it. Everyone likes it. Large-size package 50 cents.

The ship yards along the great lakes will be very busy this winter in constructing vessels of large tonnage for the Superior trade. Lake traffic will never again undergo a period of long depression. Money judiciously expended in lake craft will return many fold to the investors. The great cities of Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Toledo, Cleveland, Buffalo and other thriving points insure steady tonnage and lower end terminals while the millions upon millions of developing acres and hundreds of embryo cities of the northwest, together with the wonderful iron and copper mines of the Superior country will create a demand for all the first-class carriers that are likely to be placed on the inland water ways. Here we have the beneficent illustration of free trade. Go and come at pleasure; cargoes insured both ways; reciprocity at home of course; profit at both ends of the route; competition open for everybody; trade enough for all. Fortunate, indeed are people who locate along the inland seas.—Toledo Bee.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic researches, however, has proven this to be a fact, and result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to the applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet of this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 303 west King street, Toronto, Canada. [Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully.

Is a constitutional and not a local disease, and therefore it cannot be cured by local applications. It requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, working through the blood, eradicates the impurity which causes and promotes the disease, and effects a permanent cure. Thousands of people testify to the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for catarrh when other preparations had failed. Hood's Sarsaparilla also builds up the whole system, and makes you feel renewed in health and strength.

"I used Hood's Sarsaparilla for catarrh and received great relief and benefit from it. The catarrh was very disagreeable, especially in the winter, causing constant discharge from my nose, ringing noises in my ears, and pain in the back of my head. The effect to clear my head in the morning by hawking and spitting was painful. Hood's Sarsaparilla gave me relief immediately, while in time I was entirely cured. I think Hood's Sarsaparilla is worth its weight in gold." MRS. G. B. GRAY, 1029 Eighth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

"I was caught in a python's folds and saw fierce eyes glaring down into mine. If that tremendous coil were tightened around me, I knew that I might at once check my luggage for the undiscovered bourne. In this crisis of my fate I saw the great python's tail in close proximity to his mouth. I grasped the snake's tail and pushed a yard or two down his yawning jaws. Serpents seldom bite their prey; they lubricate it and suck it down. With such a long and cold-blooded creature, I calculated that it would take over a half a minute before the sensations of his tail could be conveyed to his head, and render him aware that he was committing suicide."

WILHELM'S IMPROVED CREAMERY CAN.

Unequalled for private Dairies of from one cow to full size Creamery. $5.00 will buy FOUR 3-GAL. CANS making a capacity of 12 gallons of milk, and will PRODUCE ALL THE CREAM FROM 4 TO 8 HOURS, in a vat, tub, or any receptacle the farmer may choose, holding water from 10 to 14 inches in depth, and at a temperature from 40 to 60 degrees cold. IT MAKES A PERFECT CREAM and combines the advantage of deep setting, rapid cooling, protecting the milk from all impurities of the atmosphere which so quickly taints cream. Also preventing souring by thunder storms, from flies, insects, dust, and all bad odors, thus preserving both cream and milk, clean and sweet. Over 200,000 in actual use in the U. S. One setting of milk is all that is needed to prove the merit of the can. Usual size of can, 3-gal., price $1.25. A liberal discount on orders of one dozen Cans and upwards. OF THE QUEEN OF SHEBA.

LESSON X, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, DEC. 8.

Text of the Lesson, I Kings x, 1-13—Commit Verses 6-8—Golden Text, Matt. xii, 42—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

This lesson presents to us Solomon at the very summit of his prosperity; he had asked for wisdom and God had given him wisdom which excelled the wisdom of all the children of the east and all the wisdom of Egypt, so that people came from all kings of the earth to hear his wisdom. (I Kings iv, 30, 34.) His great wealth and some of the uses he made of it is described in the portion of this chapter which follows our lesson and in Eccles. ii.

1. "And when the Queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon concerning the name of the Lord, she came to prove him with hard questions." The fact that this visit is fully recorded both here and in II Chron. ix, and that our Lord Jesus Himself referred to it (Matt. xii, 42) marks it as an event of more than ordinary importance; and our Saviour's reference to it points to a time and significance yet future. Sheba was evidently the uttermost part in one direction of the then known world, a country lying around the extreme south of the Red sea. To this remote land the fame of Solomon concerning the name of Jehovah had been carried. Observe here and throughout the lesson that it was not Solomon, but Jehovah, whose name and glory had thus spread abroad; Solomon being only the human and visible channel of this great glory.

2. "She communed with him of all that was in her heart." She came with a great train of camels bearing spices, very much gold and precious stones; somewhat as the wise men from the east came long afterward to the King of the Jews, bearing gold, and frankincense, and myrrh (Matt. ii, 1, 2, 11); and as all nations will yet do when once the glory of the Lord is risen upon Israel (Isa. lx, 1-6).

3. "And Solomon told her all her questions." The first verse says that she came to prove him with hard questions, but now that she sees and hears him, every question is answered. Seeing Jesus is the way out of every difficulty; and the many things which now seem to us so hard, dark and mysterious will all be cleared up when we see Him as He is.

4, 5. "And when the Queen of Sheba had seen * * * there was no more spirit in her." She had seen the Wisdom of Jehovah through him as he answered all her hard questions, and now she beholds with her eyes his house, his table, his servants, their standing, their apparel, his cupbearers, and his ascent to the house of Jehovah; and as she looks upon this seven hued rainbow of glory, all sense of her own importance is gone without an effort. A sight of the glory of God in the face of Jesus will effectually blind us to the importance of self and to the attractiveness of this present world.

6. "It was a true report that I heard." So must all those have said who, having heard of the fame of Jesus, came to prove him.

7. "Howbeit I believed not the words." She must have believed something, or she would not have come on this long journey; but she did not believe all she heard, for it seemed too grand to be true. Israel's oppression by the enemy was always because "they believed not in God and trusted not in His salvation."

"Behold, the half was not told me; thy wisdom and prosperity exceedeth the fame which I heard." It is impossible to tell the half or the hundredth part of the goodness of God, either of that which has been manifested in the gift of His dear Son or of that which is laid up for those who fear Him (I John iv, 9, Ps. xxxi, 19).

8. "Happy thy men, happy these thy servants which stand continually before thee, that hear thy wisdom." This was her estimate of the privileges which they enjoyed, and we do not think she said too much; but whether those who enjoyed these privileges thought as much of them as she did is another matter. Many who for the first time hear of the love of God say, "How long have you known this?" "Why did you not come and tell us sooner?" while those who possess the Bible and live within reach of Gospel privileges do not prize them enough to begin to enjoy them, much less think it worth while to put themselves out to tell others.

9. "Blessed be the Lord thy God, who delighted in thee, to set thee on the throne of Israel." In II Chron. ix, 8, the throne is called the throne of the Lord, and Solomon is said to be king for Him.

"Because the Lord loved Israel forever," or, as in II Chron. ix, 8, "To establish them forever." The unsearchable and unchangeable Love of God is the reason of all His dealings with Israel, or with the church, or with nations.

10. "There came no more such abundance of spices as these which the queen of Sheba gave to King Solomon." Gold worth three million of dollars, precious stones and of spices very great store; such was her offering to the king because of the name of Jehovah.

11, 12. "No such almug (or algum) trees were seen unto this day." The navy of Hiram brought not only gold and precious stones, but a great plenty of these trees which Solomon seems to have used chiefly for musical instruments (II Chron. ix, 11). Thus we have the Gentiles supplying the materials for prayer and praise, inasmuch as incense was a symbol of prayer (Ps. cxii, 2), and the musical instruments were to praise God with. Another foreshadowing of future times when "prayer shall be made for Him continually and daily shall He be praised" (Ps. lxxii, 15). A perversion of these things would be incense to idols or perfume for personal adornment, and music for mere personal gratification; thus Solomon soon degenerated, and thus it is largely today.

13. "And King Solomon gave unto the queen of Sheba all her desire, whatsover she asked." Besides that which he gave her of his royal bounty he gratified her every desire. He gave as a king, royally and cheerfully. Do we in any measure realize that we are joint heirs with Christ, that He will fulfill the desire of them that fear Him, that He is saying "If ye shall ask anything in My Name I will do it," and that we are even now blessed with all spiritual blessings in Him, while he eagerly longs to show us all His glory! (Ps. cxlv, 19; John xiv, 14; xvii, 24, Eph. i, 3). A full surrender to Him will cause us to enjoy all these things and Himself as including them all; but there is no other way.

"So she turned and went to her own country, she and her servants." She came thinking a good deal of herself, and laden with presents for the far famed king; she returned emptied of self and laden with his favors. Jesus will cheerfully receive whatever we willingly bring Him, but if we come with any sense of our own importance, and get any thing like a glimpse of Him, we shall wonderfully fall in our own estimation and be glad to receive graciously from Him, instead of thinking that we can give Him anything

BIG BLAZE IN BOSTON.

Property Worth $10,000,000 Destroyed and Several Lives Lost.

BOSTON, Nov. 29.—The most disastrous fire from which Boston has suffered since 1872 broke out about 8:20 Thursday morning in the six-story granite building owned by Jordan, Marsh & Co., and occupied by Brown, Durrell & Co., dealers in dry goods, on Bedford street, corner of Kingston. The great fire of 1872 broke out at the corner of Kingston and Summer streets, and the alarm of Thursday's fire was rung in from the same box that did similar duty at that time, when nearly $100,000,000 worth of property was consumed. The first alarm rung in was immediately followed by the first general alarm in Boston since 1872.

The burnt area covers only about two and one-half acres, and embraces portions of Bedford, Kingston, Chauncey and Columbia streets, the section where are massed the large wholesale dry and fancy goods establishments. Some twenty large granite and brick blocks were destroyed. These with their contents will involve a loss of $5,000,000. Six persons are reported missing.

Police Sergeant Kimball, Patrolman Haynes and ex-Councilman David E. Barry rescued seven people—six women and one man—from the building at the corner of Kingston and Bedford streets. The smoke had overcome them and they lay prostrate on one of the upper floors.

The origin of the fire is not definitely known, but is generally attributed to the electric wires.

There are about 200 firms burned out and 100 agents of New York and Western firms have had their headquarters destroyed. The seventy-nine insurance companies known to be interested carry an aggregate insurance of $3,600,000 on the burned property.

BOSTON, Nov. 30.—The latest estimate places the loss by the fire on Thursday at $10,000,000, on which the insurance amounts to $3,543,320, mostly in foreign companies.

A Woman's Discovery.

"Another wonderful discovery has been made and that too by a lady in this country. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so such relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus write W. C. Hamrick & Co., of Shelby, N. C. —Get a free trial bottle at

Death of a Michigan Judge.

JACKSON, Mich., Nov. 29.—Judge G. Thompson Gridley died of apoplexy Thursday afternoon. He was assessor of internal revenue under Johnson, and was the circuit judge before whom the famous Crouch trial was held. He was 73 years old.

Accidentally Shot Her Lover.

PITTSBURGH, Pa. Nov. 29.—While handling a revolver Josephine Welsh, of West Elizabeth, Pa., shot and instantly killed her lover, Charles Weite. The young couple were engaged to be married soon, and Miss Welsh is crazed with grief over the sad accident.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this receipt in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. Noyes, 149 Powers block, Rochester, N. Y.

KING OF THE BLOOD

The Most Thorough Purifier of the Blood Yet Discovered.

Cures all Humors, from a common tion to the worst Scrofula.

It purifies the Blood.
It invigorates the Liver.
It regulates the Bowels.
It strengthens the stomach.
It gives vivacity in place of lassitude; cheerfulness in place of gloom, and robust vigor in place of debility.

Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Disordered Liver, Constipation, Nervous Affections, General Debility, in short all the numerous diseases and discomforts caused by impure blood are speedily conquered by this powerful corrector, the chief and sovereign of all ancient or modern medical discoveries—KING OF THE BLOOD.

Its name is its best description as it is a royal dispenser of the blessings of health and vanquishes the foes that lurk in the blood.

It banishes PIMPLES, SALT RHEUM, SCALY ERUPTIONS, ULCERS, SCALD HEAD, FEVER SORES, and all SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

It checks CONSUMPTION in its early stages. It has frequently cured it when advanced.

It disperses TUMORS and CANCERS without the Surgeon's knife.

It cures DROPSY, general or partial.

It cures FEMALE WEAKNESS and DISEASE.

It reduces in a safe and effectual manner all swellings, external or internal.

It eradicates the effects of Venerial Disease and Mineral Poisons and establishes a sound constitution.

Many certificates, much further information and full directions for using, will be found in the pamphlet, "Treatise on Diseases of the Blood," in which each bottle is enclosed.

Price $1 per bottle containing 12 ounces, or 50 doses. Sold by druggists and medicine.

If your druggist does not happen to have it on hand, request him to order a supply of it for you as it will be cheaper than for you to order direct us, and less trouble.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railroad has over 3000 miles of road, magnificently equipped and managed. It is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnepeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Cassleton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China, Japan, and the journey to the Pacific Coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a lifetime once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. JUNE MANUFACTURING CO., BELVIDERE, ILL.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years,

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates it cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

THE HERALD FOR 1890.

On the 25th day of May last the HERALD entered upon the fortieth year of its publication. The 15th day of November last completed fifteen years under its present management, and we can truthfully say that the paper never had more friends or truer ones in Northern Lenawee than it has today. It never had a larger subscription list than now, and its prospects for a long career of future usefulness and influence were never more promising. But, like Cæsar, we are ambitious. We aim for a larger list and a wider field to swing in, and our terms for 1890 have been adjusted with that purpose in view. The offers we now present are more attractive and substantial than usual and the variety is such that every man who takes any kind of a newspaper can be accommodated. Read them carefully and note the advantages offered and then pass in your subscription before the opening of the new year.

OFFER NO. ONE.

We have made arrangements with that wide awake illustrated farm magzine, the American Farmer, published at Fort Wayne, Ind., and read by nearly 200,000 farmers, by which that great publication will be mailed direct to the address of any of our subscribers who will come in and pay up all arrearages on subscription and one year in advance from date, and to any new subscriber who will pay one year in advance. The regular subscription price of the American Farmer is $1.00 per year. It costs you nothing. The two papers at our full rate of $1.50 per year.

OFFER NO. TWO.

The modern magazine may be taken as embodying the best literature of the world, as the magazine editor pays the highest prices to novelists, scientists, statesmen, soldiers and even kings and princes for the best they can furnish in the literary line. The well edited magazine becomes an educating influence in the family circle whose importance cannot be overestimated. The special arrangements which we have made with the Cosmopolitan presents very unusual inducements. That magazine, though only in the tenth month under its new management, is already recognized as one of the most interesting publications of the day. You can obtain a magazine which gives you in a year nearly fourteen hundred pages of reading matter by the ablest writers of the world, including six hundred pages of illustrations that are unsurpassed in point of interest and execution at its regular price, only $2.50, and the HERALD free.

OFFER NO. THREE.

Ropp's Commercial Calculator is a practical arithmetic for practical purposes. It contains a large variety of useful, accurate and convenient tables, together with simple, short and practical methods for rapid calculations. It is a veritable vade mecum for the farmer, accountant, or merchant. It surpasses all books of a like character that have ever fallen under our notice. It is bound in limp leather, is of a size convenient to carry in a large pocket, and is sold for $1.00. Any subscriber paying up arrearages and one year in advance, or any new subscriber paying one year in advance at full rates, $1.50 per year, will receive a copy of this book free.

OFFER NO. FOUR.

The tendency of the times is to lower prices, except in those cases in which competition is killed by trusts. The HERALD is not a believer in trusts, but holds to the good old fashioned doctrine that competition is the life of trade. Hence we offer a liberal reduction in rates for the coming year. We have adopted both a cash and a credit rate. You can pay your money and take your choice. We will furnish the HERALD alone

WITHIN LENAWEE COUNTY

If paid after thirty days,	1.50

OFFER NO. FIVE.

We present herewith a large club list, which will enable our patrons to buy other newspapers and magazines at greatly reduced rates. This list comprises both weeklies and monthlies, political and literary, republican, democrat and prohibition. The man who cannot find something to please him in this list must be a difficult man to satisfy. These club rates mean cash in advance for both papers. We can take subscriptions for any paper pulished at reduced prices, but can give extra favorable terms upon all named in this list. Sample copies of these can be seen at the HERALD office. The full club list appears elsewhere.

A GOOD COUGH SYRUP.

There is nothing parents should be so careful about as selecting a cough syrup. Begg's Cherry Cough Syrup costs no more than the cheap and inferior nostrums thrown on the market. The best is none to good, be sure and get BEGGS' CHERRY COUGH SYRUP. We keep it on hand at all times.

FARMERS' UNION.

The Union met at the residence of Frank Davidson on Friday evening Nov. 28th. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather the attendance was good. The election of officers resulted as follews;

Pres.—M. Davidson.
Vice Pres.—B. VanNess.
Sec. & Treas.—Eunice Davidson.

After the literary part of the program had been carried out the question, "What are the best modes of producing corn, best varieties, and best way of disposing of the crop," was thoroughly discussed by the farmers present and resulted in a diversity of opinions and much practical information.

The next meeting will be held at H. B. Eaton's on Friday evening, Dec. 13th, and the following program prepared for the occasion:

Music—Ina Blood.
Read.—Sophia Martin.
Dec.—J. D. Cadmus.
Essay—Mabel Wood.
Whistling Solo—Mont Florence.
Rec.—Mary Eaton.
Music—Jared VanVleet.
Question—Is it beneficial for the farmers to join the Patrons of Industry? Led by James DuBois, followed by B. F. DePuy, W. F. Raymond, H. B. Eaton and others.

TECUMSEH AND FRANKLIN FARMERS' CLUB.

Notwithstanding the snow storm, the evening of Nov. 27th found a goodly number of farmers with their wives and children at the home of B. Hurry. The program for the evening proved to be very interesting. The society was very much pleased as well as entertained with music given by Mr. T. D. Strong and son.

The next meeting, Wednesday, Dec. 11th, at Mr. H. Hoag's with the following program:

Music—Mrs. Waldron and Mrs. Welch, Mr. VanValkenburg and Mr. Bramble.
Read.—Hettie Waldron.
Rec.—Mrs. Hurrey.
Song—Mrs. Welch and Mrs. Waldron.
Dec.—Fred Welch.
Condensed Novel—Mr. Clem Bramble and wife.
Charade—Mrs. Dubois.
Song—Mr. Bramble and Mr. VanValkenburg.
Read.—Mrs. Mary Mathews.
Dialogue.
Rec.—Pauline Wilson.
Musical Medley.
Question Box.

THANKSGIVING REUNION.

The year 1841, John Osgood died and left his widow Martha with six children. The administrator informed her that in a very few years her property would be exhausted in the support of her young family and the children would have to be put out. This was a sad and painful thought for the mother, and after long and careful consideration she concluded to invest her little all in a new farm in Michigan, where she might keep her little family together.

In the fall of '45 she broke up old ties and started for the new home with her six small children, the oldest of whom was sixteen years old and weighed but eighty pounds. After a long and tedious journey of nine days on the Erie canal and lake Michigan she reached Monroe, and was teamed to the new home, where but a rude log house and a little clearing with all the trials and adversities of pioneer life awaited her. In the struggle to keep the gaunt wolf poverty from the door and her children together, she braved difficulties for years that would have discouraged many a man.

As the years passed and her children came to maturity she was gradually relieved from the responsibility of supporting them and they became more than self-sustaining and brought many of the comforts of life back to her. They fully appreciated the struggles she had endured for them, and, when they commenced for themselves they sought the advice of their mother in the business affairs of life, and she was enabled to see them settle around her and the home that had become so dear to them all.

The most enjoyable day of the year to her, is when she gathers her children together in the old home, which she has not failed to do since she came to Michigan. As the family and their descendents have grown so numerous they organized themselves into a society which they called the "Martha Osgood Society," and this year they met at the home of R. C. Clarkson on Thanksgiving day. By eleven o'clock every one of her descendants, numbering about forty-one, including four generations, were present. At twelve o'clock dinner was served, where the many good things of life were provided in abundance, and which all enjoyed to their greatest capacity. They then adjourned to the elegant parlors and were called to order by the President of the Society, G. V. Osgood, and a very interesting literary and musical program was carried out.

Among the guests from abroad were Mr. and Mrs. Wm. LaSourette, and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Miller, Seneca Co. N. Y., J. S. Osgood and family, St. Johns, Mich., and John Osgood, wife and daughter, Toledo, O.

At a late hour they separated to long remember their forty-fourth annual reunion.

ONE WHO WAS THERE.

STRIVING FOR EXCELLENCE.

One common remark is general throughout a dairy section: I don't have any good market for my butter," and on this hundreds hinge an excuse for not attempting better performances in butter-making. But, as a rule, it will be found that it is the excuse for poor butter-making. Such dairymen do not see that a large proportion of butter must be sold in a butter market, and whoever buys it must ship it there, and scout the idea that they can ship their own butter. The impossible is again urged. "Never would hear of it if I did!" is another excuse for lack of business methods. Some one has said, "A dairyman's intelligence and business forte are measured by the amount of bran and oatmeal he feeds his dairy," a matter which is made plausible by the consignment to city dealers direct of the butter of hundreds of famed Western dairies, where it is sold upon its merits. Nor is the "special customer" a necessity with them, for the quality sells the butter, not the name of the maker, but the intelligence and skill that are conspicuously displayed on every package.

Here is displayed a quality that the average dairyman must aspire to, to obtain success. First he must so care for and feed his cows that the butter, when made by best known rules, will have quality to recommend it. Here is the secret of the remark quoted above, that "business and bran" go together in successful dairying. Then when this butter is made and ready for the consumer, the facilities for shipment are now so favorable that any dairyman can send his butter to a butter market and secure its sale thro' the office of well known commission men, who have special customers for certain lines and high grades of goods and the producer receives the benefit through this commission agent's sale.

It is all important when butter is made in large quantities on a farm that it shall be sold for money, and thus become one of the money crops, and not a commodity to be bartered away. When thirty days have passed it would be hard to recall the exact place or profit of the June or May butter, but if the returns come in money, it takes its place among the farm incomes, and so makes its presence felt.

This may not apply when the farmer is so situated that he can patronize a No. 1 co-operative creamery, and no other has a rightful place where farmers can agee to work together and for each other and to discard the speculator. All over the West are dairies, large and small, that could, if they would, make a better article and consign it to the great market direct, as fast as made, and so obtain a recognition and profit on their goods that would forever stop these 'no good market,' and ''twould be stolen" excuses for not oftener doing as well as the farmer knows how to do.

I have no doubt that tons of butter are made in every county and exchanged for this and that, which, if consigned direct to the Chicago and Elgin market, would have returned the maker double that received at the cross-roads grocery. The groceryman must treat all his customers alike, irrespective of the quality of the goods, and so no incentive is held out to excel. But the great market does discriminate; it does pay for skill and excellence. The maker is rewarded, and reward is always bestowed for not only continual well doing, but also for excellent and high attainment.—J. G. in Prairie Farmer.

CHEESE FOR FOOD.

If the American people would eat less greasy "hog meat," less indigestible pie crust, less digestion demoralizing preserves, sweet cake and the like, and more cheese, they would be less dyspeptic, and consequently a happier and more generally capable and useful people. A bread and cheese sandwich, with the slice of cheese cut about half as thick as the slices of bread, is not only a well balanced ration, which we all love to talk about in connection with stock feeding, but is a wonderfully satisfying and grateful one to a hungry mortal, be he young or old. The nutrition of such a lunch is greater than if the same weight of beef or pork were substituted for the cheese. It amuses us to see a man eat a great hunk of indigestible pie in connection with a bit of harmless cheese about an inch square, and in a few minutes begin to twist and contort the digestive portions of his anatomy, while he exclaims, "I can't eat cheese; it don't agree with me; I just eat a little piece, and it is almost killing me!"—Farm, Stock and Home.

Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh by expelling impurity from the blood, which is the cause of the complaint. Give it a trial.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

Calvin Crane of Adrian will plant 5000 pear trees next spring.

The big sink hole north of Hudson on the Mackinaw road is still giving trouble.

A ditch train with twenty men was put on the Mackinaw road last week, and they will probably be kept on all winter.

F. I. Kinney of Cambridge, has taken two first and second premiums at the Chicago fat stock show for the best display of butter.

Editor Kempton of the Adrian Courier has bought a new furnace to warm his building. He intends to leave nothing undone to make it pleasant and agreeable for people who call to pay their back subscriptions.

The committee on securing the world's fair for Chicago are organizing the creamery men of Michigan to secure their influence for the Garden City. H. E. Loyster, of this village, is one of a committee of six appointed to see that every last creamery man in Michigan is in line and shouting for Chicago.—Hudson Gazette.

L. H. Salsbury, of Adrian, is to deliver a lecture soon at the Raisin Valley Seminary on the subject of "Gettysburg." There is probably no one better able to discuss this subject than Mr. Salsbury, and those who heard him at the unveiling of the Michigan statue on the field of battle last summer, are loud in their encomiums.

Tecumseh's Thanksgiving services were union, the sermon being preached by Rev. Babbitt, of the Presbyterian church and the services held in the Methodist synagogue. A choir composed of Alf James, Dr. Catlin, Tom Adamson and M. P. Brown, did not sing. It wouldn't have been Thanksgiving had they warbled, you know.—Adrian Press.

Wm. D. Boies, a brother of the Governor-elect of Iowa, on his way East, stopped off at Hudson Friday, and paid his cousins, J. K. and C. Boies, a visit. Mr. B. owns a large dairy farm in Iowa, and carries on an immense business. His brother, the governor, although having the largest law practice in Iowa, runs a 2,500-acre farm near Grundy, in that State, from which he raised 12,000 bushels of oats and about the same amount of corn.—Hudson Gazette.

New quarters in the Bidwell Block, Tecumseh, will be fitted up for Beers Post, G. A. R. The boys will put it in excellent order, fitting up two rooms, and the Ladies Relief Corps will have sessions the same evening, and see whether their husbands are necessarily detained on business as late as has been the custom. Very proper, ladies. Make 'em "file right," and permit no flank movement or picket duty. The occasion doesn't require it, you know.—Adrian Press.

The Adrian Press of last spring said: "A. H. Palmer, of Brooklyn, the freight and ticket agent, telegraph operator, baggage-let-'em-down-easy-masher, village clerk, etc., has purchased a type writer and when his spare time is not wholly occupied in playing in the band, he thumps the machine to kill time." To this we will add that the Western Union Co., fearing he still had too much leisure, has placed four more telegraph lines in his office. We think Mr. Palmer will manage to keep busy now.—Brooklyn Exponent.

The new Vestibule train No. 5, had a narrow escape from being wrecked in the eastern part of Hillsdale, last Monday. Just before the train was due one of the section men, who was walking on the track, found part of a rail broken out near a crossing. He promptly procured help, flagged the coming train, and in a short time the damage was repaired. What the result might have been if the break had not been discovered just as it was, is fearful to contemplate.—Hudson Gazette.

We recently interviewed a number of the leading business men at Marshall, also at Hudson. Both places are what might be called "farmers' towns," but the mood of the dealers is widely different. Those of Marshall are downhearted because of dull trade while those of Hudson can scarcely take time to breathe, because of their many customers. In Marshall the city papers contain but a very few advertising cards, and we are informed that they appear but a few times in succession. Hudson's papers are full of advts. the year around; hence the business contrast.—Addison Courier.

A short time ago Mr. Rhoades, our postmaster, was requested by Congressman Allen to hand in his resignation. The postmaster replied he would do so, but would like an intimation as to who would be his probable successor so that he could make arrangements to dispose of the office furniture and fixtures. He received information a day or two ago that C. W. Back would be the next Postmaster. We also understand that candidate Fuller has a letter from the Congressman to that effect. The appointment will be made some time about the first of December, that the appointee may arrange his bond etc., and take possession January 1st.—Blissfield Advance.

OUR HOLIDAY GREETING.

"Thanksgiving comes but once a year," says Harper's Weekly. That remark is literally true, and the same thing may be said of the Fourth of July, of Christmas, and even of New Years itself. Some wise man has remarked that the United States have too few holidays. Be that as it may, it is probably true that "holiday week" or the intervening days from Christmas until New Years, is more universally observed by the masses of the people than any other holiday anniversary on the calendar.

Like all other good newspapers, the HERALD believes in properly celebrating that event, and in order to celebrate it properly, it behooves us to get ready in season. The HERALD also believes that everybody else ought to celebrate Christmas and New Years properly. In order to celebrate them properly, everybody else should get ready in season, and the HERALD proposes to do its share to enable everybody else to prepare themselves betimes to properly celebrate holiday week.

As the best method within our reach for accomplishing this desideratum, we issue this week our usual holiday greeting, and shall continue the same during the remaining three weeks of December. It will be found decidedly useful and somewhat ornamental. It is filled to the brim and running over the edges with interesting reading matter and business announcements from our leading business houses, which should be carefully perused by all who seek to buy the best goods for the least money. During the past fifteen years a good many extra sheets and supplements have been issued from this office, but in variety of contents and attractiveness of make up, the present sheet will eclipse them all. It demonstrates not only the enterprise and capabilities of the HERALD establishment but also the go-a-head-i-tive-ness of Tecumseh's business men. We can truthfully say that no town of its size and advantages in Michigan contains a better or larger number of enterprising citizens, both in trade and in manufacturing lines, than the Village of Tecumseh, "Beautiful for situation," noted for cleanliness and thrift, distinguished for its schools and churches, it has no superior as a home. Although it is true Tecumseh has felt the general business depression of the last few years, it is equally true that we have enjoyed fully our share of prosperity. It is many years since a business failure of any kind has taken place in this community, which speaks volumes for the stability and character of our business houses. The growth of Tecumseh has not been of the mushroom kind, but it has been steady and permanent. New enterprises are grasped at once whenever they come within reach, and comparing one year with another we can show a healthy advance all along the line. The Tecumseh Rack Co. has been started during the past year, has been placed upon a solid basis and bids fair to develop into a lucrative industry. The Lee Table Co.. and the Zimmerman Handle factory are already assured, and these two industries will be giving employment to a large number of workmen, before another Independence Day shall arrive. In presenting to our patrons this holiday extra, we take pleasure in calling attention to these signs of thrift and prosperity, feeling confident that we shall be prepared to avail ourselves to the utmost of the advantages that will accrue upon the general revival of trade throughout the country.

The advertisements contained in this supplement should be read and pondered upon. They were inserted for that purpose. Do you read the advertisements in your family newspaper regularly? If not, why not? The economical farmer or laborer ought to post himself on prices and find out where he can make his purchases to the best advantage. The thrifty house-wife seeks, or ought to seek, knowledge on the question of buying and selling also. And when it comes to the question of buying, where can you gather better information than in the advertising announcements that fill the columns of your home newspaper? The present issue of the HERALD contains 16 pages. No larger single edition of a newspaper was ever issued in Lenawee county. The cards contained in these sixteen pages cover the entire field of retail trade. Anything and everything which man, woman or child may need to eat, drink or wear, can be found advertised therein. Come ye, therefore, to this fountain of business; partake of its bounties and profit thereby.

A list of the business houses represented in this issue of the HERALD will be of interest to our readers, no doubt. It will serve as an explanatory and descriptive index, as it were, to the advertising cards contained therein, and will put in a more condensed form, the intelligence we are all seeking for. The old saying of the showman will be reversed in this case. For further particulars see the big bills.

The first page of the supplement sheet is ornamented with the cards of S. P. Hosmer and Anderson & Co. Mr. Hosmer has made his domicile in Tecumseh for a good many years and has become pretty wellknown throughout this section. His store is in a convenient location and is filled this fall with a mammoth stock of jewelry, books, and holiday notions, and he advertises bargains in all goods he has to sell.

Anderson & Co need no introduction to our readers. Their triple store on the South side of Chicago street is crowded with everything in the Dry Goods line, and their immense trade is growing upon them every year. This establishment is one in which our citizens should take special pride, for it draws trade for many miles distant. The names of Seaton and Fred are becoming household words throughout the entire county of Lenawee.

James Lowry sells groceries and crockery and his store is located in the Lilley House Block. His business is snugly managed, he buys skillfully and sells cheap. His trade from year to year shows a steady and gratifying increase. He is building up a big business on a solid foundation.

Geo. Heesen & Son run a model clothing store. Mr. Heesen, the elder, has been engaged in business here in Tecumseh for at least thirty years and is regarded as one of our most substantial business men. He is now President of the village and supervisor of the township. Dolph is a hustler in business, and a valuable partner in the firm.

The H. McClure Co. is the firm succeeding the late Henry McClure, and is composed of his sons, Henry was a very successful man in the grocery trade and the boys are fully competent to keep up the reputation of the house.

Strong & McNair is the title of one of the oldest and strongest business firms in Tecumseh. David McNair, the active manager of the house, has no superior in Tecumseh as a business man, and the firm has long been recognized among the leaders in the clothing trade.

C. A. Wright, or Gus, as he is better known, is located in the same store which his respected father opened over twenty years ago, and he conducts the same line of trade. It is one of our substantial houses and has for many years enjoyed a lurative business.

Wm. McCowen has been in trade in this town forty two years and for the past fifteen years has been running the furniture and undertaking business. His stock of goods is kept up to the times and his prices are down to hard pan. We presume he has furnished more houses than any other man in Lenawee County.

Birdsall and Glenn are new comers here, but in their brief business career they have proven themselves to be men of the right stamp. The West End market has gained a reputation second to none in this vicinity for excellent goods and honorable dealing.

Lewis Brown is the new baker who bought out Henry Jones last week. He comes here from Auburn Ind, accompanied with the best of recommends. We believe he will prove a valuable acquisition to our business community.

Dr. B. F. Steinhoff is the same old stand-by. If you want an old set of teeth pulled out or a new set put in, you can't find a better place than Dr. Steinhoff's office over Baker & Hall's store.

M. F. Marks has a neat store well filled with drugs, groceries and wall paper, and is evidently doing a safe, profitable business. The local telephone office is now in his store, and he is kept hustling most of the time.

J. D. Sholes runs the old harness store yet on Chicago street south side, and is likely to for twenty five years longer. He has lately added a line of fine carriages to his stock. He makes it a motto not to be undersold on anything.

Miss Julia A. Hough has the neatest millinery store between Detroit and Chicago. She keeps a very large assortment of millinery goods, and what is more to the point, knows how to please her customers.

MISS MILDRED HOLLAND'S FOILS.

A Chicago Young Woman who can Fence Like a very Master.

Is the age of chivalry returning? Is the nineteenth century preparing to blend the sports, pleasures and accomplishments of three or four hundred years ago with modern liberality of ideas, and thus evolve a picturesque era in the world's history?

A case in point.

Fencing, that is, really skillful and thorough mastering of the rapier, broadsword, and foil, is quite generally considered a lost art. Indeed not one man in ten thousand knows enough about a sword to know that it is not properly handled like a club. The experts can be counted on one's fingers, and enough will be left and to spare to save one from pity as a cripple.

Recently, and chiefly through the agency of the Chicago Conservatory, fencing has become popular in Chicago.

During the past two years a number of young ladies and gentlemen have grown quite skillful under the instruction of that old master of the art Colonel Monstery. Thus, in an easy and natural way, it has come about that one of the most skillful fencers in the city is a young lady, and her admirers and friends enthusiastically claim that she is probably the most expert mistress of the foils in the United States.

Miss Mildred Holland, the charming little lady who has achieved local renown with the foils, is a brown-eyed, dark-haired girl of about nineteen years of age—hardly less and certainly not more—a plump form, a gracefully poised head, a solid ankle and a beautiful wrist; an unaffected girl of good sense, talent, and modesty.

Miss Holland came into Colonel Monstery's gymnasium wearing under her street wraps a loose flannel suit, gray in color and of a yachting style of architecture. She exchanged her street shoes for a pair of broad-soled, flexible affairs, something like lawn tennis, and in a moment was striking graceful attitudes with her foil. These were indeed very graceful. Oh, ye sisters! cumbered, rigid, and inflexible in the hidden mysteries of an unyielding costume, to you those rapid poises and swaying attitudes would be impossible. Then the assault began. No amateur paried the lightning-like thrusts, nor no unskilled steel met hers in the bout, but she was matched against the champion swordsman of the land and the peer of any in the world. At times the eye could not follow the hissing foils. Every muscle of the body was brought into active play. The assault was strong, impetuous. All the tricks, artifices and possible points of attack were tried and every advantage taken. The iron-muscled colonel calmly met the attack with steady steel. The mimic duel reminded one of the desperate battle between Fitz-James and Roderick Dhu.

What swayings of her form! What lunges and lurches and quick recoveries! What a rapidity of motion, involving limb and body and arm and eyes and quick perception and never fluttering nerves and coolest courage! It was over all too soon. When the bout began Miss Holland looked as calmly cool as possible. When the wire mask was taken from her head and the padded protector taken from her breast she was panting just a very little. But there was a spot of healthy red on each cheek, and there was not a brighter pair of sparkling brown eyes in the city than hers. The colonel hung the foils on the wall and grimly stroked his imperial in stern admiration of his pupil.

"I began fencing when I entered the Chicago Conservatory," said Miss Holland. "You know fencing is a part of the instruction at the conservatory. Its object is to train the muscles of the entire body, to develop flexibility, and to give one a facility of poise that can not otherwise be attained. Then it strengthens the lungs, trains the eyes, and, I think, cultivates one's courage. You know it takes courage to appear properly before an audience, and I am sure my 'faculty' of courage has been developed since I began fencing. I was a trifle stoop-shouldered, too, but that all disappeared without my knowing it. I am sure the exercise is splendid, and besides it gives us a carriage and an adaptability of attitude not easy to obtain. I can't fence very well yet—not as well as I would like to. But fencing, you know, is something more than fencing. It is the mean to an end, or to several ends, and helps one in lots of ways."

In speaking of fencing, Samuel Kayser, director of the conservatory, said: "It is a combination of physical and mental culture. A quick eye, a clear mind, steady courage, and gracefully yielding muscles are the results of fencing. One who fences well cannot help having them to a greater or less extent. Miss Holland is wonderful with the foils. To a certain extent it is a natural gift with her—more mental than physical."

Hoist by His Own Petard.

"Will you kindly allow me to stand?" asked a gentleman as he got into a railway carriage, which already contained the specified number.

"Certainly not, sir," exclaimed a passenger occupying a corner seat, near the door. "The way these trains are overcrowded is shameful."

"As you appear to be the only person who objects to my presence," replied the gentleman, "I shall remain where I am."

"Then I shall call the guard to have you removed, sir."

Suiting the action to the word, the aggrieved passenger rose, and putting his head out of the window vociferously summoned the guard. The new comer saw his opportunity and quietly slipped into the corner seat.

"What's up?" inquired the guard as he opened the carriage door.

"One over the number," replied the newcomer, coolly.

"You must come out, sir; the train's going on," and without waiting for further explanation the guard pulled out the aggrieved passenger, who was left wildly gesticulating on the platform.—[London Court Journal.

"The popular will," says a dispatch from Honolulu, "is strongly in favor of annexation to the United States." Where there's a will there's Hawaii.—[Philadelphia Ledger.

Sammy—Maw, what does it mean by a man laughing in his sleeve?"

Mrs. Lunsforth—Better ask your father, he [illegible] den many a smile under his ves[illegible] e Haute Express.

Mrs. [illegible]—Do you know that I've induced [illegible] to call to give up cigars?

Dovetail—Really? Why, I've known him for ten years and I never saw him give up one yet.—[Judge.

Discharged Employe—Have you any doubt of my honesty?

Employer—Not the least.

Employe—Then why do you discharge me?

Employer—For that very reason.—[Yankee Blade.

Rev. Dr. Primrose—I had a most pleasant time in Paris this summer, but it didn't rest me as much as I thought.

Merritt—Yet it should be some consolation to know that your congregation got the rest.—[Life.

Mr. Laker—No, indeed, I'll never allow a daughter of mine to marry Ted Lardly. The young idiot hasn't any sense at all.

Mrs. Laker—I think you are mistaken about that. He was refused as a jurryman in a murder trial last week.

Mr. Laker—You don't say! Well, that alters it.—[Sun.

Expert Testimony.—"Is there anybody from Vermont in this car?" asked the conductor, opening the door and letting in about forty-two rods of Western blizzard. "I be," responded a tall, lank individual, rising up in his seat next to the stove. "Well, if you'll be kind enough to come forward into the Pullman car," replied the conductor, "there is a lady there who has got her spruce gum mixed up with a paper of resin and she wants an expert to separate 'em."—[Burlington Free Press.

Mrs. Nieurich (languidly)—You may do it up in a—a Gordon knot, if you please.—[Chicago Tribune.

Matron—I suppose you find your husband as selfish as most men?

Bride—No, indeed! I often heard that a man gobbled up all the nice things on the table, but I must say that my husband leaves nearly all the pies I make for me to eat myself.

A wealthy citizen of Denver, Colo., gave an elegant residence to a newly married daughter. Two lots adjoining it are his property. The younger daughter of the gentleman, upon being spoken to about the fine present to her sister, remarked: "Yes, and we are going to put a sign on the two adjoining lots with these words on it: 'These lots go with the other girls.'"

Mrs. Newhand—What, 20 cents a pound for mackerel? Why, the man across the street only asks 16 cents.

Fisherman—Very good, madame, but you must remember that my fish are all hand caught; those you see opposite are caught in nets. It makes a difference, you know.

Mrs. Newhand—Of course; how stupid of me! You may give me that large one there.

Mrs. Hodgkins—Don't you think, Jeff, now as we are well fixed, we ought to have a library?

Hodgkins—No mum—don't talk books to me. I got no use for 'em.

Mrs Hodgkins—Well, all the neighbors has 'em.

Hodgkins—I take no stock in 'em. I tell ye, I got a history of Greece t'other day, and I looked the hull thing through. Darned if I could find a thing about the lard renderin' business.—[America.

SONG OF THE CAN'T-GET THERE.

For the few-and-far-between,
For the very-seldom-seen,
For the un-catch-uponable I sigh!
The unclutchable I'd clutch,
The untouchable I'd touch,
For the ungrabbed and ungrabble I die!

O I burn and sigh and clasp
For the just-beyond-the-grasp,
For the un-overtakable I yearn;
And the vulgar here-and-now
I ignore and disavow,
And the good-enough-for-others, how I spurn

O I moan and cry and screech
For the just-beyond-the-reach,
The too-far-away-to-grab, I would ensnare;
The ungainable I'd gain,
The unattainable attain,
And chase the un-catch-onto to his lair!

HIT BY A WINDLASS.

A Queer Encounter at the Mouth of an Old Mine.

Before the Victim Dies He Asks Who It Was That Struck Him—The Ledge Didn't Give Out a Fortune After All.

"A man gets some queer ideas in his head when he's out all alone in the mountains," said John Sanderson, an old prospector who has his headquarters at El Paso, but who makes several incursions to the mining districts every year. "Half of them believe in ghosts, nine out of ten in signs, and about all of them in luck. My own experience has changed my views in a good many particulars, and, for one thing, it has made me a firm believer in special providences. It didn't come about gradually, but through as marvelous an escape from an awful death as I believe ever falls to men.

"It happened up in the Mimbres mountains four years ago this summer. The Mimbres lie in New Mexico, down below old Fort Tule Rosa, and they must be full of gold somewhere, because the beds of the creeks that find their way down the sides are so rich in placer diggings that you can't pull up a sage brush around there without seeing bright specks among the roots. I had a pet theory then that if you followed the creeks up high enough and looked close enough you would find a tremendous deposit of gold in decomposed quartz. I thought, you see, that a little of it had washed off the surface in the course of time and formed those places. What I wanted to find was the mother mine.

"I talked the thing up to Charley Burke, another prospector and friend of mine, until he agreed to put up half the outfit and join in the search. We got a couple of burros, the necessary tools, and started early in the spring. The country about the Mimbres is about as wild and desolate as any on earth, and it was a trip that nothing but faith and enthusiasm would prompt a man to attempt. It was one succession of gorges, gulches and acclivities, all strewn with granite bowlders from the size of a man's hand to a four-story block, and often we were obliged to leave the watercourse we were following and make detours that took days at a time.

"The creek we followed was almost dry, and we stopped frequently looking for placers. We found no very rich ones, but everywhere there was gold. Sometimes there would be lots of it in the bottom of the tin cup after we had taken a drink, and sometimes—here is a curious thing—it would be floating on the surface. I will let some one who is better posted in science than I tell why gold now and then floats, but I only know that little flakes of it do, and a lot of it is lost in sluice-mining that way. As long as we found placers we knew that the main deposit was ahead, so we pushed along, tired enough, but confident. At last we came to a spot where the sand was barren for several days' journey, and then we began to prospect all around. To make a long story short, we struck a ledge one morning with outcroppings that crumbled under my pick and showed quartz all streaked with yellow threads. 'Charlie,' I yelled out, all afire at once, 'we have struck it!'

"But before we sunk a shaft we found something else that sent our hearts to our mouths. It was an old shaft, back a little ways, and in a claim, properly staked out, that covered that very ledge. There was a notification, according to law, on one of the posts, that Peter Sumner and Joseph Klautzy had taken possession of the 'Big Six' and done the legal assessment work.

"I sat right down and collapsed, but Charlie went over to the shaft and came back to tell me that it did not cover half the amount necessary, under the law, to hold the property for a year.

We measured it, and sure enough, it was only down about half the required distance, so we took possession of the property, changed its name the 'The Treasure,' and went to work.

"We built ourselves a rough shanty, rigged up a windlass and began to sink. In a few days we were into a formation rich enough to make a man's head swim, and getting better as we went down. We were both so excited that we begrudged the time to sleep and eat, and we neither of us meditated for an instant giving the claim up to any body, assessment work or no assessment work. What had become of the two men was a mystery. They had left no trace except the notification board and shaft, and it gave me the creeps now and then to think that they might be dead. But we were not in a frame of mind to let sentiment interfere with business.

"I suppose we had been there for a couple of weeks when provisions began to run short. We didn't want to both leave the claim at once, so it was finally arranged that Charley should go down the creek to a camp about fifty miles away and bring a supply. He took both burros and started off. I calculated it would take him a week to make the trip, and time hung heavy on my hands. I tried to work a little on the shaft. The formation was very hard, and we had rigged up a sort of crossbar ladder. I would go down this, fill the bucket, climb to the surface and pull it up.

"At about noon of the second day after he left I was startled at what I thought was a man crossing a little gulch a half-mile away. I only had a view of it between two rocks, and, whatever it was, it passed so quickly that I was not sure. However, I waited a couple of hours, and then, seeing nothing further, concluded I was mistaken, and went down into the shaft. I filled the bucket with very heavy ore, climbed up, and had it about half raised when a man came walking up the creek bed toward me. Then I knew I was right before.

"He was an ugly-looking customer, big and brawny, with a flat, Scandinavian face, and carried a Winchester on his arm. I had a little stick that I slipped into the windlass handle near the axle to keep it from turning backward, and, leaving the bucket just where it was, suspended half way up, I started toward the cabin to get my arms. He covered me with his repeating rifle, and ordered me to halt.

"'What are you doing on my claim?' he said.

"'I reckon you can see,' I replied, putting as good a face on it as I possibly could.

"'You mean you've jumped it, you cursed thief?'

"'No, I don't. There wasn't enough work on it to hold it, and it was as much mine as any body's.'

"'You lie!'

"He looked at me over the sights with his wicked, greenish eyes for a full minute. Then he said:

"'Did you ever pray?'

"'Yes, I faltered.

"'Then pray now. I'll give you two minutes to do it.'

"By that time my mind was clear enough to take in the whole situation, and I had no doubt that he intended to murder me then and there. With me out of the way there would be no one to testify to the insufficient work, and I would simply be regarded, if the story of my death was ever told, as a claim-jumper who had been justly dealt with. I felt my knees begin to tremble and tried another tack.

"'If you kill me,' I said, 'my partner will be back and see that you hang for it.'

"'I'll fix your partner the same way, you claim-jumping cur.'

"True enough. Nothing would be easier than to assassinate Burke on his return, and we had so jealously guarded the secret of our trip that no one would know where to search for us. We would simply disappear, as hundreds of prospectors do, never to be seen by men again and speedily to be forgotten. I had no hope of mercy from the instant I looked into that man's cruel face. I felt with a sickening qualm and a wild drumming in my ears that my time had come.

"'Oh, for Heaven's sake, don't murder me!' I cried. 'I will go.'

"The man made no reply. For a moment my head swam, and then, with a sudden return of vision that was excruciating in its clearness, I saw him stoop slightly, rest the gun-barrel over the windlass handle, and marked even that slight contraction of the eyelid that just precedes a shot. The next moment there was a crash, an explosion and a cry all mingled into one. I saw the man turning heels over head down the embankment, the Winchester flying through a cloud of smoke up into the air, and all the while heard a loud, monotonous, whirring noise that was like some gigantic clock running down.

"I did not realize it at the time, but this is what happened: When he rested his gun across the windlass he dropped the barrel right across the little stick I had thrust in to prevent it from turning, and knocked it out. I suppose the bucket of ore weighed one hundred and fifty pounds, and the great iron handle, swinging clear around, gained such terrific momentum that when it struck him fair in the face, which it did, it lifted him off his feet like a cannon-ball. The gun was discharged by the shock, but the bullet went nowhere near me. Before I regained my senses I heard the bucket strike the bottom with a smash.

"When I picked up the man he was unconscious, but moaning a little, and the blood trickled out of his ears. He lay at the cabin for a week or two, and after Charley got back we managed to get him to Silver City. There the doctors put his face in a sort of plaster of paris cast, but although the wound healed he was out of his head and eventually died. The night before he passed away he motioned for a little slate he used to write on, for he couldn't speak. He was very weak, and it took him some time, but at last he scrawled:

"'Who hit me?'

"But before we could tell him he fainted away. The mine? Oh, the mine pinched out after awhile, and disappointed us. I sold my interest to Burke, and I think after working it a year he gave up in disgust and moved away."—El Paso Inter-Republics.

China's Great Encyclopedia.

A recent Pekin Gazettee contains a a memorial from the Chancelor of the Hanlin or Imperial College on the necessity for re-editing the great encyclopedia compiled one hundred years ago in the reign of Kienlung, and of which only four copies in manuscript are now supposed to exist. This work, the index alone to which consists of fourteen large volumes, contains a complete compendium of the classics, and includes also a collection of every thing written and revised by the Emperors themselves or published under imperial authority. It embraces, says the Chancelor, all knowledge under Heaven, and reflects, as in a mirror, the past and present.

NEARING THE END.

The Cronin Murder Trial in Chicago Will Soon Be Finished.

The Fate of the Five Suspects Soon to Be Known—Startling Evidence Brought to Light—The Speech-Making Begun.

THE CRONIN TRIAL.

CHICAGO, Nov. 27.—Bailey Dawson and Colonel A. C. Babcock were called as witnesses in the Cronin case at yesterday's session. Their mission was the demolition of the alibi for John F. Beggs sworn to by Constable Gleason to the effect that on the evening of May 4 he, Beggs and Gleason were at the Pacific Hotel and that Beggs was introduced to Bailey Dawson at the time by Gleason.

Witness Dawson swore that he remembered being introduced to Beggs, but it was on May 11, not on May 4. On the latter date the witness was an inmate of the Emergency Hospital, and did not leave that place until May 7. Colonel Babcock corroborated Mr. Dawson.

Saloon-keeper Nieman took a clip at O'Sullivan's alibi by swearing that the iceman and Hyland were not in his saloon on May 5, as the Hylands had sworn.

Simon Olsen, a liveryman, was called to demolish the alibi set up for Burke by Saloon-keeper Danahy, William Coughlin and John O'Malley to the effect that Burke spent almost the whole of the evening of May 4 at Danahy's saloon. Olsen swore that on the evening of May 4 at 6:30 he sent his driver, Fred Swanson, with a carriage to William Coughlin's saloon on John O'Malley's order. He saw it stop in front of the saloon and ten minutes after it had driven away. The carriage returned to the stable at 12:30 o'clock that night.

Robert Stanton, the printer of O'Sullivan's cards, testified that no such person as Witness Minnehan described as having given him a handful of cards in April worked for him at that time.

Frederick Ebersold, inspector of police, was then asked as to whether Detective Rohan ever told him in the presence of Detective Crow about Martin having heard sounds of fighting in the Carlson cottage. The inspector said neither of the officers had so reported to him verbally or otherwise.

Patrick Dinan testified to having had a conversation with Coughlin and Captain Schaack shortly after the murder, and that when asked by them to give a description of the driver of the white horse he told them to furnish their own description, as Coughlin knew the man well.

Policeman Smith told of having, by direction of the State, examined the files of all the daily papers, and that not a word was said about Coughlin being connected with the case before May 25. This was in view of Coughlin's alibi, witnesses testifying to their recollection of the occurrences of May 4 being freshened because of their having seen Coughlin's name in the papers the week following the murder.

State's Attorney Longenecker then arose and said: "This closes the case of the people." With the understanding that one or two witnesses for the defense would be heard on reconvening the court adjourned to Friday morning. The long recess is due to the illness of a little child of Juror North.

CHICAGO, Nov. 30.—The strongest evidence yet produced against Dan Coughlin came to light in the Cronin investigation yesterday. On the night of Coughlin's arrest he was taken from Chief Hubbard's office and placed in a cell by Detective Barney Flynn. The latter kept his mouth closed concerning the occurrence until Thursday last, when he reported to Captain Schuettler that there was a matter connected with Coughlin's arrest which he had forgotten to mention. He said that on searching the prisoner before placing him in the cell he found, among other articles, two pen-knives which he now thought might have belonged to Dr. Cronin. These were placed, together with Coughlin's revolver, in a box in a safety deposit vault at Coughlin's request. The authorities, acting upon this suggestion, took the knives from the vault and exhibited them to Mr. T. T. Conklin, with whom Dr. Cronin made his home for years before his death. Conklin identified them as the property of the dead doctor, and said that he had presented them both to his departed friend on different occasions during their acquaintanceship.

While the State's Attorney was on his feet making the startling announcement that at the eleventh hour of the trial the prosecution felt it imperative to beg to be allowed to introduce fresh evidence, and when the knives were exhibited to the jury, it appeared as if Coughlin would faint under the fearful strain. He shook as with ague. The defense announced it would put in rebuttal evidence.

The State introduced B. F. Carberry, a witness to break down the alibi for Martin Burke.

The defense then began their sur-rebuttal, and introduced several witnesses to break down the testimony of witness Swanson, who swore that on the night of May 4 he drove O'Malley to a saloon opening on the West side, and that on the way he stopped at Dwyer's saloon, into which all went to get a drink. The defense then rested.

State's Attorney Longenecker then began his argument for the prosecution. Thanking the jurors for their patience while the case was being presented, he solicited a further exercise of it during the arguments to follow. He said he did not desire that any of the defendants should be guessed guilty or convicted on doubtful evidence. The evidence in the case, he said, showed a cold-blooded conspiracy, without a parallel, and showed the connection of the defendants to the conspiracy.

CHICAGO, Dec. 2.—When court opened in the Cronin trial Saturday morning State's Attorney Longenecker resumed his address. Item by item he went over the proceedings in Camp 20 on the nights of February 8 and 22, bringing out the parts taken by Beggs, Coughlin, O'Sullivan and Burke in the first steps of the conspiracy. Coughlin's declaration that Dr. Cronin was another Le Caron; O'Sullivan's assertions that he 9 was taking into the Clan-na-Gael members of the Order of Deputies, and the statement by Beggs that "a day of punishment would come for such men" were set aside as significant utterances. Then he grouped other events around these. The hiring of the Clark street flat February 20, the purchase of the furniture at Revell's, the presence of Kunze and a tall man in the Clark street flat early in April, the appearance of Martin Burke as tenant of the Carlson cottage, the meeting of Coughlin and O'Sullivan in Mahoney's saloon four days after O'Sullivan had learned from Burke that the cottage was rented, the payment of a second month's rent on the Carlson cottage almost simultaneous with O'Sullivan's declarations about intending to make a contract with Dr. Cronin, the printing of new cards by the iceman, the formal making of a contract when the ruse that led the doctor to his death was literally foretold, the final dispatching of Dinan's horse and buggy which drove the doctor to his death—all these details were rehearsed by the State's Attorney, not a thread of evidence being neglected in the terrible charge.

In conclusion Mr. Longenecker said:

"These men are the murderers of Dr. Cronin. This contract of O'Sullivan's, this hiring of the buggy, this renting of the cottage, this running away to Canada, all these point to the fact that these men are guilty. It stands up like a mountain built of truth, as solid as the granite hills against which the Coughlin-Burke-O'Sullivan-Beggs-Kunze alibis can not prevail. I leave the matter now in your hands. When you come to consider the verdict think of the 4th of May; think of that man gathering his little valise and his instruments; think of him rushing out to the buggy; think of him rushing to relieve the suffering men; think of him in the cottage—and when you think of him there, may there reverberate through your ears the death cries of this man, who in his last moments called upon his God and his Jesus; think of these men, who without giving him time to pronounce the other trinity name, felled him to the floor with their death-blows. Think of the wounds in his head, think of the grave in which he was placed, think of all this in making your verdict, and in the end there will be such a verdict as when his honor pronounces his judgment upon it that he, having his heart and eye to God, may say: 'May the Lord have mercy on your souls.'"

Judge Wing, for the defense, began his address with the proposition that the charge against Coughlin was merely that Coughlin had agreed with the other defendants to kill Dr. Cronin. Toward the proof of this all the evidence had been directed. Irishmen, Germans and Americans had contributed to this pile of evidence; all professions, trades, business interests, and even thieves had been represented by the witnesses. The stories they had been told had been admitted by the court and labeled evidence. Every scrap of this evidence, except the solitary one that Dr. Cronin was dead, was circumstantial. He spoke of the uncertainty of circumstantial evidence and how liable courts, lawyers and jurors were to make mistakes in judging such cases.

TRAIN-ROBBING GAMBLERS.

Nine of Them Arrested Charged with Complicity in the Santa Fe Affair.

GAINESVILLE, Tex., Nov. 29.—The vigorous pursuit of the bandits who held up the Santa Fe train near Berwin, Ind. T., Monday night has resulted in the arrest of nine men. Three deputy marshals and a posse passed through here with nine prisoners who were captured at Berwin and Ardmore, Ind. T. It is charged that the robbery was planned by a number of gamblers, who furnished money and equipments to the actual robbers. The plotters are alleged to be the men now under arrest. The officers would give no details.

THE SILVER CONVENTION.

It Adjourns After Declaring for the Free and Unlimited Coinage of the Metal.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 29. — The National Silver convention closed its sessions Thursday. It adopted a platform calling for the free and unlimited coinage of standard silver dollars, to be legal tender for all debts, public and private; and that until such a law is enacted the Secretary of the Treasury be required to coin the maximum of $2,000,000 worth of silver per month. A committee was also appointed with power to summon another convention and provide for the election of delegates.

THE GUN WAS LOADED.

A Dime Museum Performer at Lynn, Mass., the Victim of His Own Error.

LYNN, Mass., Nov. 30.—William F. Sartelle, of Worcester, Mass., a performer in a dime museum here, was shot dead Thursday night. He was performing a trick with a rifle, which he apparently loads with leaden bullets, and then requests some one to shoot at him, appearing to catch the bullet in his mouth. This time he failed to substitute a pasteboard bullet, and William Flannigan, who fired the gun, shot Sartelle dead.

ARMOUR TESTIFIES.

The Millionaire Pork-Packer Obeys Senator Vest's Summons.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2. — Mr. P. D. Armour, of Chicago, was a witness before Senator Vest's dressed-beef committee. He gave an account of his connection with the dressed-beef business, and in a written statement which was read by one of his employes denied that the firm of Armour & Co. had ever engaged in any combination to fix the price to be paid for cattle, or the price for which the product should be sold.

War on Adulteration.

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 29.—The National Dairy and Food Commissioners' Association at its session Thursday elected the following officers: H. C. Thom, of Wisconsin, President; Lovejoy Johnson, of Illinois, Vice-President; F. A. Dertchick, of Ohio, Secretary, and H. D. Sherman, of Iowa, Treasurer. The association's object is to favor laws providing against the adulteration of all classes of food and to benefit the manufacturers and dealer and protect the consumer.

Ten Men Drowned.

NEW YORK, Nov. 29.—The bark Germania went ashore in a gale on Wednesday off West End, Long Branch, and ten of the crew, including Captain Windhorst, were drowned. The storm along the Atlantic coast was one of the severest in the memory of the old mariners, and many other wrecks were reported, with the loss of several lives.

Four Little Girls Blown to Atoms.

ELLIOTTSVILLE, W. Va., Nov. 30.—Four little girls, children of Hugh Dunn, wealthy mine owner, found a keg of powder in an abandoned working Thursday morning. In some way they exploded it and were blown to atoms. Their mother lost her reason when told of the fate of her children.

An Address by Governor Gordon.

CHICAGO, Dec. 2.—Governor Gordon, of Georgia, delivered an eloquent address at Central Music Hall Saturday night to a large audience for the benefit of the ex-Confederate Association of Chicago. He made an earnest appeal for unity and harmony between the sections of the country.

A Child Killed by a Cat.

READING, Pa., Nov. 29.—At Atglen, Chester County, Thursday morning the 3-months'-old daughter of W. A. Reyburn was found dead with the family cat lying upon the child's mouth and nose. The coroner's jury decided that the child was suffocated by the cat.

"Boodlers" Punished.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Nov. 30.—Friday, on conviction of conspiracy to defraud by accepting bribes to settle illegal liquor-selling cases, Aldermen Callen, Dougherty and Manegse, and Detectives Gauder, Doyle, Nagle and Bender received sentences ranging from three years in the work-house to six months in jail.

A Blow for Mormonism.

SALT LAKE CITY, U. T., Dec. 2.—Judge Anderson decided on Saturday that endowment-house oath-takers are not eligible to citizenship because the Mormon church is a treasonable body and inimical to the Government of the United States.

Lost in Lake Michigan.

CHICAGO, Nov. 30.—The barge David L. Dows, one of the largest sailing vessels on Lake Michigan, was wrecked in a storm yesterday twenty miles southeast of this city. Loss, $100,000. The crew had a narrow escape, and all were badly frozen.

Honoring a Dead Labor Leader.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Nov. 29.—The unveiling of the statue to the memory of Thomas A. Armstrong, the editor of the National Labor Tribune, by the members of the labor organizations of the country, took place Thursday at Allegheny Park.

Events of General Interest—Thanksgiving at Washington.

The Heads of Departments Make Their Annual Reports—Suggestions by Postmaster-General Wanamaker—Aliens in the Navy Not Wanted.

INTERESTING FACTS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—The annual report of S. I. Kimball, general superintendent of the life-saving service, contains the following:

Number of disasters	529
Property involved	$6,416,775
Property saved	$5,654,440
Property lost	$1,962,335
Persons involved	3,436
Persons lost	49
Persons succored	787
Days of succor afforded	1,736
Vessels totally lost	43
Otherwise aided by crews	510
Vessels warned from danger	917
Persons rescued who had fallen from piers, etc	94

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30. — Postmaster-General Wanamaker has submitted his first report to President Harrison. He makes a plea for a postal telegraph; says a Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General is needed, to be in direct charge of the great divisions of the service; says with reference to clerks that there ought to be a kind of apprenticeship, with promotions throughout the ranks from the lowest to highest place; recommends that larger discretion be given for making contracts for carrying foreign mails with American registered vessels; says the minimizing of Sunday work will be a subject of careful attention; recommends that all places with a population of not less than 5,000, or where the post-office has shown a gross revenue of $7,000 for the previous fiscal year, shall have the benefit of the free-delivery system; the early consideration of the question of establishing postal savings banks at 10,000 of the fourth-class offices, where such facilities are needed, is suggested; says that one-cent postage is an easy possibility of the near future and will come as a matter of course, but is not practicable while the present deficiency exists.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—In his report for the fiscal year Third Assistant Postmaster-General Hazen shows that the total cost of the service for the year was $63,751,871, or $7,608,856 in excess of the revenue. The revenue exceeded that of the previous year by $3,452,838.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—Commodore J. G. Walker in his annual report recommends that the enlistment of aliens in the navy be discouraged.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2.—It is announced that President and Mrs. Harrison will leave Washington on Friday or Saturday of this week for Chicago to attend the opening of the Chicago Auditorium next Monday night. It is understood that Vice-President Morton and Mrs. Morton, Assistant Postmaster-General Clarkson and Mrs. Clarkson, Attorney-General Miller and Mrs. Miller and one or two other members of the Cabinet with their ladies will make up the party that will accompany the President on the Western trip.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2.—The Republican caucus for the nomination of a candidate for Speaker of the National House of Representatives met on Saturday. On the first ballot Thomas B. Reed, of Maine, received 73 votes; McKinley, of Ohio, 39; Cannon, of Illinois, 22; Burrows, of Michigan, 10; Henderson, of Iowa, 16. On the second ballot Mr. Reed was nominated, receiving 86 votes. McPherson, of Pennsylvania, was nominated for clerk, and A. J. Holmes, of Iowa, for sergeant-at-arms.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2.—The annual report of the Secretary of the Interior shows that the number of patents issued for the fiscal year is 12,784,715 acres. Eighty million acres of land have been claimed by States under the swamp land grants.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2. — The annual report of Admiral D. D. Porter, the commanding officer of the United States navy, shows that most of the ships in the navy are in good condition.

A SOUTHERN CYCLONE.

Eight Persons Killed in South Carolina and Others Injured.

CHARLOTTE, S. C., Nov. 30.—A very destructive cyclone passed over a portion of Buford County Thursday, doing great damage. Houses were blown down and trees torn up by the roots. The residence of a farmer near Washington, the county seat, was blown to atoms and the entire family, consisting of father, mother and four children, was killed instantly.

A factory near Washington was blown down and two people killed, while a dozen others received bad injuries. Miss Mattie Cheve, the pretty daughter of a farmer, was caught up on the cyclone and carried away by the wind. Her body has not yet been found. Reports so far are very meager, and it is impossible to obtain the names of all killed.

Fate of a Blasphemer.

POTTSTOWN, Pa., Nov. 29.—John Chana, a hopeless paralytic, 35 years old, was found dead on the floor of his room Thursday, with a leather strap around his neck. It is believed he committed suicide, though some suspect foul play. Chana was until recently perfectly strong and healthy. It is said that one day he cursed his Maker in a manner terrible to hear, when he fell to the floor dumb and paralyzed, in which condition he remained until he died.

A Michigan Brewery Burned.

JACKSON, Mich., Nov. 30.—At 3 o'clock Friday morning the Casper Haehnle brewery was discovered to be on fire, and the entire plant, valued at $60,000, was destroyed. Insurance only $20,000. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Drawing the Color Line.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Nov. 29.—The Governor of South Carolina in his annual message to the Legislature recommends separate accommodations on railroads for whites and blacks.

A Minister Suicides.

HUNTINGTON, Ind., Nov. 29.—Rev. Erdman Delorme, a minister of the German Reformed church, committed suicide here yesterday while insane by shooting himself.

HE WAS A PAGAN.

The Only Sober Man in Turinopovortonaya Was Not a Christian.

From George Kennan's "Adventures in Eastern Siberia," in the Century, we quote the following:

"We had no difficulty in getting post horses until just before dark Monday evening, when we reached the station of Turinopovorotnava (Too-rin-o-po-vo-rote-uah-yah), about fifty miles from Chita, and found the whole village in a state of hilarious intoxication.

Sleighs filled with young men and boys were careering hither and thither with wild whoops and halloos; long lines of peasant girls in bright-colored calico dresses were unsteadily promenading back and forth in the streets with their arms around one another, and singing khorovod songs; the station-house was filled with flushed and excited people from neighboring settlements, who had evidently been participating in a celebration of some kind and were about starting for their homes; the station-master, who perhaps had not finished his celebration, was nowhere to be found; there was not a driver about the stables; and the "starosta" (stah-ro-stah), a short, fat old man, who looked like a burgher from Amsterdam, was so drunk that even with the aid of a cane he could hardly stand on his feet.

In vain we tried to ascertain the reasons for this surprising epidemic of inebriation. Nobody was sober enough to explain what had happened. From the excited and more or less incoherent conversation of the intoxicated travelers in the station-house I learned that even the village priest was so drunk that he had to be taken home in a sleigh by the soberest of his parishioners.

If the station master, the starosta, the village priest, the drivers and all of the inhabitants were drunk, there was evidently no prospect of our being able to get horses. In fact, we could not find anybody who seemed sober enough to know the difference between a horse and his harness. We therefore brought our baggage in to the crowded station-house and sat down in an unoccupied corner to study intoxicated humanity and await further developments. Every person in the house was drunk except ourselves and one small baby. * * *

About 9 o'clock the noise, tumult and shouting in the village streets began to subside; the station-master, whose intoxication had taken the form of severe official dignity, suddenly appeared, and in a tone of stern menace wanted to know where the post drivers were and what all this disorder meant. * * * Finally, when we had almost abandoned the hope of ever getting away, a real sober man in a ragged sheepskin coat emerged from the darkness and reported in a business-like manner that the horses were ready for us. The drunken and irate official, who seemed desirous of vindicating his dignity and authority in some way, overwhelmed the unfortunate driver with abuse, and ended by fining him 50 kopecks—whether for being sober or having the horses ready I do not know. We piled our baggage into the sleigh, climbed in upon it and rode out of the intoxicated settlement with thankful hearts. As the last faint sounds of revelry died away in the distance behind us I said to the driver;

"What's the matter with everybody in this village? The whole population seems to be drunk."

"They've been consecrating a new church," said the driver, soberly.

"Consecrating a church!" I exclaimed in amazement. "Is that the way you consecrate churches?"

"I don't know," he replied. "Sometimes they drink. After the services they had a gulainia (a sort of holiday prominade with music and spiritous refreshments), and some of them crooked their elbows too much."

"Some of them," I repeated. "All of them, you mean. You're the only sober man I've seen in the place. How does it happen you're not drunk?"

"I'm not a Christian," he replied with quiet simplicity. "I'm a Buriat."

"As a Christian—if not a member of the Holy Orthodox Church—I was silenced by the unconscious irony of the reply. The only sober man in a village of three to four hundred inhabitants proved to be a pagan, and he had just been fined 50 kopecks by a Christian official for not getting drunk with other good citizens and thus showing his respect for the newly consecrated edifice and his appreciation of the benign influence of the Holy Orthodox Faith!"

TWO LIARS.

How No. 2 Got the Best of His Companion in a Fish Story.

Two young men, both good fellows, but a little given to romancing, stood on the corner for a moment one day to exchange stories. "You may not believe me," said No. 1, "but what I'm going to tell you is gospel. Up at Silver Lake last summer, I caught a half-pound pickerel. He wasn't much of a fish compared with others I'd got, so I threw him in again, first, however, clipping his tail into the shape of a heart so that I would know him again. Would you believe it? I have just come from there now and I brought with me that same fish. I caught him again, but he gave a great fight this time, and no wonder, for he weighed between six and seven pounds. The heart shape of his tail was perfect, just as I had put it." "I can quite believe your story," returned the second young man, thoughtfully, "for I had a very similar experience myself. Last year at the seashore I caught an enormous bluefish. I had plenty of others, so I thought I'd mark this one and let him go. I didn't like to cut him, so I took a silver whistle that I carried on my watch guard and tied it to the tail of the fish. Just before I left there I caught the same fish. He was no longer than he was the last time I had seen him, but the little whistle had grown into a fog-horn—" That was all, and the look of reproach that came over the features of youth No. 1 will haunt youth No. 2 to his dying day.

An absolute vacuum has never been attained. It can exist only in your mind.—(Terre Haute Express.

TECUMSEH

AN OLD-TIME ROMANCE.

Right here, in this venerable oak tree's shade,
My grandmother's mother sat one day,
In solemn state and in stiff brocade,
Awaiting her lover, a knight, they say.

Down yonder hillside with flashing spur
He came like a vision o'er field and fen,
In his satin breeches and gold-laced coat,
And a queer old dresser he must have been.

I do not think I could have fancied him so,
In his wedding plumes and his bonnet gay—
And Mistress Lucy, if she could know,
Would smile in disdain at my choice to-day.
By his side o'er the stairway her picture hangs,
A daint, lady, so proud and prim
That more than half of my wayward blood
It is very plain must have come from him.

Here is a letter a century old:
For true knightly sentiment very well,
And a dashing hand, but it must be told
That my charming great-grandpapa could not spell:
"Honered madam and dear, though mine eyes bereft
May not dwell on thy form and face so fair,
Still the promise of hope to my poor heart is left,
And at dawning of eve I aspire to be there."

I should like to know if at eve he came—
Why, of course he did, for am I not here?
Proudly bearing his ancient name
With a wicked laugh at his spell of "dear."
And if on that sofa they sat asunder
Fully two feet, as was proper and right,
Could he ever manage to give her, I wonder,
Half such a kiss as I had last night?

Ah, Lucy, though minuet and spinet,
And courtly manners in grand array,
Tell on, old story, there's something in it
That reaches the heart just the same to-day,
And I wonder when my little day is over,
And my grandchildren flit 'neath this old tree's shade,
If they'll say: "She had just such a noble lover,
And as true and tender a wife she made."

—Mena K. Ogan in Indianapolis Journal.

MY ONLY LOVE.

And He, My Hero, I Lost Forever to My Sister.

We are not very well off. Father's situation in the bank, although a responsible one, yielded but a small salary when compared with the expensive family it had to support; so when the question came up where we should spend the summer one of the first things to be taken into consideration was expense.

It did not make much difference to me—I was sure of a certain amount of admiration and attention wherever I went. I had always received it since my first day in school, where my pretty curls and shining eyes had captured the hearts of the "big boys" up to the last ride taken in the park.

With not only the beauty, but much of the cleverness of the family, naturally great things were expected of me.

I had but one sister—a poor, pale little thing. She was younger than I and had always been delicate, but for some time had been growing gradually weaker, until now we wheeled her about the house in her easy-chair. It was finally decided that mamma should take the boys up into New Hampsire, and sister Millie and I should go down to Beachpoint, a little unknown resort on the coast.

Father accompanied us, but only stopped long enough to see us comfortably settled. I was lonesome enough the first few days. There were no boarders but us, and the house was the only one on the beach, our neighbors being away back in the uplands.

I dutifully took my bath each day as one swallows a bitter tonic. I played on the little, old-fashioned piano in the parlor, and to kill time slept away the greater part of the long summer afternoons. It was all very dull and commonplace.

Millie was cheerful and contented. She read and worked on the pretty things she was constantly knitting out of bright wools, or sketched as much of the scenery as she could see from her chair by the window.

One evening I was out of sorts and a little cross, and had just declared I wouldn't make a toilet to go down-stairs, where there was no one but the landlord's son, who usually expressed his admiration with open-mouthed wonder.

Presently our landlady bustled in full of importance.

"I just ran up a minute to tell you that the stage has come, and Mr. Brent was in it. He is here every summer and comes gunning in the winter. He gave us the sail-boat on the bay, and we had his name painted on it, 'Hartly Brent.' He ain't so very young, but he is rich, and I thought perhaps you'd like to know he was here so as to change your dress before you come down."

She hurried away, feeling she had done a good deed.

After closing the door to shut out the cool sea air I wrapped a shawl around poor, shivering Millie, saying:

"Now, dear, I have been 'forewarned,' and when I am arrayed in my new grenadine I shall be 'forearmed.'"

Time dragged no longer after Hartly Brent came, and soon several other pleasure-seekers arrived, until we were a merry party. Escorts were plenty, and, as was the privilege of my bellehood, I chose such as pleased me best. When my choice fell on Mr. Brent, as it often did, I could see how pleased he was to be of service. He was never officious, yet always ready to quietly render any little attention needed. His manner was different from the gay gallantry of other cavaliers, with their jests and flattery, though he was always deferential and praised my taste, my music and my voice with a discriminating earnestness I knew to be sincere.

"It is because he is older than the others," I said to Millie, who loved to hear me talk of him.

She was always interested in any thing I liked, and he had been kind to her, bringing her fruit and flowers and books, and taking her in his strong arms down to the parlor of an evening and back again to her room when she was tired. "Besides," I said to myself, the warm blood circling round my heart at the thought, "their attentions mean nothing, and he is in earnest."

How quickly time flies when one is happy. Each perfect summer day has its remembrance in my heart; we boated and fished and gathered shells through the day, and in the evening sat on the long piazza after I had tucked Millie in the bed and kissed her good-night.

Mr. Brent and I engaged in quiet conversation, our voices subdued, that they might not reach or disturb those who sat with us, while he told of his home; of his struggles with the world, and the success which had crowned them; his past life and plans, and aspirations for the future.

Listening to his voice and looking out over the moonlit expanse, love freighted a fairy boat and launched it from the sand, and I watched it sailing o'er the summer sea, careless where it drifted, I was so happy.

Each day I looked in the little square glass that hung on the wall of our room, and saw myself growing more blooming and radiant. Mr. Brent—I called him Hartly in my thoughts—said I reminded him of a crimson carnation, with my bright color and the spicy scent of my fan.

"And Millie," he added, turning to her with a kindly smile, as though she might feel slighted, "with her golden hair and white dress, is a water lily."

It was our last day at Beachpoint. The season was nearly over and mamma was already at home with the boys and had written to me to come and bring Millie. Mamma informed me that she had described her case to a celebrated physician, and he thought she could be cured beyond a doubt.

In the morning we went with a merry bathing party over the bay to the surf. Millie waved her hand to us from her seat on the porch, where Hartly, with a brotherly kindness, had brought her and crowned her with moist pond lilies, which he must have walked a long distance to gather.

After taking my bath I donned my walking-dress again, and getting tired of watching the others, in their picturesque costumes, sporting in the breakers, I wandered down the beach to a point where the hulls of two staunch vessels, with crushed timbers half sunk in the sand, eloquently told the story of storm and shipwreck.

Seating myself on a projecting beam I gave myself up to pleasant recollections of the eventful weeks just passed. I pictured my fairy boat sailing forever over friendly seas and under cloudless skies, until, life being done, it was safely anchored in Heaven. I had no fear for the future if one dear hand was to guide me, one thrilling voice I had come to know so well was to cheer me.

How good and noble he is! I thought with a swelling hear; how altogether superior to all other men I had known; how worthy the love and respect of any woman! I had never been in love before. I had seen a great deal of society and received several offers, but none were eligible, and when mamma said "No," I had without a pang seen father turn them away.

There was a step behind me and my heart told me who it was.

"How did you find me?" I asked, as Mr. Brent pushed aside my dress and sat down on the same beam.

"Don't you suppose I have followed those little footprints until I know the slender tracks?" he smilingly answered, pointing to the impression in the damp sand of my high-heeled walking-boots. "Isn't this scene grand? One never tires of looking at the ocean, for it is never twice alike."

He was silent a moment, and seemed more thoughtful than usual, gathering a handful of the white sand and watching it drift slowly through his fingers. At length, recovering himself, he said:

"Sing something, please; you know I always like to hear you sing, 'in season and out of season.' The sea will be bass and accompaniment."

I began the old, old ballad: "Three fishers went sailing away to the west."

As my voice rose loud and full, swelling over the water with the melody and dying away to the sounding monotone of the waves, I looked at my companion. His face was turned seaward, and over it was a softened expression, and in his eyes a tender light I had never seen there before. Though my heart ceased beating, my voice was too well trained to falter, and the music wailed on:

For men must work and women must weep,
Though the harbor bar be moaning.

The sad chord did not touch him; joy and faith and hope held possession of his soul. How his thoughts irradiated his somewhat stern features! It was the face of the one man in the world for me, but I did not know it could look so handsome.

When the last echo of the song was lost in a retreating billow he turned, and, taking my hand, in the courtly manner that never forsook him:

"Thank you. I did not know there was so much music in that song. I have heard it often before, but never like that. Your rendering of it adds a hundred-fold to its meaning, and now I want to speak to you on a subject I had not intended to mention when I followed you here."

His bronzed face took on a ruddier hue, and the firm fingers closed over my hand in a nervous clasp, while, unnoticed by him, I lowered my sunshade between my face and his.

"I know I ought to have waited until you were at home, and I had meant to, but something impels me to throw myself on your mercy and find out my fate before you leave. I love your sister Millie with all my heart, as I never loved any one before, and I ask your permission to tell her so. I do not think she regards me wholly with indifference. I will take and cherish her as a precious flower. As my wife, time and wealth shall not be spared, and I am confident that somewhere may be found a cure for her infirmity. Will you intercede in my behalf if she hesitates to commit herself to my care? Plead for me with the assurance that it is love, not pity, I feel. Knowing your great influence over her, I want to beg you, for the sake of our pleasant friendship, to use it in my favor."

A cloud was gathering on the deep, the waves looked dark and angry, and fancy saw my love-boat reel from side to side and then go down, swallowed up in mid-ocean.

At the call of the company we joined them, and I went home, as I shall go through life in daily sight of their happiness, with never a line on my face to tell of my loss.—Belle Barnard, in N. Y. Weekly.

Fond lover (after a long delayed proposal)—Pethaps I've been too sudden, darling.

Darling girl (regaining her composure with a mighty effort)—Yes, George, it is very, very, very sudden, but—(and here she become faint again)—it is not too sudden.—[Texas Siftings.

George (nervously)—Do you love me? Will you marry me?

Almira—Not so fast, George. One at a time, please.—[Epoch.

A modern instance: Mrs. Flatowner—Have you children?

Mrs. Flatrenter—Yes, we have children, but we do not expect you to let them live with us. However, I shall insist on having my pet dogs and parrots.

Mrs. Flatowner—They will be welcomed, but I draw the line at children.—[Omaha World.

A little fellow, whose fifth birthday is at hand, heard the question asked of a newcomer, "How old is that infant?" His reply was, "She ain't old at all; she has just begun." A Slip of the Tongue.—Mamma—Why, Harry St. Clair. You naughty, naughty boy! I heard you tell your little brother just now that you'd 'knock him into the middle of next week" if he didn't sit over on the sofa. What do you mean by using such language?

Harry—I—I—er I meant to say "Please sit over," but my tongue slipped.—[Time.

A Surprise.—Mr. Nicefellow (to adored one's little brother)—There! You did that errand very nicely. Here's a penny for you.

Little Brother—Oh, ma! Mr. Nicefellow gave me a penny.

Ma—Well, my dear, you should say——

Little Brother—Yes, I know I should say, "thank you," but I was so s'prised I forgot. You said he hadn't a cent.—[N. Y. Weekly.

In a small town in Baden a minister closed his sermon the other day with these words: "We would be pleased, moreover, to have the young man who is now standing outside the door come in and make cer ain whether she is here or not. That would be a great deal better than opening the door half-an-inch and exposing the people in the last row of seats to a draught."—Frankfurter Zeitung.

In the Incurable Ward.—Head Physician—There you see how quiet and contentented the patients are. They're busy with their writing all day long, and never give us a bit of trouble. If it were not for Mr. Dana I really do not know what we should do here.

Visitor—But I did not know that Mr. Dana was a philanthropist. What has he done for the asylum?

Head Physician—Why, he gives them paper and pencils, and lets them write suggestions for the World's Fair for the New York Sun. I often think that if some of the purchasers of the paper could see how happy the poor creatures are when they see their articles in print, they wouldn't feel so sore about the space that's given to them.—[Puck.

The Alligator Wouldn't Eat.

"Had great fun the other evening," said a man. "Called on a young lady and found she had just received a little alligator from a friend in Florida. The lady was terribly worried about the little saurian—afraid it would die, and all that. Well, I knew you couldn't kill the reptile, but I didn't say so; I encouraged the young lady to worry and feel bad.

"'It want's eggs,' I said; that's what it wants—raw eggs; and you had better hurry up and give it some.'

"She put the beast in the basket. I took it up and said:

"'Why haven't you got some cotton in here for it to sleep on?'

"She looked scared, and said, 'Cotton?'

"'Yes; cotton,' I said. She was very much alarmed, and hustled around and found a roll of cotton which she loaded into the basket. Then she got a saucer and a couple of eggs and broke 'em and put 'em under the alligator's nose.

"'They must be beaten and made very frothy,' I told her.

"So she did that. But it wouldn't eat any more than before, of course. I flopped the little beast over into egg and smeared it all over with the batter, and it got so scared that it jumped around in the cotton and got all tangled up. You know egg-paste is great stuff for sticking.

"Then I told her to take the cotton out; that the alligator wouldn't sleep until it had eaten.

"Then I had her fix up a dish of pulverized sugar and cream, and bring some new radishes and some peach preserves and some olives and little onions and cheese.

"All this time the poor girl was worrying dreadfully, and two or three times when the beast let the curtains down over its eyes she thought it was dying. But she never suspected I was making game of her till I told her at last that she couldn't kill the alligator with an axe, and that all it would need to eat for a while would be a dish of water and a lot of pebbles and dirt. Then she chased me out of the house with her brother's big horn-handled cane, and I haven't dared to go back yet."

More Important than the Funeral.

An army friend tells the following: "The ease with which the dancing bear drew away the negroes from an orator the other day at a Mahone meeting in Virginia, puts me in mind of a similar scene in the days of the reconstruction in South Carolina. I was an officer of the Freedman's Bureau, and as such ruled over one of the coast counties. I was expected by the colored people to take the place of 'Ole Mahsta,' the justice of the peace, the county court, the doctor and parson. In the latter capacity I was called upon to read the services at the funeral of a picaninny on one of the plantations. It was my first appearance in the character of parson. I really felt quite subdued and solemn as the little procession moved from the 'quarters' toward the grove where plantation dead for many generations had been buried. The rude little coffin was borne on the shoulders of an uncle of the child, while other men carried hoes to cover in the shallow grave. I walked next with my prayer book in hand, and the men, women and children behind, singing a 'spiritual' in a doleful minor key. The grove was reached, the coffin lowered to its place, I was soon reading the beautiful burial service of the church. Happening to look up for a moment I was astonished to find the bulk of my congregation of mourners streaming across the open field behind me toward a tall tree, at the foot of which a couple of dogs were barking. As I stopped, wondering what it all might mean, the sorrowing father turned to me and remarked: 'Dat dar Mungo's treed anudder coon. He's de best coon dog on de Salkehatchie, ef I dos say hit mesef, an' I raised him from a pup.' The subsequent proceedings of the parson were very short, and I think the coon was caught."

A Tennessee Veteran.

General Alger tells of a queer and interesting customer whom he met recently in Tennessee at a place named after himself, Anderson, and of whom he had recently bought 20,000 acres of timber land. The old gentleman lived in a large white house with a big portico in front of it, and there were dotted around in different fields other small white houses. General Alger asked him:

"How old are you?"

"Eighty-two."

"Enjoying good health?"

"Yes, very good."

"How many children have you?"

"Nursing the one hundred and forty-ninth great-grandchild now. I'll send and get him for you."

"What do you mean to say? One hundred and forty-nine!"

Yes. I have had twenty-seven children; and with children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren we are nursing the one hundred and forty-ninth now, and I'll send and get him for you."

So the old gentleman sent out to one of the small white houses in the cluster and a very nice specimen of a hearty baby boy was brought in.

An Old Hero.

"I tell you sah, we had some mighty exciting times during the wah," said the colonel to the major.

"Yes, indeed; it's a comfort, sah, to think of them after they are all ovah."

"To be suah. Do you know that I don't believe I was ever really scyaht once, sah, in the midst of all the danger, sah?"

"Well, I can't say as much, I was scyaht once—only once."

"How was that?"

"It was in '63. Everybody was lying around the camp fire telling stories, when Zeb Hickey proposed a game of pokah—"

"And there was a sudden attack on you?"

"No, indeed, but Zeb raised me $200 before he drew, and I didn't have anything in my hand but a pair of deuces. I got three kings in the draw, and took the pot, but I tell you, sah, it gave my nerves a jolt."—[Merchant Traveller.

Can a dude be called a ground swell?

The Question Unanswered.

E. T. Jeffrey, late general manager of the Illinois Central, now retired and off to Europe for a season of pleasure, is in many respects a remarkable man. I heard a gentleman who knew Jeffrey all the way through his career talking about him the other evening.

"Jeffrey worked his way from the position of apprentice in the machine shops through every department to the post of general manager," he said, "and by his familiarity with every phase of railroad management was enabled to successfully cope with any problem that presented itself without calling his subordinates to give him technical information. It was next to impossible to stick him. I guess he never was floored but once, and that wasn't on a question pertaining to railroads. It was about twenty-five years ago, and Jeffrey, who was then a mighty wide-awake young fellow, eager for advancement and improvement of all sorts, belonged to a debating club which was very popular. The weekly meetings were largely attended, and some very knotty questions were there discussed and settled beyond dispute.

"On one occasion the question was; 'Our Daughters; are we rearing them properly?' This was a live and interesting topic, and the best of the club's speakers were listed to take part in the discussion, among them Jeffrey. The hall was crowded when the evening came, and many at that time well-known people were in the audience.

"Jeffery closed the argument with a talk on the negative side of the question. He submitted that the tendency was to rear girl's in frivolity and to make namby-pamby women of them; that there was not enough earnestness inculcated into the young feminine mind; that, instead, girls were encouraged to think and feel that they were on earth not to do but to be done for; that this idea would retard the intellectual advancement of woman, and through her, act as a hold-back on the whole race. This, he submitted, was clearly the fault of our mothers, since it was to the mothers that the world must look for the proper education of 'Our Daughters.'

"He made a fine talk, for he had warmed up to his theme, and when he concluded he had his hearers with him. But the presiding officer announced that before the judges of the debate gave their verdict the subject would be open for outside discussion, and anybody who chose to advance any ideas on the subject could do so. At this stage somebody noticed that Mrs. Livermore, a lady well known here in that day, was present, and knowing that she was a brainy woman and a wit as well, she was called on to give her views. She arose and said that she hadn't contemplated saying anything and didn't care to, particularly. She hoped, inasmuch as she had been called upon, her remarks would be taken in good part by those who had preceded her. She was assured that no one would take offense, and then she said:

"'Well, I would like to ask the young gentleman who closed the argument one question.'

"Jeffrey arose, prepared to make reply, and Mrs. Livermore impressively asked:

"'Young man, have you ever been a mother?'

"That was as far as the discussion went. I don't recollect whether the judges ever rendered a decision or not, for the meeting broke up with a howl of merriment. For years afterward when anybody wanted to floor Jeffrey they would say:

"'By the way, Jeffrey, have you ever been a mother?'

"And this always does it."—[Chicago Mail.

Heaven's Artillery.

The Twenty-seventh Massachusetts regiment was in camp on Bachelor's creek, North Carolina, near the edge of a wooded marsh, out of which came the fragrance of magnolia blossoms and the music of numberless mocking-birds. Here the men foraged more or less upon the "guerilla farmers" in the neighborhood. The regimental historian enlivens his pages with the story of one such occasion.

Just beyond our outposts was a family named Davis, who were always willing to furnish refreshments for a consideration, and one day when Lieutenant Hunt was in charge of the outposts he placed Sergeant Peck on picket very near the Davis plantation.

The sergeant was very considerate of the wants of the inner man, and when Lieutenant Hunt returned to this part of the line he found that Peck had been to Davis' house and ordered what he called a "stomach distender" for two.

Sergeant Peck's appetite and liberality got the better of any scruples he might naturally have felt about making known his neglect of duty, and he invited the lieutenant to the feast, an invitation that was promptly accepted.

The two men were eating with the best appetites when they heard a sudden roar and rattle, as of heavy guns and musketry. The enemy was upon them. Instantly they seized their arms and equipments, which had been laid aside for the occasion, and rushed unceremoniously out of the door.

Waiting for nothing they cleared the fences, expecting every moment another volley or a demand to surrender. On reaching the post, in anything but good order, they were hailed by one of the pickets:

"Hello, there! What's your hurry? Why didn't you stay till after the shower?"

Sure enough, while they had been busy at the table a sudden thunder cloud had come up, and what they had mistaken for an attack of the enemy was only a peal of thunder.

The two soldiers were often reminded of their famous dinner, and "old man Davis" never tired of referring to "the attack on the pickets."

Tired out: "Been sawing wood?" inquired the caller. "Worse than that," panted the bank president, wiping the perspiration from his brow and throwing himself exhausted into a chair. "I have been talking to a lady depositor. Whew."—[Chicago Tribune.

Frank Bryan's residence, west of the village, has been connected with the Commercial telegraph line.

Dr. Hamilton has returned home from a lengthy visit in New York State but his health is not improved any, we regret to say.

Dr. Chas. Waldron enjoyed an extraordinary Thanksgiving this year, for on that day a fine girl baby became an inmate of his family. The Doctor takes his good fortune with dignity, however.

They are not digging graves in Updike's meat market, but they are laying a new floor, and making a solid foundation for it. It will be a great improvement to his shop when finished.

F. J. Taggart of Adrian was in town yesterday and left a big ad at the HERALD office. We never turn away a customer. The card will be found on the eighth page and will explain itself.

Will Anderson has our thanks for late copies of the Chattanooga Sunday Times. That city is on the boom now, and has 25 different railroads. That city is now the greatest railroad center in the South.

The third dance of the series will be held at Armory Hall on Wednesday evening of next week, Dec. 11. Remember the date and invite your girl early.

Mr. and Mrs. P. W. Adams arrived on the morning train from Lansing. The bride was formerly Miss Minnie Kennedy, eldest daughter of A. A. Kennedy. The affair was a genuine surprise to the Tecumseh acquaintances of the parties and we have not yet learned the particulars.

C. H. Hopkins is engaged upon two oil portraits, full bust size, of the late Jonathan Hall and his widow, Mrs. Hall. The order was given by Miss Ella Hall, and he is instructed to spare no labor necessary to make them perfect. People who know what the artist can do are looking for an elegant pair of portraits.

Mathew Kerr, aged 21 years, died suddenly at Springville last Friday after an illness of only twenty-five hours. The funeral was held on Sunday under the auspices of the Brooklyn Masonic Lodge and the remains were brought to Tecumseh and deposited in our cemetery vault. J. S. Kinney had charge of the funeral.

The Church Fair given by the ladies of St. Peter's church last Tuesday was quite successful, although the weather proved very bad. A goodly sum was realized. In the evening the young people presented the extravaganza entitled Titania. It is a fine play for amateurs and was very nicely performed. The leading characters were exceptionally good and the minor parts were all well carried.

L't Eli Gray's hunting party returned from the North woods last week. The party consisted of Lieut. Gray and his son Joe, Rob't Orr and Major Soule of Ann Arbor. They killed ten deer and got six of them. On Wednesday and Thursday snow fell to the depth of 26 inches, and on Friday they had to break the road twenty miles to a railroad station. They concluded it was about time to come home.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Now is the time to subscribe.

Old Winter has come at last.

Capt. Fred B. Wood was in town Tuesday.

Wm. C. Heck has obtained an increase of pension.

Jud DePuy, of Detroit, spent Sunday in Tecumseh.

Bert Tribou, of Detroit, was home the first of the week.

John Fisher and wife spent Thanksgiving at Battle Creek.

Mrs. H. H. Suell, of Grand Rapids, is visiting friends in Tecumseh.

Mrs. N. M. Sutton is spending a few days with her daughter in Detroit.

Harry Tansley ate Thanksgiving turkey with his father's family at Addison.

Come and see our new price on cloaks Friday morning.
ANDERSON & CO.

Go to Anderson & Co's for Goat and Wolf Robes, Bed Blankets and Carpet Sweepers.

Mr. Jim Miller returned home Tuesday after a three weeks' visit in Homer, Calhoun County.

A. W. Slayton and family of Detroit spent Thanksgiving and Sunday with their Tecumseh friends.

James Vescelius, of Chicago, is spending two or three weeks with old acquaintances in Tecumseh and vicinity.

Mrs. S. F. Spafford has returned from her western trip, having been gone from home since the 16th of last July.

Miss Lyde Crowell came home to spend Thanksgiving with friends and left Monday to accept a situation at Detroit.

Miss Olie Seifert Wilson passed through Chicago last week, on her way from New York City to join her mother's family in Lincoln, Neb.

We are glad to learn that John Whitenack, who was attacked with serious illness last week, is now on the gain, with favorable prospects for a speedy recovery.

The second dance of the series on Wednesday evening of last week was well attended, considering the state of the weather, and those present had a very enjoyable hop.

C. E. Williamson got home from his New York trip the fore part of the week and his smiling countenance was pretty good proof that his visit to Gotham was a financial success.

Lewis Brown has purchased a bakery in Tecumseh, Mich., and expects to move there this week. Mr. Brown has a fine reputation as a baker and his removal from Auburn will be deeply regretted by a large number of patrons and friends.—Auburn Dispatch.

Miss Nealie Knapp is passing a few weeks with Lavern Wheeler's family in Chicago. Miss Knapp is a great favorite with a good many of the Tecumseh colony in that city and they are making her visit a very pleasant one.

Cadets Cocker, Sloan, Hopkins and Tiffany stood tie, having received the highest number of merits at Michigan Military Academy, Orchard Lake, last month. They drew for the badge and Benjamin Cocker was the lucky one. The badge is an elegant, solid gold one, pendant and two bars presented by M. S. Smith & Co.

Thanksgiving was more generally observed this year in Tecumseh than ever before within our recollection. Nearly all the stores were closed and the village presented the appearance of an ordinary Sabbath. The religious services at the M. E. Church were well attended and the congregation listened to an eloquent discourse from the Rev. Wm. H. Babbitt.

A bountiful Thanksgiving dinner was served at the Lilley House and "mine host" Patterson surpassed himself on that occasion. A better bill of fare was never presented at that House. The menu cards were unique specimens of the printers' art and a fitting prelude to the viands that were served. A number of village guests partook of the hospitalities of the House that day.

Mrs M. K. Elliott continues to grow in favor as a public speaker and cannot begin to fill all the engagements offered her. It looks now as if she would certainly be appointed pension agent for the Chicago district. The President could not make a better selection, as the little lady is "business from the word go," and fully able to fill the position with credit.

The ladies of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. Church will give a Chicken Pie supper at the Church parlors Wednesday, Dec. 11th. Supper served from five to half-past six, at 10 cents. They are also preparing a very interesting literary program to be given the same evening at half-past seven in the audience room. All are invited to remain and enjoy these exercises.
MRS. P. C. SNELL, Sec.

D. C. Baldwin, of Toledo, was in town Tuesday.

Mamie Osborn, of Ypsilanti, was home last week.

Mrs. L. P. Tribou went to Detroit, yesterday, to visit friends.

Tecumseh will have a kid band, if the kids can raise the wind sufficient to purchase brass instruments.

Mrs. Ella Webb, of Camden, Ind, is spending a few weeks with her sister, Mrs. Myron Conklin.

The little eight months boy of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Doke died last Sunday. The funeral took place Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Moffett, of Reading, Mich., spent Thanksgiving with their son, the popular clerk of the Lilley House.

Mr. and Mrs. Lyster Dewey, of Lansing, spent Thanksgiving with his parents, in Cambridge, and were in Tecumseh, this week.

Rev. F. Adkins was unable to occupy his pulpit last Sunday, on account of an injury received from a fall. He is now improving.

A. D. Hall and family and D. T. Hall and family attended the Nash-Wiggins wedding at Adrian, last evening.

E. A. Doke was called home Saturday on account of the death of his baby. He is firing on an engine in the Chicago yards and has a two weeks leave.

The Woman's relief Corps will give a supper at G. A. R. hall, Tuesday, Dec. 10. Supper served from 5 to 7 P. M. at 10c, after which will occur the drawing for the silk quilt. All are invited. BY ORDER COM.

Mrs. Dunmore, of Dundee, was in town, yesterday, selling tickets for a forty dollar quilt. The lady is eighty years of age, and the quilt is her own handiwork. One hundred and sixty tickets are sold at twenty-five cents each and the lucky number draws the quilt. She disposed of a large number of tickets here.

On the 30th of November last a fire occurred at Harry Root's residence which was put out soon, but damaged the household furniture. Alf. James had a policy thereon in the Northwestern National Insurance Company, and the loss was adjusted and paid December 4. This is pretty quick work, and shows the character of the company.

Be sure and hear the missionary programme in the audience room of the M. E. church, next Wednesday evening, which is to be given immediately after the chicken pie supper is served. Miss Grayson and other prominent singers will favor the audience with music. Dialogues, colloquies, recitations and music are on the programme.

Martin Wheelan and wife, Geo. B. Gray, wife and two children, Alf Lewis, wife and son started Tuesday morning for Florida. They were joined by ten or twelve others at Toledo, and the whole party then left for the land of flowers. Dr. E. Hause will not go South this winter, being kept at home to care for his aged mother.

Persons who wish to send their children to a select school will please make their wishes in this direction known to Miss Fannie Stocking at as early a day as possible. If sufficient encouragement is offered, Miss Stocking proposes to begin such a school at the opening of the new year. Those who have been long in Tecumseh do not need to be informed in regard to her excellent qualifications as a teacher.

The Mutual Reserve Fund Life Insurance Association, which is represented here by M. P. Brown, seems to "fill a long felt want" in life insurance. The aim of the company is, not to do a banking business, but to furnish life insurance at actual cost, and its rates are adjusted on that basis and for that sole purpose. The growth of the company has been wonderful during the past eight years. People desiring life insurance should call on Mr. Brown for a table of rates.

It was just twenty-five years ago last Saturday that Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Conklin took each other for better or worse. This fact had entirely slipped Met's mind, until he was reminded of it that evening. He was down town as usual, and was informed that he was wanted at home. On entering the house he found it crowded with his friends and the anniversary was celebrated in a manner that will leave pleasant recollections for some time to come in the minds of the celebrators.

Philo C. Mills of Adrian departed this life at the home of his daughter Mrs. H. M. Pomeroy on Thursday evening of last week, at the advanced age of 79 years. The deceased came to Michigan in 1831. and was one of the pioneer farmers of Franklin. For many years he was regarded as one of the leading citizens of this section, was widely known and highly respected by all. The funeral obsequies were held at Adrian last Monday afternoon and were largely attended. An obituary notice, fitly commemorating his life's work and worth, will appear in these columns hereafter.

Dudley Mixer and his daughter Sadie are visiting at W. E. Mattison's.

Attorneys Seth Bean and Geo. L. Bennett, of Adrian, were in town last Monday.

Read Anderson & Co.'s Christmas Ad., as it will help you select your Christmas presents.

Regular annual meeting of the Tecumseh Lodge No. 69. F. & A. M., will be held to-morrow night. A full attendance is requested.

Adamson Bros. always take a front seat at the holiday season. Inspect their new card which appears in the regular sheet this week.

G. Williamson dropped in yesterday to shake hands and say "Good Bye." He was off for New York City. He has procured a position in the produce commission house of R. B. Poucher, 41 Lawton Ave., a house to which C. E. Williamson sells much of his poultry. Good luck to him.

The wires connecting an amateur telegraph line belonging to Mr. B. F. Graves, came in contact with the street car wire this morning, and then again with some of the wires on the local telephone exchange. As a consequence about thirty numbers on the telephone service were burned out, making them useless for the present. Manager Baker informs us, however, that the damage will be repaired and in good working order again by tomorrow morning.—Adrian Times.

We have received a copy of the book entitled "Our Country's Future" from the publishers. A somewhat hasty examination shows it to be a work of much merit. Such subjects as the divorce question, the colored man, the press, the farmer, the tariff, and many other equally important topics are treated in a practical way that is both instructive and entertaining. See their notice elsewhere of agents wanted.

Last year the Detroit Journal organized and carried out a very successful floral exhibition, for the benefit of the Detroit charities, and is now busily at work planning for another and much greater one. The musical feature alone will require the organization of a chorus of 600 voices, and its art department will be of the dimensions of a notable art exhibition. The chiefest interest, however, will center in the floral display, and in the 25 floral booths, to be conducted by the ladies of the various charities. The Detroit Journal predicts that a $100,000 net cash surplus will be cleared.

Milliken's Bend.

The following extract is taken from a letter received from Mr. William McKaine, proprietor of the Madison House, at Tallulah, Madison, Parish, La.; "While I was merchandising at Milliken's Bend, in this Parish, during the year '87 and '88 I sold large quantities of Swift's Specific (S. S. S.), and during that time every one that used the medicine was loud in its praise. Among those who were benefited by S. S. S. was a man—since dead—who had cancer in its most malignant form. He had spent a small fortune in trying to effect a cure, but without success. After the knife had been used there was still a cancerous taint left in his blood. I finally persuaded him to try S. S. S., and alone eradicated the cancer, and he recovered perfect health. From that time until his death, which was several years, a symptom of the disease never returned."

BURNED TO DEATH.

Ten Men Perish in a Fire in the Minneapolis Tribune Building.

The Structure Entirely Consumed, and Editors, Printers and Others Meet an Awful Fate—The Property Loss Is $300,000.

TERRIBLE SCENES.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Dec. 2.—Ten human lives and $300,000 worth of property was sacrificed Saturday night by a fire that originated in the rooms of the Union League on the third floor of the Minneapolis Tribune building. The fire was discovered shortly after 10 o'clock by a district messenger, and almost before an alarm could be turned in every door and window of the immense eight-story building was belching fire and smoke. There were upward of eighty men, including the editorial staff and a force of compositors, at work on the seventh floor, and these were penned in like sheep by the sheets of flame that separated them from the elevator and stairway.

Then began a frenzied stampede for the window and roof. Meanwhile the fire department had got a ladder up to the sixth floor, and from there thirty or forty men were taken out of the building and landed on terra firma. Those who were on the roof dared not descend, and several jumped to the roofs of adjoining buildings and escaped with a few bruises.

The only exits to the building, which was, as usual, erroneously supposed to be fire-proof, were a narrow staircase, scarce wide enough for two persons to come down abreast, the elevator and a single fire-escape at the north end of the building. Several persons had made their escape in the meantime, but in less than ten minutes the flames sought the elevator shaft, which, acting as a mammoth flue, conveyed the fire to the top story, and soon the editorial rooms, on the same side of the building where the fire originated, were a seething mass of flames. In a few minutes it reached the other side, where the composing-room was situated.

While the work of rescue was going on from the window where the crowd of printers and others had assembled, Prof. Olsen, president of the Vermillion (S. D.) University, met a terrible fate. Mr. Olsen had been spending Thanksgiving here with his brother, and Saturday evening made a call upon a friend who was employed on the editorial force of the Tribune. While seated in his friend's room the alarm of fire was raised, but as investigation seemed to show that no particular danger need be apprehended both sat down and resumed their conversation. In a few minutes everybody realized the fact that nearly all hope of escape had been cut off, and Prof. Olsen and his friend started for the fire-escape leading from the sixth story, on which were located the editorial rooms. Some of those who were on that floor when the blaze was discovered are of opinion that the Tribune employe escaped. Prof. Olsen got out of the window all right and had proceeded down a short distance on the fire escape, when from some unknown reason he let go his hold and fell to the sidewalk. A couple of firemen rushed in and carried him to the nearest drug store, where it was found that he was dead, his body having been terribly crushed by the fall.

Seven bodies were found around the building last night, all of which have been identified. They were:

Milton Pickett, assistant city editor of the Pioneer Press; James F. Igoe, Associated Press night operator; Walter E. Miles, night agent and day operator of the Associated Press; Edward Olsen, president of the University of South Dakota at Vermillion; W. H. Millman, commercial editor of the Tribune; Jerry Jenkinson, printer; Robert McCutcheon, printer.

Other bodies are known to be in the building, but just how many is uncertain. Two men who could not be identified shot themselves rather than be burned to death, and the body of a man caught in the ruins is in plain sight of the crowd on Fourth street. It is believed that the number of victims will reach twenty and perhaps twenty-five, but until the debris cools off positive information as to the loss can not be obtained. The department withdrew from the ruins Sunday night and the search for bodies will begin just as soon as it is considered safe.

A sad incident of the fire was the finding of the body of W. H. Milman, the commercial editor of the Tribune. His body was found in the rear of the building badly burned. A week ago he returned to his home for dinner and found his wife dead in her chair from asphyxiation, and he attended her funeral last Monday. He had expressed a wish that he might follow her. An examination of the body of Mr. Millman at the morgue revealed a bullet hole in the temple, and he is supposed to be the man who was seen to shoot himself in the seventh floor window. It is supposed that when he saw that escape was cut off he deliberately shot himself.

The building, which stood at the corner of First avenue, South and Fourth streets, was an eight-story brick, and is completely gutted. In it were one weekly and three daily papers. The total loss is estimated at $300,000. The Tribune loss is placed at $50,000, with $20,000 insurance; the Journal loss is $40,000 and it is half insured, and the Tribune job office lost $60,000, on which there was about $25,000 insurance. Other minor losses make the aggregate given, and the insurance foots up $150,000.

VERMILION, S. D., Dec. 2.—News of the death of Dr. Olsen in the Minneapolis fire caused a feeling of sorrow in this city. Dr. Olsen was about 40 years old, a graduate of the Chicago University, and for several years a professor of Greek in that institution. He was a man of large culture, spoke several languages fluently, and traveled extensively in Europe, and was among the best-known of the younger educators of the country. About two and a half years ago he was called to the presidency of the University of Dakota, founded by the Territorial Government. Under his efficient management the institution grew rapidly, and at the time of his death there were over 300 students in the institution, and President Olsen's faculty numbered about twenty professors and teachers. He took a large interest in the educational work at Chautauqua, spent several summers at Chautauqua Lake, and was known all over the land among the students in the Chautauqua assemblies.

CLEOPATRA.

Being an Account of the Fall and Vengeance of Harmachis, the Royal Egyptian,

AS SET FORTH BY HIS OWN HAND.

By H. Rider Haggard,
Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," "Allan Quatermain," Etc., Etc., Etc.

Illustrated by NICHOLL, after CATON WOODVILLE and GREIFENHAGEN.

So the curtains were drawn and the chamber made as though the twilight was at hand. I came forward and stood me beside Cleopatra. "Gaze thou there!" I said, sternly, pointing with the wand to the empty space where I had been, "and thou shalt behold that which is in thy mind."

Then for a little space was silence, while the two women gazed fixedly and half fearful at the spot.

And as they gazed a cloud gathered before them. Very slowly it took shape and form, and the form it took was the form of a man, though as yet he was but vaguely mapped upon the twilight, and seemed now to grow and now to melt away.

Then I cried with a loud voice:

"Shade, I conjure thee, appear!"

And even as I cried the Thing, perfect in every part, leapt into form before us, sudden as the flash of day. His shape was the shape of Royal Cæsar, the toga thrown about his face, and on his form a vestment bloody from a hundred wounds. An instant so he stood, then I waved my wand and he was gone.

I turned me to the two women on the couch, and then I saw Cleopatra's lovely face all clothed in terror. Her lips were ashy white, her eyes stared wide, and the flesh was shaking on her bones.

"Man!" she gasped, "man! what art thou who canst bring the dead before our eyes?"

"I am the Queen's astronomer, magician, servant—what the Queen wills," I answered, laughing. "Was this the form that was on the Queen's mind?"

She made no answer, but, rising, left the chamber by another door.

Then Charmion rose and took her hands from her face, for she, too, had been stricken with dread.

"How dost thou these things, Royal Harmachis?" she said. "Of a truth I fear thee."

"Be not afraid," I answered. "Perchance thou didst see naught but what was in thy mind. All things are shadows. How canst then then know their nature, or what is and what only seems to be? But how goes it? Remember thou, this sport is played to an end."

"It goes well," she said. "By to-morrow's dawn these tales will have gone round, and thou wilt be more feared than any man in Alexandria. Follow me, I pray thee."

CHAPTER XI.

OF THE WAYS OF CHARMION; AND OF THE CROWNING OF HARMACHIS AS THE KING OF LOVE.

ON THE following day I received the writing of my appointment as Astrologer and Magician-in-Chief to the Queen, with the pay and perquisites of that office, which were not small. Also rooms were given me in the palace, through which I passed at night to the high watch tower, whence I looked on the stars and drew their auguries. For at this time Cleopatra was much troubled about matters political. And not knowing how the great struggle among the Roman factions would end, but being very desirous to side with the strongest, she took constant counsel with me as to the warning of the stars. These I read to her in such manner as best seemed to fit the high interest of my ends. For Antony, the Roman Triumvir, was now in Asia Minor, and, rumor ran, very wroth because it had been told to him that Cleopatra was hostile to the Triumvirate, in that her General, Serapion, had aided Cassius. But Cleopatra protested loudly to me and others that Serapion had acted against her will. Yet Charmion told me that, as with Allienus, it was because of a prophecy of Dioscorides, the unlucky, that the Queen herself had secretly ordered Serapion so to do. Nevertheless, this did not save Serapion, for, to prove to Antony that she was innocent, she dragged the General from the sanctuary and slew him. Woe be to those who carry out the will of tyrants if the scale should rise against them! And so Serapion perished.

Meanwhile all things went well with us, for the minds of Cleopatra and those about her were so set upon affairs abroad that neither she nor they thought of revolt at home. But day by day our party gathered strength in the cities of Egypt, and even in Alexandria, which is to Egypt as another land, all things being foreign there. Day by day those who doubted were won over and sworn to the cause by that oath which can not be broken, and our plans of action more firmly laid. And every other day I went forth from the palace to take counsel with my uncle Sepa, and there at his house met the nobles and the great priests who were for the party of Khem.

Of Cleopatra, the Queen, I saw much, and never was I more astonished at the wealth and splendor of her mind, that for richness and variety was as a woven cloth of gold throwing back all lights from its changing face. She feared me somewhat, and therefore was fain to make a friend of me, asking me many matters that seemed to be beyond the province of my office. Of the Lady Charmion also I saw much—indeed, she was ever at my side, so that I scarce knew when she came and when she went. For with that soft step of hers would she draw nigh, and I would turn me to find her at hand and watching beneath the long lashes of her downcast eyes. There was no service that was too hard for her, and no task too long, for day and night she labored for me and for our cause. But when I thanked her for her loyalty and said it should be had in mind in that time which was at hand, she stamped her foot and pouted with her lips like an angry child, saying that, among all the things which I had learned, this had I not learned—that Love's service asked no payment and was its own guerdon. And I being innocent in such matters and foolish that I was, holding the ways of women as of small account, read her sayings in the sense that her services to the cause of Khem, which she loved, brought with them their own reward. But when I praised so fine a spirit she burst into angry tears and left me wondering; for I knew not then that, unsought, this woman had given me all her love and that she was rent and torn by pangs of passion fixed like arrows in her breast. I did not know—how should I know it, who never looked upon her otherwise than as an instrument of our joint and holy cause! Her beauty never stirred me; nay, not even when she leaned over me and breathed upon my hair, I never thought of it otherwise than as a man thinks of the beauty of a statue. What had I to do with such delights? I who was sworn to Isis and dedicated to the cause of Egypt. O, ye Gods, bear me witness that I am innocent of this thing, which was the source of all my woe and the woe of Khem!

How strange is this love of woman, that it is so small in its beginning and in its end so great! See, at the first it is even as the little spring of water welling from a mountain's heart. And at the last what is it? It is a mighty river that floweth ar-gosies of joy and makes wide lands to smile. Or, perchance it is a torrent to wash in a flood of ruin across the fields of Hope, bursting in the barriers of design, and bring to tumbled nothingness the tenement of man's purity and the temples of his faith. For when the Invisible conceived the order of the universe, He set within its plan this seed of woman's love that, by its most unequal growth is doomed to bring about equality of law. For now it lifts the low to heights untold, and now it brings the noble to the level of the dust. And thus, while woman, that great surprise of Nature, is, Good and Evil can never grow apart. For still she stands, and, blind with love, shoots the shuttle of our fate, and pours sweet water into the cup of bitterness, and poisons the wholesome breath of life with the doom of her desire. Turn this way and turn that, she is at hand to meet thee. Her weakness is thy strength, her might is thy undoing. Of her thou art, to her thou goest. She is thy slave, yet holds thee captive; at her touch honor withers, locks open, and barriers fall. She is infinite as ocean, she is variable as heaven, and her name is the Unforeseen. Man, strive not to escape from woman and the love of woman; for, fly where thou wilt, she is yet thy fate, and whate'er thou buildest thou buildest it for her!

And thus it came to pass that I, Harmachis, who had put such matters far from me, was yet doomed to fall by the thing I held of no account. For, see, this Charmion; she loves me—why, I knew not. Of her own thought she learned to love me, and of her love came what shall be told. But I, knowing naught, treated her even as a sister, walking as it were hand in hand with her toward our common end.

And so the time passed on till, at length, all things were made ready.

It was the night before the night when the blow should fall, and there were revelings in the palace. That very day had I seen Sepa, and with him the captains of a band of five hundred men, who should burst into the palace at midnight on the morrow, when I had slain Cleopatra the Queen, and put the Roman and the Gallic legionaries to the sword. That very day had I suborned the Captain Paulus, who, since I drew him through the gates, was my will's slave. Half by fear and half by promises of great reward I had prevailed upon him, for his was the watch, at the signal on the morrow night to unbar that small gate which faces to the east.

All was made ready—the flower of Freedom that had been five and twenty years in growth was on the point of bloom. In every city, from Abu unto Athue, armed companies were gathered, and from their walls spies looked out, awaiting the coming of the messenger who should bring tidings that Cleopatra was no more, and that Harmachis, the Egyptian, had seized the throne. All was prepared, triumph hung to my hand as a ripe fruit to the hand of the plucker. Yet, as I sat at the royal feast my heart was heavy, and a shadow of coming woe lay cold within my mind. I sat there in a place of honor, nigh to the majesty of Cleopatra, and looked down the lines of guests, bright with gems and garlanded with flowers, marking those whom I had doomed to die. There before me lay Cleopatra's self, in all her beauty, which thrilled the beholder as he is thrilled by the rushing of the midnight gale, or by the sight of stormy waters. I gazed on her as she touched her lips with wine and toyed with the chaplet of roses on her brow, bethinking me of the dagger beneath my robe that I had sworn to bury in her breast. Again, and yet again, I gazed and strove to hate her, strove to rejoice that she must die—and could not. There, too, behind her—watching me now, as ever, with her deep-fringed eyes—was the lovely Lady Charmion. Who, to look at her innocent face, would believe that she was the setter of that snare wherein should miserably perish the Queen who loved her? Who would dream that locked in her girlish breast was the secret of so much death? I gazed, and grew sick at heart because I must anoint my throne with blood, and by evil sweep away the evil of the land. At that hour I wished, indeed, that I was naught but some humble husbandman, who in its season sows and in its season garners the golden grain! Alas! the seed that I had been doomed to sow was the red seed of Death, and now I must reap the fruit of the harvest!

"Why, Harmachis, what ails thee?" said Cleopatra, smiling her slow smile. "Has the golden skein of stars got tangled, my astronomer? or dost thou plan some new feat of magic? Say what is it, that thou dost so poorly grace our feast. Nay, now, did I not know, having made inquiry thereon, that things so low as we poor women are far beneath thy gaze, why, I should swear that Eros had found thee out, Harmachis!"

"Nay, that I am spared, O Queen," I answered. "The servant of the star marks not the smaller light of woman's eyes, and therein he is happy."

Cleopatra leaned herself toward me, looking on me long and steadily in such fashion that despite my will the blood fluttered at my heart.

"Boast not, thou proud Egyptian," she said in a low voice which none but I and Charmion could hear, "lest perchance thou dost tempt me to match my magic against thine. What woman can forgive that man should push us by as things of no account? 'Tis an insult to our sex that Nature's self abhors," and she leaned back and laughed most musically. But glancing up, I saw Charmion, her teeth upon her lip and an angry frown upon her brow.

"Pardon, Royal Egypt," I answered, coldly, but with such wit as I could summon, "before the Queen of Heaven even stars grow pale!" This I said of the moon, which is the sign of the Holy Mother whom Cleopatra dared to rival, naming herself Isis come to earth.

"Happily said," she answered, clapping her white hands. "Why, here's an astronomer who hath wit and can shape a compliment. Nay, such a wonder must not pass unpaid, lest the Gods resent it. Charmion, take thou this chaplet from my hair and set it upon the learned brow of our Harmachis. King of Love he shall be crowned, whether he will it or will it not."

Charmion lifted the chaplet from Cleopatra's brows and bearing it to where I was, with a smile set it upon my head, yet warm and fragrant from the Queen's hair, but so roughly that she pained me somewhat. And this she did because she was wroth, although she smiled with her lips and whispered: "An omen, Royal Harmachis." For though she was so much a woman, yet when she was angered or suffered jealousy, Charmion had a childish way.

Having thus fixed the chaplet, she courtesied low before me, and with the softest tone of mockery named me, in the Greek tongue, "Harmachis, King of Love." Thereon Cleopatra laughed and pledged me as "King of love," and so did all the company, finding the jest a merry one. For in Alexandria they love not those who live straightly and turn aside from women.

But I sat there, a smile upon my lips and black anger in my heart. For, knowing who and what I was, it irked me to think myself a jest to the frivolous nobles and light beauties of Cleopatra's Court. But chiefly was I angered against Charmion, because she laughed the loudest, and then I did not know that laughter and bitterness are often the veils of a sore heart wherewith it wraps its weakness from the world. "An omen," she said it was—that crown of flowers—and so it proved indeed. For I was fated to barter the double diadem of the Upper and the Lower Land for a wreath of passion's roses that fade even ere they fully bloom, and Pharaoh's ivory bed of state for the pillow of a faithless woman's breast.

"King of Love!" they crowned me in their mockery; aye, and King of Shame! And I, with the perfumed roses on my brow—I, by descent and ordination the Pharaoh of

"AN OMEN, ROYAL HARMACHIS."

Egypt—bethought me of the imperishable halls of Abouthis and of that other crowning which on the morrow should be consummated.

But still smiling, I pledged them back, and answered with a jest. For rising, I bowed before Cleopatra and craved leave to go. "Venus," I said, speaking of the planet that we know as Donaou in the morning and Bonou in the evening, "was in the ascendant. Therefore as new-crowned King of Love, I must now pass to do my homage to its Queen." For these barbarians name Venus Queen of Love.

And so amid their laughter I withdrew me to my watch tower, and, dashing that shameful chaplet down amid the instruments of my craft, made pretense to note the rolling of the stars. There I waited, thinking on many things that were to be until such time as Charmion should come with the list of the doomed and the messages of my uncle Sepa, whom she had that evening seen.

At length the door opened softly, and she came jeweled and clad in her white robes, even as she had left the feast.

CHAPTER XII.

OF THE COMING OF CLEOPATRA TO THE CHAMBER OF HARMACHIS; OF THE THROWING FORTH OF THE KERCHIEF OF CHARMION; OF THE STARS, AND OF THE GIFT BY CLEOPATRA OF HER FRIENDSHIP TO HER SERVANT HARMACHIS.

"AT LENGTH thou art come, Charmion," I said. "It is over late."

"Yes, my lord; but by no means could I escape Cleopatra. Her mood is strangely crossed to-night. I know not what I may portend. Strange whims and fancies blow across it like light and contrary airs upon a summer sea, and I can not read her purpose."

"Well, well; enough of Cleopatra. Hast thou seen our uncle?"

"Yea, Royal Harmachis."

"And hast thou the last lists?"

"Yea, here they be," and she drew them from her bosom. "Here is the list of those who, after the Queen, must certainly be put to the sword. Among them thou wilt note is the name of that old Gaul, Brennus. I grieve for him, for we are friends; but it must be. It is a heavy list."

"'Tis so," I answered; "when men write out their count they forget no item, and our count is long. What must be, must be. Now for the next."

"Here is the list of those to be spared, as friendly or uncertain; and here that of the towns that certainly will rise so soon as the messenger reaches their gates with tidings of the death of Cleopatra."

"Good. And now"—and I paused—"and now as to the manner of Cleopatra's death. How hast thou settled it? Must it be even by my hand?"

"Yea, my lord," she answered, and once again I caught that note of bitterness in her voice. "Doubtless my Lord will rejoice that his should be the hand to rid the land of this false and wanton woman, and at one blow break the chains which gall the neck of Khem."

"Talk not thus, girl," I said, "well thou knowest that I rejoice not, being but driven to the act by deep necessity and the pressure of my vows. Can she not, then, be poisoned? Or can no one of the eunuchs be suborned to slay her? My soul turns from this bloody work! Indeed, I marvel, however heavy be her crimes, that thou canst talk thus lightly of the death by treachery of one who loves thee!"

"Methinks my Lord is over-tender, forgetting the greatness of the moment and all that hangs upon this dagger stroke that shall cut the thread of Cleopatra's life. Listen, Harmachis. Thou must do the deed, and thou alone! Myself would I do it, had my arm the strength; but it has it not. By poison it can not be done, for every drop she drinks and every morsel that shall touch her lips is strictly tasted by three separate tasters, who can not be suborned. Nor may the eunuchs of the guard be trusted. Two, indeed, are sworn to us; but the third can not be come at. He must be cut down afterward; and, indeed, when so many men must fall, what matters a eunuch more or less? Thus shall it be, then. To-morrow night, when Bonou at three hours before midnight is in the right ascension, thou dost cast the final augury of the issue of the war. And then thou wilt, as is agreed, descend alone with me, having the signet to the outer chamber of the Queen's apartment. For the vessel bearing orders to the Legions sails from Alexandria at the following dawn; and alone with her, for she wills that the thing be kept secret as the sea, thou wilt read the message of the stars. And as she pores over the papyrus, then must thou stab her in the back, so that she dies; and see thou that thy will and arm fail thee not! The deed being done—and indeed it will be easy—thou wilt take the signet and pass out to where the eunuch is—for the others will be waiting. If by any chance there be trouble with him—but there will be no trouble, for he dare not enter the private rooms, and the sounds of death can not reach so far—thou must cut him down. Then will I meet thee; and, passing on, we will come to Paulus, and it shall be my care to see that he is neither drunk nor backward, for I know how to hold him to the task. And he and those with him shall throw open the side gate, when Sepa and the five hundred chosen men who are in waiting shall pour in and throw themselves upon the sleeping legionaries, putting them to the sword. Why, the thing is easy, so thou rest true to thyself, and let no woman's fears creep into thy heart. What is this dagger's thrust? It is nothing, and yet upon it may hang the destinies of Egypt and the world."

The only true practical

ELIXIR OF LIFE AND HEALTH.

Is one that promotes digestion, improves the appetite, cleanses the liver, purifies the blood, and stimulates brain and nerves without injurious reaction, and one that may be taken alike by adult or infant. Profane compounds, made of vile rum or bad whiskey, sweetened or flavored, under the titles of bitters, tonics, &c., produce effects far worse than the disease for which they are taken.

Vinegar Bitters is a pure tonic, a nervine without being narcotic, a blood purifier without poison a liver tonic without purging, and above all, a life-giving stimulant without alcohol. The only medicine with such powers in the world.

A GENUINE TEMPERANCE BEVERAGE,

far surpassing alcohol in any shape as a tonic, and it might be called

LIQUID LIFE,

since it stimulates, invigorates and regulates digestion, nutrition, secretion, excretion, respiration, and all the functions whereby life is maintained—we literally take in vitality in spoonsful.

It is not too much to assert that the equal of Vinegar Bitters does not exist, and no counterpart or compound with similar virtues has ever been known.

CALIFORNIA,

if remarkable for nothing else, would be immortalized by the production of the medicinal fruits, roots and herbs of which this Bitters is composed. Many of them used by the Indians and the medical profession in the treatment of chills and fevers, rheumatism, catarrh consumption, neuralgia, headache, liver complaint, kidney disease, jaundice, gout, piles, boils, skin diseases, &c., &c., too numerous to mention, but easily understood when the action of the Bitters on the vital functions is remembered. The following from the Saginaw Courier will apply equally well to [illegible]tude.

[illegible]ominent merchant freed his [illegible] few days since upon the sub[illegible] holiday customers. All Mer[illegible]ts, he said receive their full stock [illegible]oliday goods by the last of No[illegible]mber or the first of December. [illegible]e goods are put on exhibition at [illegible]nce, and the clerks have plenty of [illegible]leisure to wait upon customers. As a rule, however, people do not make any holiday purchases until Christmas week; often, indeed, they wait until the 24th before visiting a single store or deciding what they wish to purchase. When at last they do start out, they haven't the faintest idea of where they are going or for what they are looking. The stores are crowded, and the clerks have no leisure to waste on them. The would-be purchaser gets disgusted and wrathy. Finally she flounces out of the establishment, vowing that she will never go there again, that the clerks are disobliging and impolite, that there isn't any thing in the store which she would buy, anyway, or even except as a present, and announces her fixed determination to do her next year's holiday trading in another city. Therefore in view of the aforesaid statements, merchants would mildly suggest that the good people hereabouts take time, this year, by the forelock. It will pay.

A WELCOME HOME.

Taken in all its features, the reception given to Mr. and Mrs. Ancel K. Whitmore, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Whitmore, on North Winter street last evening, was one of the pleasantest social occasions we have had an opportunity to note in some time. Mr. and Mrs. Whitmore, it will be remembered, journeyed to California, some months ago, with a tacit intention of settling in the Golden state permanently if everything should meet their anticipations. They had a delightful time while there, were royally entertained by relatives and friends, and journeyed to all the leading points of interest in that region. But after all Old Lenawee possessed sufficient attraction to lure them back again, and here they propose to stay. The reception, conceived and very cleverly carried out by Mrs. Whitmore, junior, was attended by over two hundred ladies and gentlemen, resident in Adrian and surrounding towns, who gladly availed themselves of the opportunity to greet their old-time friends, and welcome them back to the circles where they have always been so well esteemed.—Adrian Times.

THE NATIONAL DEMOCRAT.

We will send the national Democrat and HERALD to any address within the United States for $2 25 a year. All paid up subscribers to the HERALD are entitled to the benefits of this offer.

The regular subscription price of the National Democrat is $1.50 per year, and it is well worth it. It is published weekly in the city of Washington, and each issue contains eight seven-column pages of reading matter. Send to this office for sample copies.

It has the endorsement of leading Democrats; it contains all the Washington and National news; its record of Congressional proceedings will be full and complete, and it is in every way a worthy exponent of sound Democratic Doctrine. Subscribe now and secure this staunch organ of the party of the people.

The HERALD and National Democrat for $2.25 per year in advance.

A MOMENT

Of your time, reader, may perhaps be profitably devoted to the following:—

Those who take an agency for a reliable enterprising house, learn their business and stick to it, "get on" in the world. People who have any idea of engaging in any canvassing business will do well to write George Stinson & Co., Portland, Maine—the great art and general publishers. They offer the most exceptional advantages to those who are sufficiently enterprising to be willing to make a push in order to better their condition. It costs nothing to try. Women make successful canvassers, as well as men. Full particulars will be sent to those who address the firm, their full address is given above.

LADIES' KID GLOVES.

On receipt of $1 25 we will send the Chicago Weekly Times for one year and make a present to the subscriber of a pair of ladies' fine kid gloves, worth $1 50, and sold regularly at that price. Our supply of $1 gloves is entirely exhausted; therefore we are obliged to withdraw that offer, and in the future the price of the Weekly Times and kid gloves will be $1.25. We now give you a glove worth $1.50, four and five button, embroidered back, genuine kid. We have only a limited number of these at our command. This offer is more liberal than the former, as the grade of gloves is far superior. In sending subscriptions give size and color of glove desired. The best weekly of the great Northwest. Do not send stamps in payment. Progressive! Aggressive! The Chicago Times.

The HERALD and Times, both papers will be sent for one year, for $2.

THE COURIER-JOURNAL.

The representative newspaper of the southwest. Largest circulation of any democratic newspaper in America. It is the paper for the farmer, the merchant and the family circle. Popular and cheap. It advocates a reform of the present high tariff, and wages vigorous war on all subsidies and monopolies. It is emphatically the people's paper, and its immense circulation throughout the United States attests its power as the organ of the people.

The Weekly Courier-Journal, is the largest and best weekly newspaper issued. It is an eight page paper of eight columns to the page, and its sixty-four columns are filled each week with live and interesting matter. It is newsy bright and clean, and leads the American newspapers of the day. The regular subscription price is only $1 a year, and to clubs of eight yearly subscribers at one time, with eight dollars, an extra copy is sent one year to the club raiser, or to any other address desired. In other words, nine copies one year for eight dollars. The The Courier Journal is the one great newspaper west of the Alleghanies and south of the Potomac and the Ohio which has had the courage, the independence and the ability to stand and resist the flood-tide of monopoly sweeping over the land and to make an upright and disinterested defense of the toiling, tax-paying masses of the people. Fighting all dishonest schemes, the Courier-Journal is as a sentinel on the watch tower, sleepless and vigilant.

Subscribe to the Weekly Courier-Journal and learn the truth, and join in the people's battle of resistance.

Daily (except Sunday) one year, $10; daily (except Sunday) one month, $1; Sunday, one year, $1.

W. N. HALDEMAN,
President Courier Journal Co., Louisville, Ky.

THE VOICE.

Forty-eight columns each week, full of matter of interest to all. We will send to any person a sample copy of this most aggressive yet popular paper in the world. free. New subscribers are receiving a valuable premium, free, viz.: "L'Angelus" reproduced in fourteen oil colors. A marvelously correct copy of the world-famed painting produced after months of preparation, with great care, by the Oleographic process.

Black and white lithographs, etchings, engravings or photographs, fail to produce the effects of the original picture through lack of its marvelously natural color work, so essential to the life of this inspiring work of art.

The Voice contains a sermon from Spurgeon or Talmage each week.

It contains select short stories; interesting matter in all directions.

Here are the market quotations and farm news.

You will find here the latest politics bearing especially on the temperance question.

This is the organ of the temperance movement. Says Gen. Neil Dow: "In all our fight for prohibition, we have had no such paper as the Voice."

Are you posted on the general news of the week? If not, get the Voice.

Wants to Speak a Good Word.

After suffering untold agonies for three years from rheumatism and after trying various remedies without effect, I decided to try S. S. S. After taking eight bottles I was entirely cured. Therefore I cheerfully add mine to the many testimonials which go to prove the great success of S. S. S. as a remedy for those suffering from rheumatism.

THANKSGIVING.

We remember in our boyhood years it was a cherished Thanksgiving custom among the rocks and mountains with many pleasant valleys in the State of New Hampshire, where the writers paternal home was situated, within sixty rods of Dartmouth College and twenty rods from the time-honored monumental meeting-house built in the year A. D. 1794, sixty six feet by sixty wide, with posts thirty feet, and a steeple one hundred feet. Here every Sabbath for ninety five years meetings have been held. The first fire to warm this house was twenty-six years after it was built. There has been several thousand dollars paid for repairs. The writer has attended Thanksgiving annually for sixty years in Michigan, or we make it a cheerful holiday. There was in attendance at Cambridge last Thursday, twenty-eight belonging to one family. The pioneer rooms were profusely decorated. The tables were sumptuously spread, and all was cheerful with many generous presents in memory of social enjoyment. F. A. D.

A man who has practised medicine for 40 years, ought to know salt from sugar; read what he says:

TOLEDO O, Jan. 10, 1887.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co.—Gentlemen:—I have been in the general practice of medicine for almost forty years, and would say that in all my practice and experience have never seen a preparation that I could prescribe with as much confidence of success as I can Hall's Catarrah Cure, manufactured by you. Have prescribed it a great many times and its effect is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they would take it according to directions.

Yours Truly,
L. L. GORSUCH, M. D.
Office, 215 Summit St.

We will give $100 for any case of Catarrh that can not be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Taken internally.

ESTATE OF DAVID C. BOYD.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee, ss

At a session of the Probate Court for the County of Lenawee, holden at the Probate Office in the city of Adrian, on Monday, the 2d day of December, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight.

Present, Richard B. Robbins, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of David C. Boyd, Minor.

On reading and filing the petition of John B. Boyd, guardian of said minor, praying for the allowance of his first annual account as such guardian; and for such other order and decree, as to this court shall seem proper.

It is Ordered, That Monday, the 30th day of December, 1889, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the next-of-kin of said minor and all other persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said court then to be holden at the Probate office, in the city of Adrian, and show cause if any there be, why the prayer of said petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, That said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate of the pendency of said petition and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD, a newspaper printed and circulating in said county of Lenawee, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

Harper's Young People

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY.

The eleventh volume of Harper's Young People, which begins with the number for November 5, 1889, presents an attractive program. It will offer to its readers at least four serials of the usual length, and others in two or three parts, namely, "The Red Mustang," by William O. Stoddard; "Pan and the Baby," by Lucy C. Lillie; "Prince Tommy," by John Russell Coryell; and "Mother's Way," by Margaret E. Sangster; two short serials by Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen. Two series of Fairy Tales will attract the attention of lovers of the wonder world, namely, the quaint tales by Howard Pyle, and so admirably illustrated by him, and another series in a different vein by Frank M. Bicknell. There will be short stories by W. D. Howells, Thomas Nelson Page, Mary E. Wilkins, Nora Perry, Harriett Prescott Spofford, David Kerr, Hezekiah Butterworth, Sophie Swett, Richard Malcolm Johnson, etc.

A subscription to Harper's Young People secures a juvenile library. There is useful knowledge, also plenty of amusement.—Boston Advertiser.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

BRITTON BUDGET.

Geo. Shafer and family leave for Wales, Ont., this week.

Byron Covill is quite sick. Dr. Nelson has charge.

Have you sampled that stock of fresh candies and nuts at the Postoffice?

G. W. Hough, from Detroit, will open a general stock of goods in one of Beasley's stores in a day or two.

Our sick list this week is rather larger than we could wish and includes the names of Mrs. John Britton, Mrs. Will Britton, Mrs. W. J. Clark and Mrs. Geo. Shafer.

Orange blossoms in the near future,—at least that is the way indications point. We know who it is, too, but ain't going to tell just yet. Maybe we will next week. Won't say for sure.

It is said that a member of the Kid choir—we believe the sub basso profundo—was missing for some time at a practice meeting the other evening. It was finally discovered that he had pulled off his boots and laid down behind them and gone to sleep.

The Ladies' Home Missionary Society met in the basement of the Church Wednesday afternoon to make curtains for the Church and finish the cushions for the seats. This Society is doing a large amount of work and is keeping the Church property in apple pie order.

Herbert Cranshaw is again to be found at the Exelby hotel. By the way, we hear the hotel well spoken of by its patrons and justly, too. George takes good care of his customers and makes a good landlord.

It is reported that Fred Exelby, who is now a "soier" out on the frontier, met with a severe accident a few days ago, while drilling. His horse fell on him, breaking a leg and collar bone.

Loose & Sleeper are shipping 3 or 4 cars of live-stock every week from Britton, generally loading on Saturdays. This makes our town look lively on those days, besides putting hundreds of dollars in cash into the hands of the farmers, and this helps to make trade better on these days. But this is only one day in the week. Give us an elevator and a custom grist mill and we will have business for every day in the week; those new stores would all be rented and Britton take another boom.

Our school is coming into line on the flag business and will soon hoist the stars and stripes. Appropriate ceremonies etc. Everything in order.

George Smith, who is nursing a broken leg and a dislocated ankle, is said to be doing as well as could be expected.

Miss Hattie Vreeland, of St. Johns, has been visiting Montie Hoagland for a few days.

Will Bidwell and his girl took in the town last Sunday. Will don't bring any other fellow with him nowadays when he comes down into the country. Not much! He don't propose to get left again.

A. R. T. Lee is suffering from a severe sprain of the left ankle joint.

Ivy Osborn has the new house in the second ward enclosed and is rushing it these warm days.

Rainy weather and lots of mud.

Ira Coller and wife were in Britton Saturday night.

Ira Ousterhout was home Sunday.

The drawing of the smoking sets at J. B. Coller's took place Monday evening and resulted in Wm. Uuderwood, one set; Richard Wiggins, one; Wm. Prindle, two; Joe Hunter, one; Will Randall, one; Earnest Hoagland, one; Wash Underwood, one; Frank Sheany, one. Everything was satisfactory. After the drawing of the smoking sets the boys wanted to have some more fun; so they bought the best lamp that Coller had in his store and sold 25 numbers at 25c each, and Thomas Lee was the lucky man.

Horace Burgess and Jerry Burleson, of Macon, were in town on their way to Detroit Monday night and returned Tuesday. The last we saw of Jerry was when the boys were trying to get him to weigh the heaviest and lightest, but they got hold of the wrong chicken. Macon people may look green but it takes some pretty smart folks to catch them, don't it, Jerry?

Laban Babcock went to Tecumseh Tuesday.

Alex Turner, of Tecumseh, was in town Tuesday selling tickets for the quilt that was drawn Tuesday eve.

There are only three stores empty in the row of bricks.

Len Allen, who has been out west the last four months, returned Tuesday.

Taxes are coming in at a good rate. Our tax collector will be at Ridgeway the 20th, at J. B. Coller's store in Britton Dec. 13th-27, at Jno. G. Witt's Dec. 12th-26th to receive taxes.

Dr. Farlin, the New York Specialist in Chronic and Nervous Diseases, will be at the Exelby House, Britton, on Tuesday and Wednesday, the 17th and 18th inst., where he desires to meet his numerous patients in that vicinity. Do not fail to consult him.

The Sons of Veterans will give a box social at G. A. R. Hall on Wednesday evening of next week, Dec. 18th. Each lady is requested to furnish a box, containing a lunch for two, and each box should contain the name of the one who prepares it and be securely tied. Let everybody turn out and give the boys a lift. A. E. Palmer will officiate as auctioneer.

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God, in His infinite wisdom, to remove from our society by death a beloved member,—Elder A. L. Hubbs,—who, during his stay among us, endeared himself to all by his noble Christian character and earnest devotion to the cause of Christ.

Resolved, That, while we deeply mourn his loss, we humbly bow in submission to Him Who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That, during several weeks of earnest labor among us, he was the means of leading many souls to the fold of Christ.

Therefore; Resolved, That we, as a society, will hold his memory in grateful remembrance, and regard his example as one worthy of imitation.

Resolved, That we tender to the bereaved relatives and friends our heartfelt sympathy in this great affliction.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be published in the TECUMSEH HERALD and the Herald of Gospel Liberty, and that a copy of the same be tranmitted to the family of the deceased.

JAMES WRIGHT,
MINNIE ACKLEY,
MARY BOWERMAN.
Com. of Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Ben C. Ellis went to Detroit Monday and returned Tuesday night.

Mrs. Geo. Kies of Elkhart Ind is here for a weeks visit.

Mrs. E. M. Conklin, of Manchester, is here for a visit.

Miss Ida Brown is home.

Mrs. J. E. McCollum is spending a few days with Clinton friends.

George VanGieson was called courting to Adrian Monday. This is a little outside of George's line, but he got there just the same.

Mrs. Mate Clark will close out her millinery business soon, and attend strictly to home duties in future.

Mrs. Andrew McDermott had the misfortune to break an arm Monday.

Mrs. J. B. Hause gave a tea party Friday afternoon of last week.

Mrs. D. Keyes is a little better; her sister Mrs. Gallery of Eaton Rapids is here.

Miss Mamie Bradner returned from Jackson the first of the week.

Mrs. Bruce had a birthday party Tuesday. She is 85 years old.

Prof. Swift, of Rochester, N. Y., the world-famed astronomer, and lecturer will lecture in the town hall, in Clinton, December 18 and 19. Those who fail to hear him will miss a rich treat. Admission, one evening, 25 cents; both evenings, 40 cents; children, 15 cents.

Will Mattison, who has been clerking for C. S. Burroughs, leaves this week for his home in Brooklyn. He will be missed among the young people and musicians. We are sorry to lose him.

Mr. Tyrrell, (colored) of Hillsdale college, spoke to a large audience, Sunday evening, in the Baptist church on the race problem

The ladies' fair passed off very successfully. They realized $80.00 The supper netted about $20.00, making about $100.00 for the rectory fund.

OBITUARY.

Died in Macon, on the evening of Dec. 5th, Mrs. Katie Langan, The deceased was born in Barnegat, N. J. Oct. 13th, 1814. and was therefore 75 years of age at her last birthday. Through years of intense suffering she combated it heroically, patiently and uncomplainingly, so that only those who were with her constantly ever realized how slight was her hold upon life. Three of her sons who reside in the northern part of this State arrived home in time to be with her during her last hours on earth. The funeral services were held at the family residence on the 7th inst. and were largely attended. Words of comfort and consolation were spoken by Rev. Mr. Williams of Clinton.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

The muddy season is upon us and the wheeling is fearful.

Dr. D. W. Loree went to Toledo Friday of last week, to prescribe for Frank Allen's little baby boy, who has the whooping cough.

C. M. Gove and C. B. Dibble have been repairing and overhauling their sheds at the church, during the past week.

Quarterly meeting service will be held next Saturday and Sunday. The lovefeast service will be held during the evening service instead of the morning service.

The attendance at the L. C. S. held at Mrs. H. J. Williams on Friday evening, was quite largely attended and all enjoyed a pleasant time.

Labe Babcock, the township treasurer, was in the village last Friday collecting taxes. He will be found at the store of S. P. Smith on Friday, Dec. 20th, to receive the taxes of all who wish to save the 3 per cent.

Those who attend the library circle, which meets once in two weeks on Tuesday evening at the library, enjoy an hour very pleasantly and profitably. On account of Christmas eve. being the evening for their regular meeting, they will meet next week Tuesday evening, when Will Carlton's life and works will receive the attention of those appointed to furnish the program for the evening.

The officers, teachers and Sunday school board met on Monday evening and decided to give a Christmas entertainment, on Christmas eve. in the audience room of the church. A short literary program will be furnished, after which the school will receive confectionary, pop corn, nuts and oranges.

Bernard Tyrrell, the colored orator of Virginia, gave a lecture on the Race Problem, at the church Monday evening. Owing to the short notice of his coming the attendance was small. The lecture was interesting as facts and incidents of the growth of the colored people of the South were presented.

Mrs. Geo. Howell and Miss Remington visited Mrs. T. H. Temple Thursday of last week.

Geo. Lawton of Tonawanda, N. Y., spent last week with relatives in the village and vicinity.

Mrs. Fairbanks, of Adrian, Sundayed as the guest of Jas. Pocklington and family.

Mrs. J. R. Miller arrived Saturday for a visit with her parents, G. W. Clark and wife.

Mrs. H. S. Russell of Hudson, has been spending several days in the village among the dress makers, giving instructions in the Madam Kellogg system.

E. W. Rappleye and W. P. Cadmus left for Augusta, Tuesday, for a hunt and to visit agent Geo. Arner.

Mrs. E. W. Rappleye went to Dundee Wednesday, for a visit with her mother, Mrs. Stowell.

Last Friday afternoon will long be remembered by those who were present at the raising of the pole at the school building. The day was one like Spring, and the gathering of the patrons of the district and vicinity, was encouraging. At 2:30 P. M., a beautifull 10x12 flag of 13 stripes and 42 stars was flung to the breeze from the top of the pole, 60 feet Heavenward. The flag was furnished by the students at a cost of $10.50. After flinging to the breeze the stars and stripes, those assembled gathered in the east room of the school building and the following program was carried out:

Song by the ladies of the advanced room, with Miss Gilmore at the Organ.

Recitation—Minnie Barrett.

History of the Nation's Flag, by four boys.

Seven little girls of the Primary room furnished a recitation.

Devotion to the Flag was given by five boys, in a very pleasing manner.

Song, Star Spangled Banner, by the ladies of the advanced room.

Declamation by Elmer Pocklington.

Recitation by May Culbertson.

" Jennie Lawton.

Song—Our Flag—by the ladies of the advanced room.

Declamation by Smith Pocklington,

Bertie and Fredie Temple and Glen Smith recited the Red, White and Blue in a very agreable manner.

Song of the Red, White and Blue was given by the young ladies.

A Catechism of the Nation's Past, was given by the Professer and the school.

Song, Rally Around the Flag, by the ladies of the advanced room.

Remarks were given by several of the visitors, and the exercises closed by singing Flag of Liberty, by the school.

RISING—In Macon, Dec. 3d. Frank Maynard, infant son of Frank L. C. and Martha E Rising. Aged 9 days. A flower of rare and exquisite loveliness, budded on earth to bloom in Heaven. "And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them." St. Mark 10-16.

TECUMSEH, THURSDAY, DEC. 12

The tax on raw wool must be abolished or the tax on woolen goods must be raised. Which shall it be?

Dom Pedro, Gen. Boulanger, Gen. Mahone and Gov. Foraker are all out of a job, and winter is coming on.

Is President Harrison stealing Grover Cleveland's thunder? His remarks on the surplus point very strongly in that direction.

How can you account for this mild weather at this season of the year? Because the weather prophets all predicted a very severe winter. Ask us a harder one.

"Free Trade means hard times," says an exchange. Then protection must mean easy times, and we must be enjoying an illustration of this fact now.

The President's annual message has not changed the great issue before the people. Shall we have free whiskey and free tobacco, or free blankets and free coal?

The tariff is a tax, and no sophistry can disprove it. The present tariff is outrageously excessive, and no logic can deny it. What is the present congress going to do about it?

A new plan has been suggested in Canada to regulate the saloon business. It is to license the buyer instead of the seller. We are afraid it would not be a practical success among the Wolverines.

Dom Pedro received two and one half millions for his throne and a free permit to leave the country. Like a sensible man he accepted the offer instead of declining and getting up a war. Verily the world "do move."

Rev. Dr. Hale once said to a young friend, "Never bear more than one kind of trouble at a time," and added: "Some people bear three kinds—all they have had, all they have now, and all they ever expect to have."

The Jackson Citizen, Congressman O'Donnell's paper, says that Gov.-elect Campbell, of Ohio, is one of the ablest young political leaders in the country, and predicts that he will be the Democratic standard bearer in '92. Congressman O'Donnell served two terms in congress with Campbell, and his estimate of the latter's abilities is based on an intimate personal acquaintance.

The scheme to establish a national university looks very nicely on paper, but the real object of the movement is to furnish another means of squandering the surplus. The country needs a national university about as much as it does a national circus. There are more high-class universities in the country now than can be properly supported.

The death of Jefferson Davis removes from earth the last prominent public character of the South during the rebellion. Few men of modern times have lived so long after such a crushing political defeat, but he has lived long enough to see that the downfall of his own dynasty has redounded to the glory and welfare of the government he sought to destroy.

As we pass by, with grief we see that the Hon. Julius Cæsar Burroughs has a very back seat in the congress over which he aspired to preside. But he has a voice like the sound of many waters, and Kalamazoo will not be kept silent. No back seat can keep Burroughs back. Disappointment can't chill him. Defeat can't McGintize him. There he is and there he will remain, and the Congressional Record is his phonograph.—N. Y. Sun.

A candidate for postmaster at Mantee, Mich., sent the following open letter to President Harrison: "Of course we are one of the many aspirants for the, to be, to wit: new postmastership. Quite a number are around loose in the city, and the woods are full of them. We can all show scars received in the service of the grand old party. We can not all be postmasters, but do come and let us down from the high and dangerous qui vive of expectancy. Let us down easy like, or as easy as you can, from the giddy height, unless you have us pointed for the postmastership. In that case, 'Let 'er go Gallagher.'"

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

No doubt the Administration organs will refer to it as "an able and statesmanlike document." But the truth about it is that, like his inaugural address, it is in the main neither good nor bad; it is simply commonplace.—Boston Globe.

Its treatment of financial and business questions is clear, firm and wisely conservative. That of the silver question will disappoint those disposed to attack the president on the ground of anticipated concessions toward free coinage. In his recommendations as to pensions, aid to education, civil service and protection to ballots the president has the courage of his convictions. His reference to the need of the negro is humane, dispassionate and statesmanlike.—Boston Journal.

As a whole the message is a fairly intelligent party document, whose weaknesses are largely due to the undetermined and changing attitude of the party on many essential details of policy, and which would have been stronger had the various interests of the party been less antagonistic.—Boston Post.

There is a good deal of the usual commonplace in the President's handling of the stock subjects. The most striking features of the Message show him to be peculiarly amenable to the influence of the party leaders. On the whole the message amounts to—well about six columns of nonpareil as it appears in type. There is nothing in it that would justify any one in imagining that a statesman had a hand in its preparation.—Hoboken News.

When the Republicans nominated Benjamin Ha[illegible] President in 1888 they sele[illegible] [illegible]rgely for the reason that i[illegible] [illegible]hole record of what he had sa[illegible] done in public life there was almost nothing which was offensive to any member of the party—nothing that was likely to drive away Republican votes. The message which he sent to Congress on Tuesday and to-day published in full in this paper is characteristic of the man who had such a safe record in 1888. It is the message of a timid, cautious, cunning politician, who follows his party and does not lead it, and who hopes to stay in the White House for eight years by pursuing the same non-assertive, non committal course which has served him so well in the past.—National Democrat.

The President in his Message to Congress, halts and hesitates. He does not take the country into his confidence in regard to matters of real moment. He skirts around the ragged edge of dangerous topics and hides himself in a wilderness of detail. The recital of the condition of our r[illegible]lations with other countries is accompanied with no definite recommendations of importance, and brings no disclosures that have not been anticipated in the record of current events. As an indication of any definite policy of public administration the Message lacks strength. It is only notable for timidity. The President is disposed to feel his way, rather than to make his way.—Philadelphia Record.

President Cleveland called for a reduction of taxation to the extent of the surplus, and set forth an explicit plan of reduction. President Harrison points out the evil effects of taxation, and recommends a method of tariff revision, and suggests a plan of tax reduction that would perpetuate and intensify burdens. It is the difference between "how to do it" and "how not to do it." President Cleveland sought to relieve the taxpayer. President Harrison wishes to maintain the monopolies whose contributions furnished the "fat" to elect him.—Philadelphia Times.

The President's message to Congress is admirable in form and comprehensive in scope, referring in dignified and well chosen phrases to all the topics of domestic and foreign concern that now occupy the public mind. In substance it is, for the most part, a paraphrase of the Chicago platform. Protective-tariff views are presented in uncompromising language, and a strengthening of the strong arm of the Federal Government with the object of controlling Southern elections, is urged with partisan zeal.—Baltimore Sun.

Mr. Harrison's first message, submitted to Congress to-day, is quite as interesting a document as any of those of his predecessor, although possibly lacking somewhat in the floridity of expression and epigrammatic surprises which characterized those of Mr. Cleveland. It is a conservative document and a sensible one, with more of statesmanship than politics in it, and is good, mild reading.—Washington Capital.

Mr. Blaine's Pan-Americanism leads and dominates the message in a way that shows how foolish it would have been to omit it from the principal presentation of the Executive programme. Indeed, if the President had followed the intention ascribed to him of requiring the Secretary of State to submit his views in a separate paper, General Harrison's own communication to Congress would have rated as a document barren of original ideas and destitute of force.—New York Star.

WHERE THE TARIFF PINCHES.

When the defeat of the Republican ticket in Iowa was first announced, the leaders there and all over the country were disposed to make light of it. All asserted that no matter what might be the differences of Iowa Republicans on prohibition or other questions, they were a unit on the subjects of high protection to American labor and an open treasury to the Grand Army. Despite such assertions, it seems that some of the leaders of the party in Iowa are beginning to realize that after all that State is not bound hand and foot to either protection or Traunerism.

Ex-Governor, and now Congressman, John Henry Gear, of the Burlington district passed through Chicago a few days since, and in a conversation with an old friend, he said: "Our defeat in Iowa was a crushing surprise, and after a calm and close analysis of the situation, I am satisfied that the Republican party must either cut loose from its high protection theories, and at once set about a radical reform of the present revenue system, or give up all hopes of a return of power. The people have become dissatisfied with the existing conditions, and a change for the better is imperative.

A prominent Republican ex-officeholder stated to your correspondent that the people in Iowa as well as elsewhere were becoming tired of the everlasting clamor for pensions, and that the position of the Administration on that question was injuring the party with close-thinking taxpayers. Like Congressman Gear, he also admitted that the question of revenue reform was becoming a troublesome one in Iowa as well as in other Western States, and that there is a feeling of bitter enmity between the different Iowa leaders. One wing is desirous of defeating Allison's re-election to the United States Senate, and will leave no stone unturned to accomplish their purpose. They will first oppose his nomination openly, and if beaten in caucus, will covertly work against him. Allison's extreme protection views are a serious objection with the conservative element in the party, and, unless the party lash is severely applied, and party prejudice and passions are vigorously appealed to, a number of the newly elected members of the Legislature will unite with the Democrats and elect a low-tariff Republican or even a conservative Democrat.

The result in Iowa is also causing the leaders in other strong Republican States to quake. Even Kansas politicians admit the possibility of the overthrow of Republicanism in that stronghold. The farmers there are growing tired of the everlasting twaddle about the advantages of a home market, while at the same time they are compelled to sell their oats for ten cents, and corn for fifteen cents a bushel, and other farm products in proportion. They are equally tired of supporting a so-called American industry by paying 25 to 100 per cent. more for clothing, farm tools, and other supplies than they would pay were the markets opened to a fair competition from manufacturers in those countries to whom they look for an outlet for the surplus products that the boasted home markets cannot take. Said a Kansas Republican the other day: "Then there is the negro, with which many of the Kansas towns and cities are virtually overrun. The Republican party cannot shirk the responsibility because we invited them there as a supposed stroke of political policy, and to insure his coming we offered him a bonus of forty acres and a mule. It was supposed that they would settle on the land and become good farmers. But they would not even stay on the land given them with an outfit, as they all want 'easy jobs,' and flock to the villages and cities in such numbers that they are a nuisance, socially, politically, and economically. Their presence is daily becoming more objectionable to the whites, and the problem what to do with them more perplexing."—N. Y. Evening Post.

CLEVELAND AND HARRISON.

The simple and plain duty which we owe the people is to reduce taxation to the necessary expenses of an economical administration of the government and to restore to the country the money which we hold in the treasury through the perversion of governmental powers. These things can and should be done with safety to our industries.—President Cleveland's Message, 1887.

The collection of moneys not needed for public uses imposes an unnecessary burden upon our people, and the presence of so large a surplus in the public vaults is a disturbing element in the conduct of private business.—President Harrison's Message, 1889.

Under our present laws more than four thousand articles are subject to duty. Many of these do not in any way compete with our own manufactures. A considerable reduction can be made in the aggregate by adding them to the free list.—President Cleveland's Message, 1887.

The free list can very safely be extended by placing thereon articles that do not offer injurious competition to such domestic products as our home labor can supply.—President Harrison's Message, 1889.

Deserving Confidence.

It is quite surprising to notice the numerous reports of remarkable cases of nervous diseases cured, such as headache, fits, nervous prostration, heart affections, St. Vitus Dance, insanity and prolonged sleeplessness, by Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. This new and improved brain and nerve food, and medicine, is everywhere gaining a remarkable reputation for curing the worst of these diseases, as well as the injurious effects of worry, nervous irritation, mental and physical over-work. Baker & Hall the druggists, will give away trial bottles of this wonderful remedy. It positively contains no opium or morphine.

Is a constitutional and not a local disease, and therefore it cannot be cured by local applications. It requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, working through the blood, eradicates the impurity which causes and promotes the disease, and effects a permanent cure. Thousands of people testify to the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for catarrh when other preparations had failed. Hood's Sarsaparilla also builds up the whole system, and makes you feel renewed in health and strength.

"I used Hood's Sarsaparilla for catarrh and received great relief and benefit from it. The catarrh was very disagreeable, especially in the winter, causing constant discharge from my nose, ringing noises in my ears, and pains in the back of my head. The effect to clear my head in the morning by hawking and spitting was painful. Hood's Sarsaparilla gave me relief immediately, while in time I was entirely cured. I think Hood's Sarsaparilla is worth its weight in gold." MRS. G. R. GRAY, 1029 Eighth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

FALL OF KING SOLOMON.

LESSON XI, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, DEC. 15.

Text of the Lesson, I Kings xi, 4-13. Commit Verses 9-11—Golden Text, I Cor. x, 12—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

4. "It came to pass when Solomon was old, that his wives turned away his heart after other gods." As to the things of this world, on which the hearts of people in all ages have been so firmly set, Solomon was filled with them. Riches and honor he enjoyed to the full and all the pleasures that wealth could purchase. (Eccl. ii, 10.) No vessels of silver were used in his house (it was plentiful as stones and was thought nothing of), all were of gold; he exceeded all the kings of the earth for riches and for wisdom, and all the earth sought the face of Solomon to hear his wisdom, which God had put in his heart. (Chap. x, 21-24.) But King Solomon loved many strange women of the nations, concerning which the Lord had forbidden Israel to have anything to do with them (see v. 2, and Deut. vii, 3, 4), and these turned away his heart, as God had said they would.

"His heart was not perfect with the Lord his God, as was the heart of David, his father." He had, at the dedication of the temple, urged the people to let their hearts be perfect with the Lord their God that all people of the earth might know that Jehovah is God and that there is none else (chap. viii, 60, 61); but now through these many wives of his his own heart is gone.

5. "Solomon went after Ashtoreth, * * * and after Milcom." These were idols of the Zidonians and Ammonites, whose worship was accompanied with abominable rites; but as Solomon had taken wives from these nations, and they had probably gone with him to the temple to see the worship of his God, they now persuade him to set up also their idols which they had been accustomed to worship; and as he had sinned in taking these wives, he now sins yet more to gratify them. The same thing is seen today when a Christian is married to one not a Christian.

6. "And Solomon did evil in the sight of the Lord." He did evil in the sight of men, he did evil against himself, but the greatness of his sin was the fact that it was against God. He was the Lord's representative, and he, of all men, should have been faithful to Jehovah who had so blessed him above all men.

7, 8. "Then did Solomon build an high place for Chemosh, * * * and likewise did he for all his strange wives." Thus adding sin to sin, the more evil associates we have, the more sin we are likely to commit; and if we put ourselves under the least obligation to an ungodly person we cannot well deny them a favor when they ask it, even though we know it is wrong to grant it.

9. "The Lord was angry with Solomon." So we read that Jehovah was angry with Moses and Aaron and Israel (Deut. iv, 21; ix, 8, 20; II Ki. xvii, 18); and that while He is slow to anger and great in mercy, yet there is a day coming when it will be ill for those who are not hid in the Rock of Ages. (Nahum i, 3; Zep. ii, 2, 3).

"His heart was turned from the Lord God of Israel, which had appeared unto him twice." The Lord had appeared to Him at Gibeon, when He said "Ask what I shall give thee," and again in answer to his prayer at the dedication of the temple (chaps. iii, 5; ix, 2), and these high favors, in addition to all the other blessings, should have kept Solomon faithful to his God; but alas for the desperate wickedness of the human heart, and how marvelous the long suffering and patience of Jehovah! Contrast the conduct of those who turned from idols to serve the Living and True God and to wait for His Son from Heaven (I Thess. i, 9, 10).

10. "He kept not that which the Lord commanded." It was a case of direct and willful disobedience. He was forbidden to multiply horses or wives or silver and gold, and yet these were the very things he did; he was commanded to keep by him a copy of the law and read therein all the days of his life, but this he evidently did not do, and consequently, not being well anchored, he drifted on the rocks. (Deut. xvii, 14-20.) What a contrast to his father, who said: "O, how love I Thy law; it is my meditation all the day" (Ps. cxix, 97); and, "By the word of Thy lips I have kept me from the paths of the destroyer." (Ps. xvii, 4.) The estimate which God puts upon obedience is seen in I Sam. xv, 22; Isa. i, 19; Jer. vii, 22, 23, and in the words of Jesus, "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." (John xiv, 21.) There is no use in talking of our love to God unless we delight to keep His commandments, and do so because He has saved us by His grace apart from any merit or works of ours.

"I will surely rend the kingdom from thee and give it to thy servant." The record of this will be found more at length in our next lesson; but notice here how disobedience robs us of our blessings. Listening to the tempter and becoming persuaded by him that to eat of the tree of knowledge would prove an advantage, Adam and Eve, in disobedience to God, sought a present gratification and thus brought sin and misery upon the whole human race. Esau, for the present gratification of a mess of pottage, despised his birthright and all its high privileges. Acham, for the present gratification of some gold and goodly raiment, brought upon himself and his household a fearful judgment. Here we have Solomon gratifying himself to the full, regardless of consequences or of the command of God, and thus he loses the kingdom. Abraham and Moses, on the other hand, and the list of worthies of Heb. xi got their eyes and hearts fixed upon the realities of an eternal city and kingdom, and thus were enabled to walk with God in obedience here, setting a right value upon present things and treating them accordingly.

12. "Notwithstanding, in thy days I will not do it, for David thy father's sake." While godliness is not hereditary, yet who can estimate the benefit of godly parents, or the blessings which come to us through those who love the Lord Jesus. Let the children consider this and contrast the condition of many whose parents know not God with the condition of the children of pious parents.

"I will rend it out of the hand of thy son." Here is the contrast: Solomon derives benefit from his father's piety, while Solomon's son is to suffer because of his father's impiety; so that evil doing reaches to others besides the evil doer. No man liveth unto himself; if we obey God we bring blessing to ourselves and others, while if we disobey God we bring cursing to ourselves and others. Let us ponder it.

13. "For David My servant's sake, and for Jerusalem's sake, which I have chosen." The blessing that will yet come to Jerusalem, because God has chosen it, shall be seen in millennial days, but leaving that, notice that David was not only Solomon's father; he was the servant of Jehovah; one of the highest titles that can be given to mortal man, inasmuch as it is one of the titles of the Lord Jesus Himself, who shall yet be the salvation of God unto the ends of the earth (Isa. xlii, 1; xlix, 6), and for whose sake any one may now be saved who comes to God in His Name.

Merit Wins.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refun the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. For sale by FATALITIES IN CHINA.

Many Lives Lost and Much Property Destroyed by Disasters of Various Kinds.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 2.—Late advices say that the most violent typhoon known in China in many years swept over the island of Sado October 21. It raged from 10 o'clock in the morning till 3 in the afternoon, when it subsided temporarily. At 11 o'clock the same night it burst forth with greater fury. Fifty houses and as many boats were destroyed.

Fire broke out October 26 at Kauldamachi in Nugata prefecture and burned all night, destroying three-fourths of the village. One hundred and eighty-three houses were destroyed and three children burned to death.

News was received at Yokohoma that on the 4th of November the misemono at Sennichimae collapsed and a number of lives were lost. One authority places the number killed at twenty and the injured at nineteen. Another authority says twenty-nine were killed and thirty-five injured.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchtis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this receipt in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. Noyes, 149 Powers block, Rochester, N. Y.

THE BLOOD IS LIFE!

J. M. LOOSE RED CLOVER CO., Detroit:

I cheerfully furnish the following for publication.

Mrs. S, age 36, cancerous face [cell cancer,] has tried many physicians, and on presentation to me was a horrible sight to look upon, nose partly eaten away, deep pits in cheeks, forehead and chin. As a last hope I put her on Loose's Extract of Red Clover—large doses enternally, and as a local application, I used the solid extract in plaster form. SHE IMPROVED RAPIDLY FROM THE FIRST WEEK, and in four months was entirely well. Now eighteen months since first treatment and no signs of return.

JOHN J. WEAVER.

Ulceration of the leg (Indolent Ulcer.) Recovered entirely after three months' treatment with Red Clover Extract and Solid Extract Dressing. Now one year since treatment, and no sign of return.

Cancer of Lip and Skin Disease. Entirely cured with three months' treatment with Red Clover Extract and Solid Extract Dressing. H. B. Secondary Syphilis was entirely cured by Red Clover Extract in three months, with none of the after results such as are left by MERCURY in such cases.

If you have any doubting physicians, they can write to me and I will give them a full history of each case. Dr. W. H. YARNALL. Write for testimonials.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points. For instance the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railroad has over 3000 miles of road, magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnepeg, Crookston, Moorhead, Casselton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China, Japan, and the journey to the Pacific Coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a lifetime once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years,

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates it cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

THE WESTERN GOTHAM.

CHICAGO, Ill., Dec. 9th, 1889.

DEAR HERALD—The Chicago fashionable world is in a flutter of excitement over the opening of the new Auditorium tonight and many a heart is longing for the shades of night to fall, and for the time to draw near when the divine Patti will thrill all hearers with her wonderful voice. The opening engagement for eighteen performances will be the greatest, financially, of any ever given in Chicago, as is already proven by the advance sales. Prices for seats range from $1.00 upwards, and many a man will have to wear his last year's discarded overcoat and ragged underclothes that the madame and the girls can take in the opera in gorgeous attire. The ticket scalpers seem to have gotten ahead of the management, as tickets are freely advertised in the papers.

President Harrison is to arrive in the city at 9 o'clock this morning and will be accorded a reception that should flatter him. His excellency comes to attend the Auditorium opening, and will undoubtedly add to the "eclat" of the occasion. Vice President Morton also is to attend, but it is not known that he will bring his now famous (or infamous) license.

The Cronin trial is the great attraction with all classes, and the speeches of the attorneys on both sides are eagerly read. As the time for the conclusion of the trial draws near the interest increases and many are the guesses as to the result. Are the tools of this infamous conspiracy by organized agitators and murderers to be punished as they deserve, or is a packed jury to say that they are innocent? I have heard a great deal of comment in regard to this case and I have come to the conclusion that four-fifths of the population believe them guilty and think that they should be punished. One thing is certain, all true Americans think that all such orders as the Clan-ne Gael should be suppressed, and fire-eating patriots from foreign nations be kept from nursing murderous plots in this so-called land of the free. There is a limit to freedom.

The new drainage bill lately passed by the Illinois legislature makes it necessary to hold an election soon, and both the Democratic and Republican machines have fixed matters up to suit themselves, but a citizens' ticket has come into the field, and I imagine that it will disarrange some of the Dem Rep schemes. It is about time that the corrupt and chronic spoilsmen in both the old parties should be set back a peg or two. The fate of Frank Collier, the promising young lawyer who was slugged by the hirelings of Geo. H. Williams, the Republican candidate for assessor of the West side, last spring, had the effect of defeating the Republican mayoralty ticket, and now that the court has adjudged Collier hopelessly insane from the effect of the blows he received from the political plug-uglies, people think still less of machine politics.

The reception given boodler McGarigle on his return from a safe harbor in the Queen's dominions proves the necessity of radical reform in the American judiciary. Our judges should be put in such a position that an honest decision would not jeopardize their tenure of office. Judge Prendergast is one of the candidates on the drainage ticket, (citizens') and having antagonized the Clan-ne-Gael by some of his decisions, that delectable society is after his scalp. That one thing will make all decent citizens turn to elect him. Of course our foreign police force will show which way they throw favors and aid the machines as much as possible. It is about time that something was done to make our governmental forces solely American. Only native born Americans should be allowed to hold official positions.

The late Roman Catholic convention in Baltimore has shown our thinkers that there is another danger threatening our liberties. The public school system of America is the bulwark of American liberty and should be protected from all insidious foes like the Roman Catholic Church. The time is coming when a strong fight will have to be made to protect the free school system, and when it does come it will be a fight to the death. It will be a struggle between religious bigotry and a patriotic but crippled people.

Speaking of the school system makes me think of a new feature added to the Chicago schools that country schools might copy with profit. A class in sewing, for both girls and boys, especially boys, is the addition I mention. The classes meet on Saturday afternoons, from two o'clock until four o'clock. They commence with piecing blocks for a quilt, and when they can make a block that passes muster they are put to patching and mending. When proficient in that branch of the art they are set to making original work. Garments made by the boys as well as the girls are shown to interested parties. This is a step in the right direction, for nothing so fits a man for married life as to be able to do his own mending and, sometimes, making.

I shall have to defer my notes on the places of amusement in this city until my next letter, but I guess it will keep. Yours devotedly,

OLD HILARITY.

FRANKLIN UNION LITERARY AND LYCEUM.

This society met at the residence of Mr. G. W. Allen, Dec. 6th. The weather was all that could be desired to make every one good natured and ready to do their part. The house was well filled. The following is the program that was rendered:

Music—S. Simmons and Mrs. Witherell.
Rec.—Stella Wisner.
Dec.—Will Spaulding.
Dia.—Clarence and Lena Witherell.

Chip Basket—Grace Wisner.
Inst. Music—Ruth Taylor.
Rec.—Mable Bunting.
Dia.—Hoyt Whelan and Nina Allen.
Music—S. Simmons, Mr. and Mrs. Witherell.

The miscellaneous business of the meeting took up so much time, the debate was postponed until the next meeting which will be heldat Mr. E. J. Whelan's, Dec, 20th. A good program will be prepared.

FARMERS' SOCIAL CLUB.

The Farmers Social Club met at Mr. Geo Griswold's, Nov. 30th, with quite a good attendance. Meeting called to order by the President. Minutes of the previous meeting read and approved. The program was only partially carried out as several who had been assigned parts were absent. Those present responded very creditably to themselves and was much enjoyed by those who listened. Many of the good things said by Carlton were quoted by different members. "Over the hills to the poor house," was given by Grace Gillespie, in costume. The recitation by Edna Hendershot, though long, was well rendered. Taken together it was an evening pleasantly and profitably spent.

After some discussion looking toward an organization of Patrons of Industry, the club adjourned to meet Friday evening, Dec. 27th, at F. C. Rector's, with the following program.

Inst. Music—Eva Rector.
Address by the President.
Paper—Mrs. John Fisher—Dickens.

Song—Maud Abbott.
Rec—Luella Taylor.
Charade—Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Remington.
Inst. Music—Seth Simmons.
Question—Is it advisable for farmers to become Patrons of Industry? Discussion opened by L Taylor, Clement Bramble, J. F. N. Bowen, W. B. Keyser and others.

Please notice change made in date of meeting to Dec. 20.

TO OUR READERS.

This is the time of year when our readers are wondering which is the best periodical in the United States for them to subscribe for during the coming year. We unhesitatingly recommend them to THE INDEPENDENT. It is by far the largest, the most instructive, and the most interesting weekly newspaper published in this country, if not in the world. It has regularly 32 folio pages, but it increases this number frequently to 36 and 40, and sometimes even to 48 pages. These are filled with the best articles, stories and poems that this country and Europe can furnish. Every conceivable topic of religious, political, social and literary interest, is fully and freely discussed. It has a score of departments, embracing nearly all branches of human interest. The Independent is above all things a family newspaper, and as such we recommend it to you. We would at least advise that you send thirty cents in postage stamps for a month's trial of the paper. That will fully persuade you to subscribe. The yearly subscription price is $3,00, or two years for $5.00. Address, The Independent, 251 Broadway, New York City.

Card of Thanks.

We wish to express our most sincere thanks to the kind friends who assisted us during the illness of our deceased mother. Greatly appreciating your kindness, we hope you may be justly rewarded.

NOTES FROM THE NORMAL.

Thanksgiving recess passed off quietly for the majority of the Normal students. Only a few, who live not far distant, went home. The rest put in the time in study.

The Normal Student's Prohibition Club is a strong, active organization that did not drop out of existence, like many other clubs of the same kind, when election was over, but they are determined to help push this question so vital to the American republic, to the point where ere long it must come, that of final settlement for God and right. At a meeting held last week, they appointed one of their number to participate in the "Inter-Collegiate Oratorical Contest," that is to come off some time in the coming year. H. T. Blodgett of the class of '90 will represent them.

The commons lying south of the Normal and comprising about two acres, is being graded with the intention of making it into a Normal Campus. This is hailed with delight by the students who have long felt the want of it.

The first step towards a Normal gymnasium has been taken, and thro' the efforts of Prof. W. P. Bowen, one the largest rooms in the Normal has been given for that purpose. Club-swinging is the principle exercise as yet, and in this the girls are taking an active part.

ONSTED ODDS.

Herman Onsted has returned from Battle Creek and vicinity.

Howard's saw mill is now at work converting logs into lumber.

Frank Taylor and Harry Myers from Climax, Calhoun Co., have been visiting friends in this vicinity.

Once more the form of Frank Stearns is seen going along the street with his dog.

Another quantity of porkers was shipped from here on Monday last.

Ten thousand barrels of apples were shipped from here this fall, besides a large quantity in bulk for drying and for cider.

Mrs. Emma Walker and children from Fremont, Newaygo county, this state, are at present renewing old acquaintances in this locality.

On Friday evening of last week the Grangers indulged in a 5 cent social at their hall, and a good time was the result.

The Christian Endeavor society of this place held a social at the church parlors, with a ten cent supper thrown in, on Wednesday evening of last week and they endeavored to catch a quantity of the lose dimes, and we guess they did.

The township treasurer will be at Brook's hardware store at Onsted, on Friday of each week during this month, for the purpose of receiving tax money.

The nimrods of this vicinity are tramping o'er hill and dale in quest of game, and we sawone party which was accompanied by our Doctor, for the purpose of patching up the hides of the hunters in case of accident, we suppose.

Married a while ago, Mr. R. L. Glenn and Miss Pappy Neuralgia, but R. L. is trying to get a divorce and we hope he may.

Mrs. J. E. Gibbs has gone to Grand Rapids on a visiting trip.

Our school numbers 50 scholars this term, which makes the teacher hustle some.

FRANKLIN FACTS.

Bert Kempton, from North Adams, is visiting a Jehiel Kemp's.

A new boy baby makes music at Henry Jeffrey's.

Frank Erskine has bought a corner lot of George Camburn, at Tipton, and will erect thereon a two story brick building, twenty-eight by seventy feet. The lower story will be used as a store, and the upper one will furnish what Tipton greatly needs, a commodious hall. The work is to be pushed as rapidly as the weather will permit. Such a building will be a great convenience to our little "burg" and people are highly pleased over the prospect. Mr. Erskine shows commendable public spirit, and we trust that he may find his venture profitable.

Alonzo Marshall and wife were greatly shocked on visiting Clinton, Monday, to find Mrs. M's mother (Mrs. Andrew McDermott) alone in her house with a broken arm. Fortunately, the accident had just occurred, and no doubt they were even more welcome than usual.

As far as heard from the schools of Franklin are presided over by the following teachers: Mrs. Emory Wilson in Dist. No. 1, Frank Lamkin in No. 2, Philo Mills in No. 3, Willis Smith in No. 6, and Vern Roberts in the Paragon, or No. 7. Will Spaulding is in the Smalley district, Franklin and Manchester, and Ella Welch in the old brick, Tecumseh and Franklin.

THE HERALD FOR 1890.

On the 25th day of May last the HERALD entered upon the fortieth year of its publication. The 15th day of November last completed fifteen years under its present management, and we can truthfully say that the paper never had more friends or truer ones in Northern Lenawee than it has today. It never had a larger subscription list than now, and its prospects for a long career of future usefulness and influence were never more promising. But, like Cæsar, we are ambitious. We aim for a larger list and a wider field to swing in, and our terms for 1890 have been adjusted with that purpose in view. The offers we now present are more attractive and substantial than usual and the variety is such that every man who takes any kind of a newspaper can be accommodated. Read them carefully and note the advantages offered and then pass in your subscription before the opening of the new year.

OFFER NO. ONE.

We have made arrangements with that wide awake illustrated farm magzine, the American Farmer, published at Fort Wayne, Ind., and read by nearly 200,000 farmers, by which that great publication will be mailed direct to the address of any of our subscribers who will come in and pay up all arrearages on subscription and one year in advance from date, and to any new subscriber who will pay one year in advance. The regular subscription price of the American Farmer is $1.00 per year. It costs you nothing. The two papers at our full rate of $1.50 per year.

OFFER NO. TWO.

The modern magazine may be taken as embodying the best literature of the world, as the magazine editor pays the highest prices to novelists, scientists, statesmen, soldiers and even kings and princes for the best they can furnish in the literary line. The well edited magazine becomes an educating influence in the family circle whose importance cannot be overestimated. The special arrangements which we have made with the Cosmopolitan presents very unusual inducements. That magazine, though only in the tenth month under its new management, is already recognized as one of the most interesting publications of the day. You can obtain a magazine which gives you in a year nearly fourteen hundred pages of reading matter by the ablest writers of the world, including six hundred pages of illustrations that are unsurpassed in point of interest and execution at its regular price, only $2.50, and the HERALD free.

OFFER NO. THREE.

Ropp's Commercial Calculator is a practical arithmetic for practical purposes. It contains a large variety of useful, accurate and convenient tables, together with simple, short and practical methods for rapid calculations. It is a veritable vade mecum for the farmer, accountant, or merchant. It surpasses all books of a like character that have ever fallen under our notice. It is bound in limp leather, is of a size convenient to carry in a large pocket, and is sold for $1.00. Any subscriber paying up arrearages and one year in advance, or any new subscriber paying one year in advance at full rates, $1.50 per year, will receive a copy of this book free.

OFFER NO. FOUR.

The tendency of the times is to lower prices, except in those cases in which competition is killed by trusts. The HERALD is not a believer in trusts, but holds to the good old fashioned doctrine that competition is the life of trade. Hence we offer a liberal reduction in rates for the coming year. We have adopted both a cash and a credit rate. You can pay your money and take your choice. We will furnish the HERALD alone

WITHIN LENAWEE COUNTY

One year, cash in advance, for	$1.10
If paid after thirty days,	1.25
If paid after three months,	1.50

BEYOND LENAWEE COUNTY

One year, cash in advance,	$1.25
If paid after thirty days,	1.50

OFFER NO. FIVE.

We present herewith a large club list, which will enable our patrons to buy other newspapers and magazines at greatly reduced rates. This list comprises both weeklies and monthlies, political and literary, republican, democrat and prohibition. The man who cannot find something to please him in this list must be a difficult man to satisfy. These club rates mean cash in advance for both papers. We can take subscriptions for any paper published at reduced prices, but can give extra favorable terms upon all named in this list. Sample copies of these can be seen at the HERALD office. The full club list appears elsewhere.

One Fact.

Is worth a column of rhetoric, said an American statesman. It is a fact, established by the testimony of thousands of people, that Hood's Sarsaparilla does cure scrofula, salt rheum, and other diseases or affections arising from impure state or low condition of the blood. It also overcomes that tired feeling, creates a good appetite, and gives strength to every part of the system. Try it.

OUR HOLIDAY GREETING.

Too much of a good thing is an impossibility. We have no fears therefore of incurring anyone's displeasure by continuing this week our business list, which was only fairly begun in last weeks supplement, and which was broken off somewhat abrubtly through lack of time and space to complete it.

R. C. Van Antwerp—people know him better as "Van"—has recently repainted and papered his restaurant and now brags that he has little the coslest quarters in town in the eating room line.

A. E. Kennedy still holds forth in the postoffice building, where he has been a fixture so long. Postmasters may come and go, but "Chuck" stays right there just the same. We doubt whether any establishment in Tecumseh is making more money with the same amount of capital.

The Tecumseh Coal & Mfg. Co. was organized on the 2d of January, 1889, and has been building up a good safe business under the present management. This establishment has big possibilities before it, for it controls a fine plant for the lumber business, and we look to see it grow into an extensive trade during the next 5 years.

Brown's Business University is not located in Tecumseh, that is true, but the proprietor has found his way into some excellent business company in our holiday extra. He is building up a good commercial school, and deserves a liberal patronage.

F. R. Stebbins is another Adrian man who frequently patronizes the HERALD. He believes in the utility of printer's ink and selects his advertising mediums with tact and judgment. Mr. Stebbins is one of the pioneers of this county, and we look upon him as almost a Tecumseh man.

Temple, McClure & Co. are selling lumber and building materials of all kinds more extensively than ever this year. They have gathered a heavy trade all through this section which seems to be increasing year by year. There is no better firm in the entire county of Lenawee in that line of business.

The old Star Bakery of Arnold Bros. is still on deck, and furnishes everything in the line of bread, cakes, etc. of the very best quality. They now keep a first-class brand of Baltimore Oysters, received fresh daily, and fresh made taffy is kept on hand for all who like to be fed that way.

I. B. Richart does'nt sell taffy, nor coal stoves, nor clothing, but his establishment is just as useful as any of them, if not quite so ornamental. His long experience in his calling makes him a first class mechanic, and he seldom has an idle day.

Trinkets and toys, toys and trinkets till you can't rest. Montague's Novelty store is always an object of special attraction during holiday season. Although comparatively a new man at the business, he settles down to the work like a veteran, and seems to be enjoying a healthy and growing trade.

Every man, woman, and child in northern Lenawee, who raises poultry to sell, knows who C. E. Williamson is. Since he took possession of his present establishment, he has built up an immense trade. His mammoth refrigerator building has proved to be a profitable investment.

W. W. Marsh has worked in a meat market since his teens, and knows every wrinkle about the business, from top to bottom. He runs a very neat clean establishment, and is regarded as one of the old stand-bys among our business men.

J. S. Kinney, since he moved to his present location, has had plenty of room to swing in and he has taken advantage of it too. His stock of furniture is very large and complete. He has lately taken the agency for the Lee patent folding table in this vicinity, and is making large sales of his patent spring bed.

Walter Heck drives a double team now, as it were. He has purchased Brown's gallery, and also retains his old rooms for finishing. Mr. Heck is becoming an expert with the camera, and his pictures have gained a reputation for superiority through all this section of the county.

James S. Gilman claims to be the oldest practical harness maker in the county. He is still to be found at the bench in his shop on R. R. street, and he can make just as good a harness as he could 40 years ago.

Dr. F. A Kotts, although a resident of Manchester, is becoming pretty well fixed here. He practices dentistry at the Lilley House on Wednesday of each week, and has established a good trade.

Henry Jones has run the U. S. Express here from the time when the "memory of man runneth not to the contrary." He has just moved his office and lunch rooms into the James block on the corner opposite the Lilley House. It gives him a much more central location than before, besides affording much better quarters for his restaurant.

Satterthwaite Bros. & Boyd is accounted one of the "solid firms" of Tecumseh. The Satterthwaite boys have grown up with the business, as it were, and are thoroughly posted in the hardware line. With the addition of James A. Boyd, they make a strong three-horse team. The firm enjoys an immense trade which extends into all the region round about.

Baker & Hall is another firm of long standing and first-class reputation. Mr. Baker began the drug business with the late Dr. Wm. C. Fisher as much as 25 years ago, and he is apparently good for 25 years more service. Though divided in politics they are united in business, and can sell drugs and groceries with the best of them.

Geo. W. Jackson is comparatively a new comer, but no citizen of our village is more highly respected. He has been a practical wagon maker for 29 years and is a first-class mechanic in every respect. He has added saw filing to other branches of his trade.

Dr. B. F. Snyder has the neatest dental rooms in three counties, and the quality of his workmanship is on a par with his office. The Doctor is becoming a convert to Henry George's theory of taxation, but he keeps right on pulling teeth just the same.

Geo. W. Marsden's restaurant is one of the land marks of this town. His lunch room is liberally patronized, and his supply of confectionery is second to none. George has been in several lines of trade and seems to be equally at home in them all.

D. W. Clark has sold groceries in this town over 15 years, and he stays right in the same old quarters. No man is better posted in the grocery trade than Mr. Clark, and he is recognized as one of the leading business men.

Cutters and sleighs. Whenever Santa Claus needs a new rig he cannot find a better place than John Hialey's to buy an outfit. Mr. Hialey has sold an immense number of buggies through this section, and this winter he is putting up some elegant upholstered single and double cutters. Buy your cutter now and get ready for sleighing.

Among the recent additions to our business houses none takes a higher rank than John J. Orr's drug store. Mr. Orr had an excellent schooling as a pharmacist, and is an expert in that line. He has an elegant store well stocked with everything in the drug line, and is a "hustler" from the word go.

Will Hayden does'nt sell dry goods nor millinery, but he makes "the wheel go round." He is agent for the Columbia bicycles, and has sold a good many wheels in this section of he state. Will is an enthusiastic wheelman, but he believes in combining business with pleasure and hence he spends his leisure time in educating the rising generation in the use of the bicycle.

A man does'nt need a telescope to see that Will Anderson always takes a front slip in the grocery synagogue. The grocery business runs in the family with Will, and he is happy as a clam when dealing out groceries and crockery. His stock is always kept full and well supplied with seasonable novelties.

But when it comes to the boot and shoe trade, Henry Nyland "nox 'em all." Mr. Nyland hasn't sold boots and shoes in this village for twenty five years for nothing. He knows all about foot wear, from a baby's silk slipper to a double decker, flint-lock stoga boot, and the longer he stays in trade the more he sells.

The Central Meat Market holds 'em all level. Mr. Updyke is comparatively a new man in trade here, but he has already planted his business on a stable foundation. He has a good location, able assistants and he has established a most excellent reputation himself for prompt and honorable dealing.

Hannibal Osborn is in the turkey business again this fall up to his ears. He wants ten thousand turkeys between now and Christmas and wants only the fattest fowls that can be brought to market. He has excellent quarters now at Kinney's furniture store and can dress all the turkeys that are raised in Southern Michigan.

PHOTOGRAPHING A BULLET.

A Delicate Experiment in Which Electricity Comes Into Play.

Photographs of the interior of the gun are taken by means of electric light, and the information obtained by these means is most valuable, and is manifestly more satisfactory than that given by the method of taking impressions of the bore in soft rubber. Photography has also been made use of in studying the motion of the projectile. In the case of large guns instantaneous views of the shot during it flight have been successfully taken by means of a camera provided with a quick-acting shutter. This method is not applicable, however, to small arms. A rifle bullet is a very small object, and the camera must be set very near its path in order to obtain a picture of sufficient size to be of use; but the nearer the instrument is placed to the moving object to be photographed the more rapid is the motion of the image over the plate, and no instantaneous or quick acting shutter could possibly be made to operate with sufficient rapidity, or at the proper instant to give a sharply defined picture.

The desired end is accomplished, however, by the aid of electricity. The camera is provided with an extremely sensitive plate, and placed in a dark room, through which the bullet is made to pass. The instant the bullet is in front of the camera it breaks an electric circuit, producing a spark which illuminates the bullet for an instant, and its image is impressed upon the sensative plate. The duration of the electric spark is almost infinitessimal, and since the plate is affected only during the continuance of the spark, a well defined photograph of an object moving at a greater volocity than that of sound is obtained. Such pictures show the condensation of the air in front of the bullet, the vacuum behind it, and the eddies and currents produced in the surrounding atmosphere by its motion, and they afford information which is of value in determining the best shape to be given to the projectile in order to reduce to a medium the resistance the air opp ses to its flight, and so increase its range and effect.

Food, Beauty and Morality.

Professor F. T. Miles, of the faculty of the university of Maryland, recently delivered a lecture to a large audience of young men on "Food and Digestion." In the course of his lecture Professor Miles, in speaking of the effect of an insufficient quantity of food, said: "The fat disappears first, then the muscles waste away, and finally the bones come through the skin. The brain, the spinal cord, and the nerves are nourished to the last. Like a king in a beleaguered city to whom his loyal subjects give up their food, the nobler organs are longer nourished. In starvation there is not simple hunger of the stomach, but hunger of the whole body. It is not strange that when hunger presses on people they will do strange things. It produces insanity and they have been driven to eating what is called 'strange flesh;' that is, to cannibalism. There are millions of people who have not enough to eat. It is at the bottom of anarchy. The police may give them a loaf of bread, but the whole body is ill-nourished, and a restless feeling results. Not much can be done with the grown-up people of the criminal classes, but the child criminal comes first. The criminal classes are called dirty, lazy, and ugly. Of course they are. They are dirty because they have no spare heat to let go; lazy, because the muscles are weak and nature tells them to keep still when hungry. You would be astonished to know how much of the beauty of the fairest woman is made up of fat. The criminal classes are ugly because they have no fat. How could a child whose muscles and nervous system have been partly starved be expected to have all the sympathies and instincts of a higher class of society? An everyday Sabbath school with a breakfast before the lesson would be a capital thing for poor c ildren. Some say the poor themselves are to blame for their condition by living too luxuriously. One of the most intense cravings of the Greeley Arctic party was for sweetmeats. Tea and coffee do more good than harm. They stimulate not only the brain, but the activities of the whole body. There will be a great mission to the poor some day to see that they get enough of good food."

Possible Uses for the Phonograph.

In all that has been written about the uses to which the forthcoming Edison practical phonograph (and the Eastern press are now giving the subject much attention) nothing has been said of the facilities it will give people who can neither read nor write for correspondence. Indeed, there is no doubt but there will be an immense demand on the wonderful powers of the instrument, from this class. The instruments into which books have been read will also repeat them to the blind and those thus afflicted can have the choicest libraries of the world at their service day or night.

The invalid, too, whose friends are away, or busy, or asleep, can have his faithful reader always at command. But these things are not pertinent to this "Railway World." The thought that suggested the paragraph is this: What a valuable thing a phonograph would be on a rapidly moving train during a long journey. It is hard on the eyes of many to read in traveling, or at night the light is insufficient, or the car is darkened for sleeping. The restless passenger may have his faithful phonograph in his berth, and with the earphone adjusted can listen to its sweet voice at will without disturbing anybody. Then, too, all know the difficulty of writing on a train. This will now be overcome. Not only for business correspondence may it be used, but an author's best thoughts often come to him amid the waits or among the inspiring scenes of a long journey. These may be faithfully recorded.—[Commercial Gazette.

Miss Frances Willard, the temperance orator, sometimes stops in front of a Bowery saloon and entreats a would-be customer not to go in. Her persuasive tongue and handsome face seldom meet with failure on such an occasion.

Kate Greenaway.

Had you been a visitor, nearly twenty years ago, in that quiet little household of the Greenaway, close by the church in Upper street, Islington, you would have seen that one of the features of the evening was to look over "Kitty's" drawings; for in those days Miss Greenaway had not arrived at the age for the prefix Miss. Those trifles were mostly in pencil, but there were a few sketches in pen-and-ink and others in water color. The characteristic of those early studies was care. But beside the careful touch lay a fancy for fairies and elves, for flowers and tame pets, that a child alone possesses. Her father was a wood engraver of no mean merit, and to this day Mr. Greenaway's work may be seen from time to time in "The Illustrated London News." Mr. Greenaway took a great and constant interest in the art proclivities of his daughter, daily instructing her how to observe, and what to observe, and in fact "coaching" his child in the first elements of art. Under such conditions the age of childhood passed, and the earlier years of maidenhood set in. After much consultation it was settled that Miss Greenaway must go to an art school—this was somewhere about the year 1870—and ultimately she was sent to Heatherly's, a training school for artists. Later Miss Greenaway studied at South Kensington. But it was from work conceived and carried out at Heatherly's, that she made her first popular hit. At the black and white exhibition at the Dudley gallery, in 1872-3, Miss Kate Greenaway exhibited a series of designs. On a private view day these were secured by the editor of "The People's Magazine," and shortly afterward they were engraved and given to the public through the pages of the serial. Thus at almost a youthful age Miss Greenaway appeared in print. But this particular editor was not the only person attracted by these early drawings of Miss Greenaway. Just at this time the card valentine fever had set in, and one of the pioneers in such matters, Mr. Marcus Ward, at once set Miss Greenaway to work, and she continued for years during her upward progress as a constant contributor season by season so Marcus Ward's Christmas and New Year's cards. In fact, the impression is that her first commission for book illustrations was also given to her by this firm. Some particular cuts may have been designed earlier by Messrs. Cassell, but it would appear that "Mildred's Mistake," published in 1876, was Miss Greenaway's first attempt at supplying the designs for a complete story.

In color Miss Greenaway is almost a purist. If you could see her paint box it is doubtful if you would find that it contained many colors outside the primaries and their attributes. Look at any one of her studies; red, blue, yellow and black would be colors enough to paint almost any one of them. This simplicity runs through all her work. Her composition is equally simple; it is, in fact, Anglo-Saxton art, at its best; pure, simple, matter-of-fact, subject matter, with refinement enough in it to lift it out of the common-place, pure sentiment enough to save it from hollow dilettantism, and yet so near to nature that although our little folks are not as they are depicted, yet they are prototypes of what we would have them be. In her studies Miss Greenaway uses almost pure colors, or, as the artists put it, she rarely mixes flakes or Chinese white with her paints. The outline is firmly drawn with the pen or pencil, the shadows are then struck in, mostly in gray, and over all wash after wash in color is put; of course there are numerous retouchings and heightenings, till the right tone required is obtained, but Miss Greenaway's method is simply one wash, as handled by the greater of the greatest painters in water colors.

Now for a word as to the way in which Miss Kate Greenaway has made every day's material do duty to her pencil, pen and brush, and for this we must go back to the child artist as the daily pupil. It was here, in school, that Kate Greenaway began to make studies of her little friends, noting here or there a quaint bonnet, a cloak, a cap, or a boy's smock. For it is quite from the lower middle classes that Miss Greenaway has drawn her inspirations. These almost daily memoranda, begun so young, were continued later on by Miss Greenaway. Rarely a week elapsed but she paid a visit to the school-house, either to compare past jottings, or to seek out new material. And in these matters Miss Greenaway showed a good deal of wisdom. She did not rest on material close at home. With sketch book in hand, she might be seen at most of our great charity festivals, notably those of the "charity children" held in St. Paul's Cathedral.

A Very Wonderful Flower.

A French paper, Les Mondes, gives a fascinating account of a newly discovered flower, of which rumors have from time to time reached the ears of floriculturists. It is called the snow flower, and is said to have been discovered by Count Anthoskoff in the most northern portion of Siberia, where the ground is continually covered with frost. This wonderful object shoots forth from the frozen soil only on the first day of each succeeding year. It shines for but a single day, and then resolves to its original elements. The leaves are three in number, and each about three inches diameter. They are are developed only on that side of the stem towards the north, and each seems covered with microscopic crystals of snow. The flower, when it opens, is star shaped, its petals of the same length as the leaves, and about half an inch in width. On the third day the extremities of the anthers, which are five in number, show minute glistening specks like diamonds about the size of a pin's head, which are the seeds of this wonderful flower. Anthoskoff collected some of these seeds and carried them with him to St. Petersburg. They were placed in a pot of snow, where they remained for some time. On the first of the following January the miraculous snow flower burst through its icy covering, and displayed its beauties to the wondering Russian royalty.

THE MAIDEN AND THE FISH.

"There are fish in the sea quite as good," said the maid,
As any that ever were caught,
And plentiful, too; and so greedy of bait,
That they reck not with what it is fraught."

So saying she dandled her rod as she sat
In the shade by the side of the brook,
And smilingly mused, as she drew forth her line
And crattily baited her hook.

And gazed at the fishes that thronged at her feet,
In the water there sporting in glee,
As if pleased to be drawn by a hand fair as hers
From their home in the far-away sea.

Thus time glided on, and the maid and the fish
Passed their days in a pleasant routine,
For the maid was amused by the fishes so fond,
And the fish deemed the maiden their queen.

Yet dallied the maiden with seeming delight,
And laughed—as she dangled the bait
Just a little too high for the fishes to reach—
At their many vain efforts to bite.

But after awhile with this trifling maid
The fish grew impatient and said:
"There may be other fish, but—there's other good bait,"
And away they all hurriedly sped.

Now pondered the maiden awhile with regret
O'er the change which she saw in her fate,
Then called to the vanishing fishes: "Come back,"
But the fish only answered: "Too late."

Then "Alas!" sighed the maid, "there are fish in the sea;
But in sorrow this lesson I'm taught—
That however so good they may be, there are times
When a fish will refuse to be caught."

JARED PERKINS' RELIC.

Josiah Allen's Wife Gives Her Some Sound Advice.

One of the relations on my own side came here a visitin' week before last. She that was Arvilly Smith, or as she calls herself now, "the relic of Jared Perkins."

She staid twelve days and thirteen nights.

She had her young child with her—Lucilla Augusta Perkins.

And if Arvilly said "Lucilla Augusta, don't," if she said that once durin' them twelve days and thirteen nights, she said it five hundred times. And I haint a settin' it too high.

Why, good land! I have sometimes thought I had seen a mouse-hole watched close by a cat. But no place of any description was ever watched as that mother watched that child.

If Lucilla bit a apple on one side, it was:

"Lucilla, don't! Don't bite it in so far, you'll break off your teeth."

If she drinked a glass of water, it was:

"Lucilla, don't swaller such big mou'fuls of water, you'll fill your little throat too full."

Or, "Lucilla, swaller faster, or the water will run all over your little chin."

If she sat down by the fire, it was:

"Lucilla Augusta, don't sit so near the fire, or you'll burn your little face!"

And if she sat away from it, it was:

"Lucilla, don't set away from the fire so far, you'll chill your little veins."

And so it went on. If she talked with me and Josiah, it was:

"Don't talk so much, Lucilla, you'll wear out Cousin Josiah and Cousin Samantha."

Or, if she didn't talk, it was:

"Don't keep so still, Lucilla Augusta, or Cousin Samantha and Cousin Josiah will think you have lost your little tongue."

And so Arvilly kep' on—a deep, anxious expression a-plowing into her face from day to day; and little Lucilla not dastin' to speak a word, or move a move, without lookin' to her mother. Why, I got so wore out with it that one day I up and told Arvilly what I thought on't. I argied (and it was from a deep sense of duty that I did it)—I argied that it spilt a disposition by keeping it riled up all the time; it learnt her to be dependent on somebody else always. She didn't know what to do, bein' told so many different things to once; and, finally, I brung up a deep simely I had heard Mother Smith use, and says I: "As it has been said, and well said: 'Watch pot never biles,' which I 'spose means, if you watch a kettle too clost, and keep a movin' it back and forth, and pokin' at the coals under it, it won't bile. There is such a thing as a wise supervision, a overlookin', that don't annoy or disturb, sort o' distant, and near, too, like the warm watchfulness of the sunlight a bendin' over us on summer days, soothin' and comfortin', and yet guidin' and lightin' our pathways. But this constant and open tagging after a child, or, as the poet would say: 'This taggin' and naggin' is enough to ruin any child whatsomever. It jest takes away any frankness and independence of character they may have set out with.'"

"Oh, that is what I want to do! I want Lucilla Augusta to lean onto me always. I don't want her ever to move off independent of me."

And then I says to Arvilly, with a sort of a deep look onto her: "You'll have to in the end!" And then I kinder looked right through Arvilly onto great things, eternal truths and consequences, and says I:

"No human soul can be helped only jest so fur. Lonely they come into this world, lonely they'll go out of it. And all along through life the lonesome soul, though surrounded by watchfulest relatives and friends, yet in a certain sense it has got to live alone, dwell by itself in the deep places where no eye can foller it, no ear hear what it says—no one but the One who made that soul, made the deep places into which it hides itself.

"Now, that independent individual life has its rights. It must have 'em; it is a separate bein'—mothers don't want to think so, but it is. A mother may want to take the hull child, clothes and all, and put it right in the middle of her own heart; but she can't; her heart hain't big enough. Or she may want to get right outside of her child's heart, and fill it full, so full that nothin' else can get in, and she weighin' as she does over a hundred; but she can't; she is too big.

"The best love, the truest and the tenderest, has to kinder hang round on the outside; it can't get inside of the beloved heart and soul, it can't. It is a lonesome feelin' to contemplate it, but it is true. And so what remains for anybody to do is only to admit the fact. Own up that the little soul haint a part of our own life, but has a separate existence of its own—with its own duties, its own pleasures, and cares and rights. It has a right to its own little thoughts, its own little ways, and the best we can do for a child is to teach it to stand alone, and stand straight.

"No matter how much we love to have it lean on us, and O, how passin' sweet it is to have the little fingers cling to us, and the dear little form lean on us; but we must put self back on us; we must stand in front of ourself, as it were, and do right, and learn the little creeter to walk upright without our help, and once in awhile we must let go of the little dimpled hands, a leavin' 'em free to grasp holt of life for themselves.

"A tough lesson for mothers to learn, one of the toughest and hardest sums that are ever set for one on the slate of life set for 'em to work out.

"And what makes the sum more curious and difficult is that you can't seem to get no answer to it. You may add and subtract, and use up every rule in the old 'rithmetic on it, but you don't seem to get no sure result, no certainty, that the answer will be a happifying and sure one.

"But you have got to set there and figger away all the same—got to work it out the best way you can! The sum is set down in front of you, and you have got to do it—or try to, anyway.

"Good land! talk about educatin' a child! Why, if the mother is a true woman and mother, the child educates her more'n she educates the child, enough sight.

"She learns a divine patience through bearin' with the childish little faults.

"Through fear of settin' a bad example in front of it, she learns to control her own temper and her tongue, and behaves herself more'n a good deal of the time.

"She learns a heroic courage from her love for the child that will combat all danger—smile at Satan's rage, and face a frownin' world—

"She mounts up into the topmost height of self-abnegation and martyrdom (as I have said more previously) when she learns it to get along without her—like an old bird pushin' her young one out of the warm nest so it may learn to fly.

"O! how that old bird would love to keep it in the warm nest—how her love wants to brood over it always—how she yearns to keep it close to her own jealous, beating heart—how doubly lonesome the old nest is when the little one is gone; how happily sad, and how joyously mournful is the thought that it is a-learnin' to fly alone—that it is a-learnin' to be happy away from her, away from the old nest—that the walls of the old home can never again be the bound of its joy and content.

"No, the wide horizon has now dawned upon it, the clear, far fields of ether, and it must soar and sing, and sing its own songs, build its own nest, live its own life in its own world."

(This was an allegory.)

An' I talked in this way to Arvilly from hour to hour, and from day to day, and episoded some.

But I don't know as it done much good. Sometimes I am afraid it didn't.

You can't give advice three times a day in a little sweetened water like boneset tea or squills. No, you have to sort o' hang round and administer it the best you can, and when you can, and where you can. And then you haint sure it is swallowed.

I felt consider'ble depressed when they drove off, Josiah a-takin' 'em to the train the day they left.

For I heard Arvilly say, as she sat by the side of Josiah Allen in the democrat, and a gray parmetty dress, I heard her say:

"Lucilla Augusta, don't set down on your little new gown or you will muss it all up."

And a minute arter, just as they turned round the corner into the road:

"Don't stand up, Lucilla Augusta, in the wagon or you will break off your little ankles."

I felt depressed about it and couldn't help it.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

THE WELL-BRED GIRL.

What She Is Like and How She May Be Readily Distinguished.

Do you know many well-bred girls? asks the Philadelphia Times. Oh, they can always be told.

A well-bred girl thanks the man who gives her a seat in the street-car, and does it in a quiet and not in an effuse way.

She doesn't turn round to look after gamblers or posing actors on the street, and she doesn't think that her good looks are causing the men to stare at her.

She doesn't wear all her jewelry in the day-time, and she understands that diamond rings, ear-rings and bracelets were intended for the evening alone.

She doesn't go to supper after the theater is over alone with a man.

She does not declare that she never rides in street cars.

She does not accept a valuable present from any man unless she expects to marry him.

She doesn't talk loud in public places.

She does not speak of her mother in a sarcastic way, and she shows her the loving deference that is her due.

She doesn't want to be a man and she doesn't try to imitate him by wearing stiff hats, smoking cigaretts, and using an occasional big, big D.

She doesn't say she hates women, and she has some good, true friends among them.

She doesn't wear boots without their buttons or a frock that needs mending.

She doesn't scorn the use of the needle, and expects some day to make clothes for very little people who will be very dear to her.

That's the well-bred girl; she's the sort that you want for your wife, and the one who will not want to be an actress, but who will be faithful through sickness and through health, through sorrow and, if need be, through shame; who will never waver in her love, and in whom the heart of her husband may safely trust.

NEARING THE END.

The Cronin Murder Trial in Chicago Will Soon Be Finished.

The Fate of the Five Suspects Soon to Be Known—The Attorneys for the Prosecution and the Defense Making Their Pleas.

THE CRONIN TRIAL.

CHICAGO, Dec. 5.—Attorney Donahoe at the opening of court in the Cronin case yesterday began his address in defense of Kunze and O'Sullivan. He referred to the fact that Kunze being out of funds had requested the court to appoint him (the speaker) as his attorney, and argued from this that if Kunze were one of the conspirators ample funds would have been furnished for his defense. He told the jury that, unless they were satisfied beyond a doubt that the stories of young James that he saw Kunze in the flat at 117 Clark street, of Mertes that it was Kunze who drove Coughlin to the Carlson cottage on the night of May 4, and of Nieman that Kunze was in his saloon on that night in company with Coughlin and O'Sullivan, were true, they must set the German free. He stoutly defended the alibi for O'Sullivan sworn to by the Hylands, and claimed that, unless the jury believed that all the witnesses for the State told the truth, and that all the witnesses for the defense were liars, there could be no conviction. One argument made by Mr. Donahoe was a claim that if one bit of evidence offered by the State was false, then the whole structure must fall to the ground, and the bit which he thought false was the State's claim that Burke was in the cottage on the night of May 4. He next took up the questions of reasonable doubt and circumstantial evidence and said that the latter should be handled very gingerly if at all. In closing, Mr. Donahoe besought the jury to deal justly with his clients. His appeal to the jury was couched in eloquent terms and delivered in a manner so pathetic that tears coursed down the cheeks of O'Sullivan and Kunze. Burke also tried in vain to conceal the maze of tears through which he looked.

CHICAGO, Dec. 6.—At yesterday's session of the Cronin trial Mr. Hynes spoke for the prosecution. He said that in this trial every safeguard had been given the accused men to secure to them justice. How different the proceedings when Dr. Cronin was accused behind his back, tried behind his back, killed and then accused publicly. Concerning O'Sullivan's alibi the absurdity of the story told by the Hylands about their being in Nieman's saloon on Sunday, May 5, with the iceman was held prominently to view by citing the evidence of Nieman and Anderson, who swore that the saloon was full of revelers, whereas, according to the Hylands, it was empty.

Coughlin's alibi was then taken up, and Mr. Hynes said it was wholly immaterial whether Dan Coughlin was near the Carlson cottage on the 4th of May, whether Patrick O'Sullivan was near the Carlson cottage on the 4th of May, whether they ever lifted a hand to strike Dr. Cronin; the fact that they were in the conspiracy and arranged it makes them equally guilty under the law.

Concerning Kunze, Attorney Hynes said that there could be no doubt of Kunze's guilt, although he was compelled in justice to say his guilt was not so great as that of the others; that it was of the stool-pigeon nature, and that no evidence had been produced to show that Kunze was fully cognizant of the inside workings of the conspirators.

It has been said by counsel for defense, said the speaker, that the failure to prove any circumstance beyond a reasonable doubt necessarily involved the failure of the whole case. That is not the law. Every material fact in the indictment, every material allegation, must be proven beyond reasonable doubt.

The motive of the great conspiracy was the next theme. He said it might possibly be that the appointment of a secret committee at the meeting of February 8 was not for the purpose of murder; but if it had an innocent origin why had not the members of that secret committee come here to tell for what it was appointed?

The conspiracy in Camp 20 was the next subject taken up by the lawyer, and he introduced it by an eloquent tribute to the Irish patriots who have so long been striving to separate England and Ireland. It was a subject dear to the speaker's heart, and he handled it in a masterly style. He spoke of the triangle and its leader, whom he characterized as a designing adventurer. He showed how patriotic men had been betrayed into English prisons, how their betrayal had been used to cover up enormous embezzlements of money contributed for patriotic purposes, and finally how, in order to ward off exposure, foul murder had been resorted to.

CHICAGO, Dec. 7.—At yesterday's session of the Cronin trial Mr. Hynes continued his speech. He said the innermost workings of the infamous conspiracy would never be wholly revealed until some putrid conscience should show them forth with phosphorescent light in the shadow of the gallows. He said that if the claim that Dr. Cronin was killed because he was a British spy were true, the murderers would have been sent across the ocean to put to death Le Caron.

Mr. Hynes called attention to the fact that Attorney Donahoe, O'Sullivan's lawyer, in all his long address uttered not one word of condemnation of this foul crime, not one sentiment of dissatisfaction, of disapprobation of the blackest and reddest murder of modern times. He proclaimed it as savagery that a man should be thus cowardly slain while on an errand of mercy, a man whose fatal fault was his honor; whose heart was throbbing with sympathy and anxiety for the supposed sufferer, and said that many a hot, rash act had brought calamity and shame to the Irish people, but in the history of the past and the future yet to be made this will stand out as the one conspicuous monument of shame whose shadow falls upon a brave, an honorable and a generous race, the sympathizers always with the down-trodden and the helpless. This burst of eloquence brought the water to the eyes of many and the tears trickled down the faces of several of the jurors.

In conclusion, Mr. Hynes said he sympathized with Irishmen in their desire to liberate their country for her wrongs, but he insisted that they should do it as Washington had liberated America, not by making war upon women and children. He ended with an expression of confidence that the jurors would render a verdict in accordance with their conscience—a verdict that the court would ratify, a verdict that God would sanctify, a verdict that would mete out to the prisoners the punishment they deserved.

At the afternoon session Attorney Foster began his argument in behalf of his client Beggs. He said that whoever believed Dr. Cronin was an angel in disguise was mistaken. It had been charged that the Clan-na-Gael society was a dynamite organization, but the fact that Dr. Cronin was an active member of the society had been unthinkingly overlooked. He referred to Beggs' connection with the Clan-na-Gael, and said his client's connection with the society was an open book. He was a champion of peace. The statement that Beggs had at one time said that Dr. Cronin was not a fit man to be on the committee that tried Alexander Sullivan might be true. What of it? Had not Dr. Cronin in a convention of the National body charged Sullivan, Boland and Feely with robbery and murder. Such being the case was it unreasonable to believe that any one making such a charge would be unfit to try and judge the one accused? And that statement is the only one that Beggs has been accused in evidence of making. None other has he ever made. In making that statement he did right. If you are going to hang him for that statement I might as well stop right here and let him be taken at once to the narrow passage in the jail and strangled. The State desires to convict my client because Burke went to his office three times—twice in January and once in February. Let the gentlemen of the State look to their own nest, see where they have been visited by fugitives from justice, and say if such facts would warrant the conviction of themselves of the crimes for which the fugitives are guilty. If not, in Heaven's name let them not make such accusation nor express such a desire against my client. The speaker said that Beggs was made senior guardian the last Friday night in January. The meeting at which the conspiracy was claimed to have been hatched was held on February 8, and, therefore, the senior guardianship of Beggs could not have been long used to produce and nourish the germs of the conspiracy. The only thing against Beggs is his having, at his installation, raised his voice against the continued attacks upon Alexander Sullivan.

At this point court adjourned until to-day. Attorney Foster will speak an hour or two longer, when court will adjourn to Monday and Attorney Forrest begin.

CHICAGO, Dec. 8.—Attorney Foster picked up the thread of his discourse at the morning session of the Cronin trial Saturday by impressing once more upon the jury the point in law that a defendant is not obliged to prove his innocence, but that his guilt must be proved by the prosecution before a verdict against him can be rendered.

The charge that a secret committee was ever appointed in Camp 20 by Beggs the speaker denied point blank. There was no positive proof of it and there was nothing in the record to show that such an appointment was made. The effort of the prosecution, said Mr. Foster, to show by the financial records that Camp 20 had furnished funds to the murderers of Dr. Cronin had proven a dismal failure. The strongest point made in behalf of Beggs was when his attorney referred to the investigation following the discovery of the body in the catch-basin. Ignorant members of Camp No. 20, hesitating between their oath of secrecy to the Clan-na-Gael and their duty as citizens summoned to testify before the Cronin jury, had appealed to the senior guardian for guidance. "Tell every thing," Mr. Beggs had said to them, while Luke Dillon, the friend of Cronin, the aider of the prosecution, the man who had been sent from Philadelphia to purge the association of the stain of crime, stood aghast and implored the members of the Clan not to go "too far."

In conclusion, Mr. Foster said that John F. Beggs was not deserving of mercy if he stood at the head of that conspiracy to murder Dr. Cronin. He was either guilty of that foul crime, or he was innocent, and the jury must return a verdict taking his life or setting him free. Mr. Foster's voice grew sad and low while he pleaded to the jury, and the prisoner struggled hard to restrain the emotions which threatened to overcome him. Tears welled into his eyes as his ears drank in the words of hope uttered by his attorney. Dan Coughlin and Kunze both were in tears, Attorney Donahoe was weeping like a child, handkerchiefs were in demand throughout the audience, and the eyes of more than one of the jury were dimmed.

The voice of Mr. Forrest broke the spell. His turn had come to make the final speech for the defense. For nearly two hours he quoted from law books showing the value of circumstantial evidence, what a reasonable doubt meant and other matters of like nature.

Following Mr. Forrest, the closing speech for the prosecution will be made by Mr. Mills, and the instructions of the judge will be given.

THE MINNEAPOLIS FIRE.

Verdict of the Coroner's Jury—The Charge Against Cashier Ostrom.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Dec. 7.—The coroner's jury in the inquest on the bodies of the victims of the Tribune building fire brought in a verdict declaring that the owners of the Tribune building, if not legally responsible, are morally culpable for the loss of life. They recommend that the assistant building inspector occupy his whole time in looking after fire-escapes. They find that the fire originated in the rooms of the Republican League (unoccupied) from causes unknown.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Dec. 9.—Charles O. Ostrom, the defaulting cashier of the Pioneer-Press' Minneapolis department, is charged with setting the fire which burned the Tribune building in which seven men lost their lives.

FAILED FOR MILLIONS.

Suspension of the Capital Loan and Investment Company of Lincoln, Neb.

LINCOLN, Neb., Dec. 9.—The Capital Loan and Investment Company suspended business Saturday night. It was started about six months ago and numbered among its stockholders some of the best business men in this city and State. Three trustees were appointed to wind up its affairs and they claim they will be able to pay all the small debts that are outstanding, but the stockholders will be lucky if they get 25 per cent. on what they have paid in. The capital stock amounted to $10,000,000. The reason for the failure given by Secretary H. F. Albers was that every man who took stock and paid in his assessment wanted to borrow a large sum.

A SNEAK-THIEF'S HAUL.

He Snatches $30,000 in Securities From a Bank Counter and Gets Away.

WILMINGTON, Del., Dec. 9.—While John C. Patterson was standing at the Delaware Bank counter clipping coupons from bonds which he kept on deposit there an unknown man seized Mr. Patterson's deposit box containing some $30,000 in securities, and ran out and away. The police are trying to find the thief.

A Fine Hotel in Ruins.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Dec. 6.—The well-known Monongahela House was burned Thursday, and though a number of guests had narrow escapes, no persons sustained serious injuries. The loss is less than $100,000, while the insurance aggregates $197,500. Papers for the sale and transfer of the hotel were to have been delivered at 3 o'clock p. m.

Hippolyte Firmly Settled.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—Hannibal Price, the new Haytian Minister to the United States who arrived here on the steamer Clyde Friday, emphatically denies the report that rebellion against Hippolyte's Government is imminent. He said the people are now contented.

Cheated the Hangman.

TOMBSTONE, A. T., Dec. 6.—In the jail at Florence, A. T., were five Apache Indians, sentenced to be hanged to-day (Friday) for murder. Three of them strangled themselves in their cells Wednesday night, leaving but two to face the executioner.

Confessed His Guilt.

YOUNGSTOWN, O., Dec. 6.—W. W. Nivison yesterday confessed to robbing the United States express office in this city of $7,500 five years ago. A sad feature of the case is that his chief clerk was driven insane over being suspected of the crime.

Dom Pedro at Lisbon.

LISBON, Dec. 9.—Ex-Emperor Dom Pedro, of Brazil, accompanied by his family and suite, reached here on Saturday. King Carlos extended a cordial welcome to the exiles.

Big Flour Mills Burned.

HUMBOLDT, Kan., Dec. 9.—The extensive flour mills of Lindsey & Robson were destroyed by fire Saturday night. Loss, $100,000; insurance, $45,000.

FIFTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

Both Houses of the National Legislature in Session.

Numerous Bills Introduced in Both Houses—Several Petitions Are Also Presented—Business Is Now Fully Under Way.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—In the Senate yesterday Messrs. Pierce and Casey, the Senators from North Dakota, took the oath of office. Mr. Pierce drew the short term, expiring March 3, 1891, and Mr. Casey's term will expire March 3, 1893. Bills were introduced providing for the regulation and prevention of trusts; for a new election law for the election of Congressmen; for the free coinage of silver; to perpetuate the National banking system; to increase the salaries of United States circuit court and district judges; making the President ineligible for a second term until four years after his term of office has expired; granting pensions to all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors unable to support themselves of $12 per month; granting pensions to all soldiers and sailors and the dependent parents of deceased soldiers and sailors; allowing woman suffrage; for one cent letter postage; to repeal the civil-service law; to prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors, and to admit Idaho as a State. The name of David J. Brewer, of Kansas, to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, was received from the President.

HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—The House was not in session yesterday.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—Bills were introduced yesterday for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States steamers in the harbor at Apia, Samoa, last March; for the retirement of United States legal-tender and National bank-notes of small denominations; for a constitutional amendment to confer on the District of Columbia representation in both houses of Congress and in the electoral college; to amend the naturalization laws; to give the right of trial by jury to claimants for pension. Mr. Voorhees offered a long preamble and resolution in reference to tariff taxation. Several hundred nominations of persons appointed to office during the recess of Congress were received from the President. Senator Ingalls (Kan.) was elected President pro tem. in the absence of Vice-President Morton, and the Senate adjourned till Monday.

THE MAN WHO KNOWS IT ALL.

I have traveled near and far, selling varnish, paint and tar, and of side lines (on the sly) a score or two; such as neckties and suspenders, knives and patent stocking-menders, and of Hebrew hardware (clothing) not a few.

I have met of men a number, some were bright-hued, some were somber, in the various complexion of the mind; rough and tough and soft and hearty, lean and short, of every species and kind.

But of all that I remember none did ever rouse my temper as did one, whom I with angry thought recall; he was under the impression (and with never a concession) that he absolutely, positively knew it all.

He had studied long and close art and poetry and prose, poker, whist, and every game from dice to chess. Nature's laws, cause of creation, every country, every nation; he knew all to which one desperately could digress.

In philosophy and science, music, every kind of viands, in medicinal knowledge, too, and deep religious themes; with encyclopedic detail he knew wholesale trade and retail, and a number of exceedingly safe money-making schemes.

Yet this perambulating college, with his universal knowledge, never seemed to make a cent in any way; he knew it all, but never did he any thing whatever for which by any effort he could or did get pay.

HER ROMANCE.

An Affair Which Didn't Turn Out as the Neighbors Expected.

She was a carpet-weaver who lived in a flourishing Indiana town. For years she had been a widow, yet she was not yet what is called "middle-aged," and was good looking and intelligent. Patiently and cheerfully she sat at her loom day after day, until at last she was able to buy a snug little cottage, with vines clambering about the latticed porch and a pretty green yard in front.

She moved in and fitted up the house tastefully, inside and out. Carpet of her own weaving covered the floors, and every aid to comfort and beauty which her modest purse could buy was added. It was a sweet and home-like place, the neighbors said, and one and all liked to look at it as they passed and nod to the pleasant-faced widow as she sat on her porch on a summer evening after the day's weaving was done.

Ever since she had been a carpet-weaver "Jolly John's" express wagon had delivered her goods. "Jolly John" was old, bluff, lame and ill-tempered, but exceedingly honest; and so the widow bore patiently with his disobliging ways and uncivil manners, because she was sure that after much growling and blustering he would do what he undertook to do exactly right. Sarcasm had fastened his nickname to him, because he and jollity were total strangers.

One day when the carpet-weaver sent for Jolly John's wagon it arrived without Jolly John. The figure that sat on the driver's seat was very unlike Jolly John's. Straight, strong and handsome, this man adorned the situation, and he had a tongue which, like that of Richard III., "could wheedle with the devil." This and his graceful manners made a favorable impression on the widow at once. He was a skillful dog, too, and managed to combine gallantry and business so well that after he was gone the carpet-weaver mentally named him "Handsome Henry," as she read the brand new business card he had given her while he explained that he had bought out Jolly John's business, root and branch.

Handsome Henry proved as capable in business as he was fascinating in manner. It was no time until the widow began to look for his coming with a new light in her eye; and always after he drove away a rosy flush dyed her cheeks. Soon the neighbors remarked that she rarely sat alone on the porch now. The good-looking expressman was almost always with her after the work of the day was over; and his face was as bright and sunny as hers.

In a little while he begged her to marry him and make him happy and she consented.

And so they were married and got on beautifully together. The neighbors often spoke of the harmony of the expressman's household. "Here are a husband and wife who really love each other," they said. Nevertheless they probed the situation for weak places, as neighbors will, and discovered a difference in the degree of the love of "Handsome Henry" and his wife. They said the woman's love was stronger, and that the man knew it and would trade upon it and finally get the upper hand of her.

It was true that she loved him overmuch. For years her life had been bitterly lonely and destitute of the sweetness of affection. This made her grateful and glad for her present blessings all the time. She never looked at her new husband without a smile of satisfaction. At times she even marveled at her happiness and wondered humbly why she had been so blessed when many other women were left uncomfortable and alone.

All went well with the married lovers for a time. But the wife fell ill—very ill. Then the husband spoke plainly of what he had often hinted at before—having his wife's property put in his name. (The neighbors always said he had had his eye on the house when he married her.)

"No," she said. "I will keep it in my own name—I have earned it; but you shall share it with me as long as we both live."

That did not suit him. He wanted it made his unmistakably, "in case any thing should happen."

"If you mean in case I should die," she said, "it is unnecessary. I shall not die."

He insisted, but she was firm. Then he threatened her. If she could not do him that little kindness he would leave her. Yes, that he would.

She loved him devoutedly, and this threat, so cruel and unprovoked, wounded and terrified her. And she was so ill that she had not her usual courage. She wept, entreated and begged him not to leave—not while she was ill, at least. Seeing that he had struck the weak string in her heart, the coward played upon it. There was but one thing that would keep him, he told her, and that was to put the property unreservedly into his hands. In spite of her love for him the poor woman saw his brutal selfishness, and her good sense told her not to yield.

The chivalrous expressman was as good as his word and left her. For a time she was almost heartbroken. The neighbors, phenomenally acute in their perceptions, as neighbors sometimes are, saw that his plan was to stay away a few days and then come back and make his permanency conditional. They were correct in their diagnosis. They said, too, that the deserted woman who was so much in love with the handsome monster that she would take him back the first time he put in an appearance. She, however, dried her tears, thought the matter over and said she wouldn't. Still, they felt sure she would.

At the end of a fortnight the wandering refugee returned. He came in with a grave and merciful face, doing the injured and the forgiving quite like the grand, gloomy and peculiar fellow of the melodrama.

His wife, still ill and pale, was propped up in a great chair. In the calmest possible manner she told him that her house was no longer his home. He treated the assertion with lofty scorn; in fact he smiled at it as the vagary of a sick brain, and began to settle down in his old ways. She explained to him that he had forfeited all claim to her consideration leaving her in so heartless a manner when she was ill; and that if she loved him fifty times more than she did she would never live with him again.

Then it was his turn to beg and entreat, which he did unavailingly. Then he announced that he would stay anyway. He was her husband, and she could not put him out. She thought otherwise, so she sent the kitchen girl for a policeman. Still he wouldn't go. He thought she was trying to scare him; thought she would finally give it all up and tell him he was her "dear old boy," and that she was "glad to have him back."

The strong arm of the law arrived, clad in blue and brass, and arrived with a bludgeon, and gently but firmly led this recalcitrant "natural protector" out into the bitter world.

Next day the now miserable exile came back with a freshly-oiled tongue and undertook to reinstate himself in his wife's affections. Vain hope. The policeman broke rudely in upon his manly eloquence and took him out again, reminding him that the next time he entered the house he (the policeman) would lock him up.

The neighbors acknowledged themselves astonished at the carpet-weaver's firmness. They were astounded when, a few days later, she had a relapse and died, after making a will which cut her husband off without a shilling, and left all her property to a cousin. As she lived in Indiana, which has the most liberal laws for women, she could do this and know that her will would stand undisputed.

The expressman put crape on his hat—he was in mourning for his selfishness and folly, the neighbors said.

Strange faces look out of the windows of the carpet-weaver's house as the expressman drives by in his green wagon. "He has had his lesson," the neighbors say. He sighs and wishes he had required less teaching.—Gertrude Garrison, in Texas Siftings.

TOILING YOUNG WOMEN.

How They Slave in the Office of a New York Business Man.

A Broadway business man has a couple of young ladies working in his office, and furnishes this "record of a day."

"Now, Nellie, you've taken my rubber again."

"No, Susie dear, I haven't seen your rubber; but you have my pencil, I'm sure."

"Indeed, I have a pencil of my own, I thank you."

"And my blotter is gone, too." [Chases three times around the office looking for it, goes out and asks the elevator boy if he saw it, comes back and finds it on her desk.]

"Lend me your watch-key."

"Oh, dear, it won't begin to fit, and I left mine at home."

"Have you been to Coney Island this year?"

"I don't think it a nice place to go. Still, I don't mind going with a good crowd of your own."

"Did you read that awful story in the paper about Jack the Ripper?"

"Isn't he too dreadful for any thing?"

"Do you think they can ever kill people with electricity?"

"I don't know, but it makes a lovely light, don't you think so?"

And so on till lunch time.

"Oh, Nellie, did you get an extra toothpick? I forgot to get one."

"No, but I have got a hair-pin that's never been used."

"Oh, thanks."

"Did you notice that stylish dress at lunch?"

"Do you think it was stylish? Well, I am sorry for your taste."

"Now, I thought that drapery was pretty."

"How is your brother now?"

"Oh, he's well. Did you hear that Fannie Radway was to marry that dude over in the Grand street store?"

"Yes; and I think the dude is to be pitied."

"Now, my rubber's gone again."

"Well, I haven't got it, that's sure."

"It couldn't walk away itself. Oh, excuse me, dear; here it is under my paper."

"I wish some of the gentlemen would close the windows. That draught is just too dreadful." [Waits five minutes and then closes them herself.]

"What time is it?"

"Just ten minutes of four."

"Well, let us go home. I'm just too tired for any thing."

Now and then one of the young men employed in the office is found dead in his chair, and the coroner always attributes it to apoplexy.—N. Y. World.

JAMES UPDYKE, Jr.

Gen. Benjamin F. Butler's Appetite.

The gastronomical peculiarities of great men are frequently made a subject of comment. Of all the public characters who visit Washington, I am told that "Ben" Butler heads the list, as far as his ability for stowing away food is concerned. He literally "takes the cake," for the steaming pancake is his weakness, and it is the testimony here that the most agile cook in the district cannot turn the farinaceous flapjack fast enough to meet the demands of "Ben's" appetite. In the lower part of Pennsylvania avenue there stands a hotel, an unpretentious little caravansary, noted for the correctness of its cuisine and the excellence of its service. It is a quiet resort with all the comforts of an old English tavern and the seclusion so dear to the average gormandizer. "Ben" Butler frequently comes to this place to order his favorite dish.

"I have heard of appetites," said an attendant to to me the other day, "but I never knew exactly what a real appetite was before I saw Mr. Butler. I remember the first time he came here he ordered two porterhouse steaks, a dozen fried eggs, with fried onions, raw fried potatoes, and pancakes to suit. I thought it was for a party of four, and I fixed plates, napkins, knives and forks accordingly.

"'What the —— are you bringing all these dishes here for? Do you suppose I've invited a regiment to dine with me? Take them away,' shouted Mr. Butler.

"While I cleared away the deck Mr. Butler sat there impatiently with a fork in one hand and a knife in the other, waiting for me to set the order on the table. There were twelve pancakes on a plate. These he sliced through at one blow, cut out a section, and apparently swallowed it pretty much as an average man does an oyster after giving it one bite. Another section followed in the same way, and before I could turn around he thundered out:

"'Bring in some more pancakes.'

"I rushed back to the kitchen and detailed the situation to the head cook.

"'Why, dat must be Mr. Butler,' said the cook knowingly, and calling to an assistant he told him to make up a big panful of pancake batter, and to be 'mighty quick about it, for dar is a man in de dinin'-room wid an appetite like a rat hole.' When I got back to the dining-room one of the porterhouse steaks was missing. It had disappeared so quickly that I began to doubt whether I had brought it or not, when my mind was settled by Mr. Butler, who said as he wiped his mouth and chin:

"'That steak was just right, but this one is not quite rare enough.'

"But he fell to it all the same, and destroyed it in large sections, supplemented by mouthfuls of egg, potatoes, and onions, and an occasional half cup of coffee.

"'Where the —— are those pancakes?' he shouted, while glaring at me with his one good eye, and then he turned as if to the cook:

"Bring in those —— pancakes!"

"Well, sir, you may believe me or not, but Mr. Butler got away with four dozen pancakes, and as for the steak, eggs, and potatoes, there wasn't enough left to feed a cat, and then he got up and walked down the avenue as briskly as if had only lunched on half a dozen raw oysters."

Remarkable Blind Men.

A namesake of our great American temperance lecturer, John Gough, an Englishman by birth, became quite celebrated as a botanist and writer on subjects pertaining to natural philosophy. He was totally blind from the age of 3 years, the sense of vision being so deadened that he could not perceive the glare of sunlight upon the snow on the brightest winter days. Disabled by this appaling affliction, he studied botany, his wife, brothers and sisters doing the reading, and collected and arranged by the sense of touch alone, and without the least aid from any living human being, one of the largest and most valuable collections of dried herbs and grasses at that time (1780) known in Britain.

That wonderful invention, the string alphabet for the blind, was invented by a man who never saw his queer-looking machine, the face of his mother, or the "glad sunlight" of which he so feelingly wrote. David Macbeth was blind from his birth, yet a perfect genius in a dozen different ways. He was an accomplished musician, a perfect prodigy in mathematics, and an inventor of no mean order of merit. Besides his string alphabet, he was the inventor of one of the earliest known revolving barrel churns, of a clamp to be used by bookbinders in stitching leaves together, and of a self-oiling attachment for wagons and carriages. He could take his watch to pieces and put it together again almost as quickly as the man who made it could have done. It was without a crystal, and by gently touching the hands with the tips of his fingers he could tell within one second of the time day or night.

He was an expert at the national game of cricket, and was reckoned as being one of the most valuable men in some parts of the game, but useless in others.

When he died he had been engaged for years on the perfection of a fire-escape, which has since, with some slight changes and additions, made a London firm independent.

Alexander Rodenbach, the Belgian politician, and for a long time member of the Belgian lower house, was totally blind. Besides being noted as a political economist, Rodenback was the author of several works on deaf muteism, blindness, and kindred subjects.—[St. Louis Republic.

Two German athletes have arrived in this country whose feats of strength, it is said, will be a revelation to the strong men here. One can lift 545 pounds with his middle finger and can pass a weight of 200 pounds slowly over his head with one hand. The other is credited with being able to force a six-inch nail through a two-inch plank with his bare hand.

"Yes, sir," said a man with a grudge against the orator of the day, "his speech was funny enough to make a donkey laugh. I laughed till I cried."

WASHINGTON'S VIOLIN.

An Instrument the Father of His Country is Said to Have Played On.

An old violin, a worm-eaten case, some historical letters and an affidavit vouching for the violin's history—all in possession of a violin maker of this city—will probably lead to some interesting historical researches concerning the musical inclinations and abilities of George Washington, for the violin is said to have been his. The violin and its case are now owned by a son of Gemunder, the Astoria violin maker, and that is presumption enough that young Mr. Gemunder is up on violins. His surname is George and that possibly gives him authority to speak concerning the "Father of his Country." It was not really known until this violin turned up, that George Washington, like Thomas Jefferson, was musically inclined, but the affidavits and letters in Mr. Gemunder's possession seem to make out a pretty strong case in favor of the tradition that General Washington was something of a musician. Mr. Gemunder showed the violin and its case to a reporter recently, together with the letters and affidavits, and told the violin's history. It came to him and his father at Astoria, N. Y., about two years ago, sadly in need of repairs. The owner, Thomas B. Washington, of Charleston, W. Va., wrote them at the same time all about the violin and its case. They tried to buy the instrument, but Mr. Washington would not let it go then, because he said that it had always been in Washington's family's possession since the General's death. But a short time ago the Gemunders succeeded in getting it. Thomas B. Washington, when he sold it, gave the Gemunders an affidavit vouching for the instrument's having once been owned by the first President of the United States. The story runs that as the Father of his Country was riding one day through Southern Virginia he heard a "sweet concourse of sounds" issuing from a negro's cabin, which made him an amateur musician, for he alighted from his horse, entered the cabin and bought the violin, which was being played by an old negro." History is silent as to how well or how much the General played on his violin and the traditions of the Washington family do not furnish any information as to whether the Father of his Country "whooped her up" for the boys at barn-raisings, huskings, and Fourth of July celebrations; but it seems that after he died the violin and its old case went to his nephew, Judge Bushrod Washington.

Judge Washington called it the "Old Cremona," because he found a slip of paper glued inside the violin bearing the inscription "Jacob Steiner, 1695" a Cremona maker. Mr. Gemunder, however, thinks that it is a Tyrolean violin made in imitation of the Cremona school.

Judge Washington had a nephew, Thomas B. Washington, father of the one who sold the violin to the Gemunders. Thomas B. thought that he could play the fiddle if he only got it, so after persuasion the old Judge turned it over to him. On his death his son, Thomas B., got it. He could not play it, but preserved it as jealously as if it were the apple of his eye, or a part of the historical apple or cherry tree, or the famous hatchet itself. With the violin he turned over a newspaper slip from "The Spirit of Jefferson," a paper published in Charleston, in which the editor reverentially speaks of the relic as once the property of President George Washington.

The violin is under the usual size, but it is called "full size" and it is of shapely model. The back is made of maple and the top of spruce, and it is stained a brownish black color. The case is shaped like a leg of mutton. It opens at the end, too, just as if a slice had been cut off the big end. The violin is now at No. 27 Union Square. It is valued at $1,000.—[N. Y. Tribune.

Oriental Justice.

Dr. Henry M. Scudder reports the decision of a case in an Eastern court, in which the nice discrimination of the bench was conspicuous.

Four men, partners in business, bought some cotton bales. That the rats might not destroy the cotton, they purchased a cat. They agreed that each of the four should own a particular leg of the cat; and each adorned with beads and other ornaments the leg thus apportioned to him.

The cat by an accident injured one of its legs. The owner of that member wound about it a rag soaked in oil. The cat going too near the fire set the rag on fire, and, being in great pain, rushed in among the cotton bales, where she was accustomed to hunt rats. The cotton thereby took fire and was burned up. It was a total loss.

The three other partners brought an action to recover the value of the cotton against the fourth partner, who owned that particular leg of the cat. The judge examined the case and decided thus:

"The leg that had the oil rag on it was hurt; the cat could not use that leg; in fact, it held up that leg and ran with the other three legs. The three unhurt legs, therefore, carried the fire to the cotton, and are alone culpable. The injured leg is not to be blamed. The three partners who owned the three legs with which the cat ran to the cotton will pay the whole value of the bales to the partner who was the proprietor of the injured leg."

Paid the Debt in Pennies.

It is related of Joe Willard, the Washington hotel man, that upon one occasion some years since a man got judgment against him for a debt that Joe claimed he didn't owe. Resolving to get even with his persecutor, Joe scraped together all the pennies he could get hold of and presented them in part payment of the debt. There were about $200 worth of the pennies, and it took a darky with a push-cart to carry them to the creditor. Joe thought he had scored a point on his enemy, until the latter sprung upon him the law showing the maximum amount for which the pennies were a legal tender to be but 25 cents. Joe had to cart back the pennies and pay the man in genuine coin of the realm. It is said that Joe still has the pennies, no one being inclined to take them off his hands.

AN EAVESDROPPER'S FATE.

Young Mr. Silt had been three months away from his sweetheart and he thought what a joke it would be to hide behind the parlor door, and jump out and kiss her by way of surprise. He succeeded in getting into Emily Ryder's house unobserved, and posted himself behind the door, just as he had planned

As he stood there in gleeful expectancy he heard his sweetheart's voice exclaiming;

"O Robin, I've almost cried my eyes out for you."

Then the listener heard a horrible sound like a kiss, and an endless dialogue followed, in which a man's gruff voice was intermingled.

Tim Silt was in a perspiration of agony, and he felt strongly in favor of rushing upon his sweetheart and the villain she was making love to. On second thought he stole outdoors and posted himself where he could see his rival in exit.

In a few moments the door opened and a young man came out.

A curiosity impelled Timothy to follow the young man and see where he lived.

The stranger looked back once or twice suspiciously, and then Timothy would get interested in something across the street till the former faced front again. And so they kept on till the forward man entered a door over which the words "sample-room" shone in gilt letters.

Timothy followed his file-leader, whom he found seated at a small table in the act of calling for a "gin fiz."

Timothy sat down at another table and compromised with his conscience—he was a Good Templar—by ordering a lemonade "straight."

At length Timothy's and the stranger's eyes met. Neither would look aside first, and the result was a prolonged mutual stare.

The man got up and swaggered across to Timothy.

"What d'yer want along o' me?" he demanded fiercely.

"Maybe that's it," he added, giving no time to answer, and dashing the remainder of his "fiz" in Timothy's face. "Anyhow, you'll find it an improvement on the slop you're swilling there."

Here was the opening Timothy had longed for. He took no small pride in his muscle and his "science." In an instant he was up and on guard, and before his adversary knew what was coming a stinging left-hander had closed his right eye.

The combatants, it soon appeared, were very equally matched. Blows fell thick and fast. Right and left they struck out, neither taking time to parry. Damage to the enemy, not self-preservation, became for the time the primal law. Nobody interfered, and when the conflict ended it was from sheer exhaustion—victory perching on neither banner.

Timothy had himself put into a cab and driven to his lodgings, whither a doctor was summoned for repairs.

Next morning as he lay, feeling as battered and bruised in spirit as in body, a gentle tap came to the door.

"Come in!" growled Timothy, thinking it was the landlady.

"Why, Timothy," cried a sweet voice, full of sympathy, "whatever's the matter? I heard this morning you were ill and had had the doctor, but didn't know you'd been in a railroad smashup, or had been blown up on a steamboat, as I see you have. They didn't what to let me see you, but I said I would—it was my place to nurse you. How did it happen, Tim, dear?"

"Emily Ryder," said Tim, sternly, raising a corner of the beefsteak and giving her a very black look indeed, "don't be a hypocrite! I know all!"

And when he had told her all he knew—the story of the fight included—Emily burst into a hearty laugh.

"I'm quite prepared for such heartlessness," said Timothy, bitterly.

"O Tim, Tim!" cried Emily, recovering her breath. "I'm not heartless—I'm truly and sincerely sorry; but how could you be such a dunce? Wait till I introduce Robin. I left him out in the carriage."

And, running out, she was back in a minute, carrying in her arms a mite of a Scotch terrier, that looked like nothing but a pair of glittering eyes peering out from a wisp of Scotch heather.

"Here's Robin," she said, depositing him on Timothy's pillow, whence he made a vigorous dive at the beefsteak, but his mistress caught his collar.

"He's a present I got when you were away," said Emily, "and the nicest little creature in the world. He was stolen the other day, and I offered a reward for his return—no questions to be asked. Yesterday a queer looking man brought him home—the same, no doubt, that stole him. Of course, I was very glad to see Robin, and called him 'darling,' and kissed him, and made a great to do over him. But you getting into a jealous quarrel and fighting with a dog thief—it's too funny for anything."

For Timothy's sake, we drop the curtain.

The Map of Africa.

It is said that the makers of the big globe which is now on exhibition in Paris found it necessary to make parts of Africa over twice on account of geographical news received from the Dark Continent. Some Belgian map makers had a still livelier experience two years ago. They prepared a large map of the Congo States five times for the press, and withdrew it each time for additions and corrections. Mr. Habonicht, editor of a most notable map of Africa, says, in his preface to the second edition, that "the map of Africa is never completed, and that no mail arrives from the big continent without bringing new work for the map makers."

Wilkie Collins said that he never married because he could not give up laudanum drinking, and the effect of this drug was to destroy his strength of will.

Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, says his daughter is about as skilled in the law as he is; she acts as his amanuensis and advises with him when doubtful legal points arise.

The Origin of "Hurrah!"

Writing to the London times with reference to the remark of its Berlin correspondent that the exclamation "Hurrah!" "is said to be of Slavonic origin," Dr. C. A. Buchheim, of King's college, London, says: "I presume your correspondent must have some authority for this assertion; but I hope you will allow me to point out that, as far as I know, the word is of purely German origin. It is generally assumed to be derived from the imitative interjection hurr, describing a rapid movement from which the middle high German hurren, "to move rapidly" or rather to hurry, has been formed. Hurrah is, therefore, nothing else than an enlarged form of hurr, and, as I said, of purely Teutonic origin. In Grimm's 'Worterbuch' we find the interjection quoted from a Minnesinger. It also occurs in Danish and Swedish; and it would be interesting to know when it was first introduced into England in the anglicized form of "hurrah." In Germany it was frequently used during the Napoleonic wars by the Prussian soldiers, and it also occurs in some political and martial songs of those days. Since then it seems to have been adopted also by other nations, even by the French in the form of hourra. That the interjection did not become so popular in Germany as a cheer at convivial gatherings as in this country is probably owing to the circumstance that preference was given there to the brief exclamation 'Hoch!' forming respectively the end and begining of the phrases 'Er lebe hoch,' and 'Hoch soll er leben.' Of late the word 'hurrah' seems to have become rather popular in Germany. It is just possible that the English reimported it there, or that it was revived through the magnificent poem of 'Hurrah Germania,' written by the poet laureate of the German people, Ferdinand Freiligrath."

THE QUEEN'S PEARLS.

How Her English Majesty Managed to Satisfy Her Curiosity.

The Queen has taken great care that all her daughters shall have fine pearl necklaces for their shapely necks. She has looked after them, in that respect, from their babyhood. One of her first purchases after the birth of each has been two or three pearls (of which jewel the queen is very fond); and every year until their marriage she has added a pearl or two to her stock, until the necklace she required was ready. In this quiet economical way she has been enabled to make up a rope of pearls for each of the princesses, and those who have seen these necklaces at court will bear me out in saying that the queen's daughters are, so far as pearls go, well supplied with jewelery. Thereby hangs a tale, for which the correspondent can vouch.

Some years ago her majesty bought from a well-known London pearl merchant three very beautiful pearls, the united cost of which was not far from £500. Four hundred and eighty pounds was the exact sum mentioned. They pleased her royalty greatly and were paid for without demur. A little while after the purchase had been made the merchant was surprised to receive a letter from a lady at court saying: "The queen wants very much to know whether pearls will burn?" The reply to the somewhat startling scientific inquiry was that if her majesty wished to oxygenize pearls for her amusement she would find that they would burn in an ordinary fire. This rejoinder produced the secret. The queen had placed the pearls on her desk in a piece of the tissue paper which jewelers use. As she was writing one morning she used the tissue paper to wipe her pen and threw it into the fire. The pearls, all unobserved, went with it. The ashes of the grate were searched for them in vain. They had been destroyed so utterly as to leave no trace. The queen with her own hand had cast three splendid jewels, worth more than the average income of her middle class subjects, into the blaze. Pearls have not since been kept on the royal writing table.

How to Prevent Railroad Collisions.

A most wonderful invention is reported from Vienna. An Austrian engineer has, it is said, designed a truck to run before every railway train, being maintained always at a fixed (but adjustable) distance in front by the force of an electric current transmitted along the metals from a dynamo on the engine. The current is conducted through mercury contained in glass tubes on the pilot-truck. If, therefore, the truck comes into collision the tubes are broken and the contact consequently destroyed. The interruption of the current instantly and automatically applies the breaks on the following train. It is claimed by the inventor that two expresses, fitted with this system, might with impunity be set to run full tilt at each other. The collision of their pilot-trucks would arrest the progress of both trains before they could meet. The element of human fallibility is accordingly entirely eliminated, and drivers may dash through a whole series of danger-signals without risk, being automatically arrested the moment they reach the spot that is really dangerous.

Miss Kate Drexel, who recently became a nun, has many friends in Washington. They say that Miss Drexel is very ambitious and does not intend to bury herself alive by any means. On the contrary, she expects to become the head of a new religious order of nuns, whose work will be confined exclusively to the Indian and negro races.

When Si Julian Pauncefote's handsome daughters were in New York a Fifth avenue girl ventured to inquire where they obtained their blooming complexions. "Eat heartily and walk ten miles a day is the recipe," replied one of the young ladies.

THE G. A. R. QUILT DRAWING.

The G. A. R. supper Tuesday evening was a rouser. The weather was awful. For that reason everybody thought no one would be there, so they considered it their duty to attend, and as a result everybody went. The tables were crowded for at least two hours, and the hall was more than crowded. After refreshments were over, then came the drawing for the silk quilt. It was a beautiful silk patch work quilt, worth at a moderate estimate $50. The tickets were all placed in a pitcher, and the drawing was conducted by a committee selected on the spot. The last number drawn took the prize, which was held by Mrs. W. H. Birdsall. Lightning struck fearfully near the postoffice. Loana Stacy held ticket No. 196, Will Ingersoll had 198, and 197, Mrs. Birdsall's ticket, took the quilt. The entire receipts of the evening exceeded $80.

THE MISSIONARY CONCERT.

The missionary concert given at the M. E. church last evening was quite largely attended and a very interesting program was presented. Mrs. J. R. A delicious holiday flavor pervades every page of the Christmas number of the Ladies Home Journal. Never has a better number of this wonderful domestic magazine been issued. Will Carleton opens the feast with a beautifully illustrated full-page poem, Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney and Maude Howe supply the novels, while Katherine B. Foot begins a strong Christmas story which W. L. Taylor illustrates. Theodore R. Davis gives the best glimpse inside the White House and the state dinners given under several administrations we have as yet read. Then follows a perfect wealth of suggestions for Christmas dinners, women's fashions, and holly decorations for the home. To be surprised what a truly perfect magazines can be given for almost nothing, let any one of our readers send 10 cents for this number of the Ladies Home Journal. The address is 435 Arch St. Philadelphia, Pa.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD.

TECUMSEH, MICH., DEC. 12, 1889

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

It rained last Tuesday.

The December term of the Circuit Court began last Tuesday.

Joe Robbins will help S. P. Hosmer during the holiday season.

Frank Allen, of Toledo, was in town Tuesday visiting old friends.

Mrs. Truman McKinney, of Chicago is visiting old Tecumseh friends.

Mrs. Jennie Bangs entertained a pleasant surprise party Monday night.

A number of Tecumseh ladies attended the Episcopal Fair at Clinton yesterday.

Joseph Collins, of South Raisin, was in town Tuesday and gave the HERALD a call.

Go to Anderson & Co's for Goat and Wolf Robes, Bed Blankets and Carpet Sweepers.

John Temple is fixing over and enlarging his family residence which will add very much to it's convenience and comfort.

The overhauling process is about finished at Updyke's meat market and the change made will be a great improvement.

Henry Jones is now fairly settled in his new quarters on the James corner, where he would be pleased to see all his old friends.

The Ladies Social of the Universalist church will meet at Mrs. Judge Stacy's, Friday, Dec. 13. Supper from 4 to 7. All invited.

Interest in billiards is reviving, and Keyser & Kennedy are fitting up the room over their saloon into a billiard hall. They will have six tables.

The comedy farce, "A Huge Joke," may be classified as a dramatic gem. The performance is remarkably pure in tone. Laughable to a painful degree and interesting throughout.—Gazette and Bulletin, Williamsport, Pa.

Mrs. M. E. Hause advertises a book entitled "Tokology" in our local notices. It is a work which every lady should buy and read. The salient features of the work are enumerated in the notice.

Miss Nettie Southworth, having opened dress making rooms over Anderson & Co's. dry goods store, wishes to inform the public that she has been a number of years in the business and guarantees satisfaction, also that she uses the Kellogg system.

The Forum is the foremost review of living subjects and it has more authoritative contributors than any other periodical, including nearly 300 of the ablest writers and most distinguished workers on both sides of the Atlantic. The price of The Forum is $5.00 per year. We have made special arrangements whereby we can furnish the HERALD and The Forum for $5.50.

We got a letter from Lon Chapman the other day. He and Mrs. Chapman arrived at Grand Rapids safe and sound and were met by their sons Silas and Vincent. The next day they took possession of the house which Silas had rented for them, and we suppose they are nicely settled by this time.

The following are the new officers of Tecumseh Lodge, No. 69 F. & A. M.:

W. M.—J. H. Smith.
S. W.—P. S. McKinnon.
J. W.—Jno F. Wilson.
Treasurer—T. D. Marks.
Sec.—A. James.
S. D.—B. J. Garlinghouse.
J. D.—T. R. Kyle.
Stewards—O. Q. Jones, Jas Aten.
Tyler—J. I. Werner.

Dr. H. L. Stewart has lately added to his household furniture an elegant upright piano of the Boardman & Gray manufacture. It was purchased of the Whitney & Currier Co., of Toledo, through M. P. Brown, their local agent. The Doctor visited the company's warerooms in Toledo where he could compare the Boardman & Gray with the Steinway and other noted makes, but he chose the former in preference to all others.

Beers Post No. 140 has chosen the following officers for the coming year:

P. C.—A. P. Coddington.
S. V. C.—M. F McClure.
J. V. C.—Chas E. Barry.
Q. M.—Geo Van Tine.
Chaplin—Rev. J. S. Joslyn.
O. of D.—B. J. Bond.
O. of G.—Geo Chidester.
Sergt.—Horace Burger.
Delegates to State Encampment—Jas Ingersoll, Will Muir, Geo Van Tine.

Mme. Kellogg recently offered Mrs. H. S. Russell several general agencies having her rooms in some of our larger cities. This was a complete surprise to Mrs. Russell, but, we believe, a deserved compliment to one who has successfully taught in our midst the Kellogg system of cutting and fitting garments. Mrs. Russell will be in Tecumseh a few days soon and any who have been thinking about instruction had better decide to learn the system at that time. A better opportunity will not present itself, as she leaves for her new field soon after New Years.

"A Huge Joke", Friday, Dec. 20.

Dr. L. G. North visited Adrian last Tuesday.

D. W. Clark was taken seriously ill yesterday.

Burt Howard is the latest connection with the C. T. line.

Buy your underwear of Anderson & Co. and save money.

Delos LeBaron, of Toledo, was in town the first of the week.

Elwood Comfort and wife started for Baxter Springs, Kan., last Monday.

Yesterday Mr. and Mrs. Chas Moody buried their infant child only a few days old.

The remains of Luther Howland, of Brooklyn, were brought here for burial last Tuesday.

John Thompson, the greatest living comedian will appear at the Opera House on Friday evening, Dec. 20.

We make several additions this week to our club list which our readers should examine and make a note of.

The Free Methodist Society started a series of protracted meetings in the Morrison building, corner Logan and R. R. sts., last evening.

Those wishing their pianos tuned next week will please leave notice at Brown's Art Gallery. The Whitney & Currier Co., Toledo, Ohio.

The New York Weekly World is now one of the very best of the metropolitan weeklies. It is ably edited and conducted in a fair, independent spirit. Clubbed with the HERALD for $2.00.

The Ladies Aid Society of the M. E. Church will hold their regular monthly meeting in the church parlors on Wed., Dec. 18. Business meeting at 4 o'clock. Supper from 5:30 to 6:30, by Mrs. S. M. Smith's committee.

The Dairy World is a monthly publication of much merit. Its title indicates its character and every farmer who makes butter to sell should take it. It will be clubbed with the HERALD for $2.00 per year.

John Thompson is coming. His battery is "A Huge Joke." We want to get chock full of it. Don't let up on us John. All who have tears to shed, prepare to shed them. If you see us crying, don't let up, keep right on. Opera House, Dec. 20.

The chicken pie supper at the M. E. church last evening capped the climax. The rooms were packed and the tables overrun. The supply of chicken pie was entirely exhausted and the committee was obliged to stop the sale of tickets. Was it the missionary business or the chicken pie that drew the crowd? Perhaps it was a combination of both.

"Well, Scove," said a friend of ours last Monday, "how does it happen that a country newspaper office like yours can turn out such a mammoth paper as you issued last week?" "There is no secret about it sir, at all. In the first place I have the material to work with, and in the second place I keep workmen in my employ who know how to use it. That tells the story."

The Young People's Society of the M. E. church issued last week the first number of a neat four page sheet called the Epworth Chronicle. It is designed to be an organ for church news, and will be published monthly, if the enterprise receives sufficient encouragement. It is a fine specimen of typographical excellence, and shows the capabilities of the HERALD job rooms in that direction.

C. J. Woolley, the well known piano man, for many years tuner for Whitney & Currier, of Toledo, has severed all connection with that house, and will visit Tecumseh as usual, tuning and repairing pianos and reed organs. Mr. Woolly is special agent for the Kroeger pianos of New York. He will be in Tecumseh on the 16th, to remain one week. His address is 234 Truth street, Toledo, Ohio. Telephone No. 1141.

Mr. Peter W. Adams, of Philadelphia came all the way to Lansing for a bride, the wedding taking place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Kennedy, Lyndon Ave. west, Wednesday, their daughter, Minnie C., becoming Mrs. Adams, and the Rev. J. E. Weed tying the matrimonial knot.

The above is clipped from the Lansing Republican of last Friday. Both the groom and bride are well known in this vicinity where they spent most of their lives. The Herald extends its congratulations and wishes them a pleasant voyage down the river of life.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year by the K. of H. lodge at their meeting held Monday night:

D.—H. W. Stevens.
V. D.—J. F. Bowen.
A. D.—M. E. Conklin.
Rept.—D. T. Hall.
F. R.—C. A. Slayton.
Treasurer—Fred Rosacrans.
Chap.—A. P. Coddington.
Guide—W. C. Jordan.
Guardian—S. W. Bordine.
Sergt.—Henry Mensing.

Joe Robbins is moving into one of Tiffany's houses on Chicago street.

The frame of the new M. E. parsonage is being placed in position, this week.

The HERALD office turned out the heaviest six days' work last week in the whole history of the establishment.

LeRoy Blood, of Lansing, is always a little ahead of his neighbors. We received his remittance, on Tuesday, for next year's HERALD.

John Whitenack is still a very sick man, but his symptoms are more favorable this week and the family now have strong hopes of his recovery.

The officers of the Southern Michigan Poultry Association met in Tecumseh, last Tuesday afternoon, to block out their premium list and perfect arrangements for the January exhibition. The present indications point to an excellent show.

Mrs. L. E. Ogden died, at Charlotte, on Sunday night last, of brain fever. During her brief residence here she had gathered many warm friends, who will be greatly shocked at her sudden demise.

A grand Christmas party will be given at Armory hall, in this village, on Tuesday evening, December 24th. Music will be furnished by the new Tecumseh orchestra. The bill is placed at the modest figure of fifty cents, and the committee confidently look for a large attendance.

Arrangements are being made for a grand Christmas party at the opera house, Wednesday night, December 25. Tony Leon's celebrated orchestra of Toledo has been engaged to furnish music, and no pains will be spared by the committee to make this the most enjoyable event of the season.

We are receiving many compliments for our holiday supplement of last week, and this week's issue is better than last. Some of the cards with a "blind leader," this week disclose the name of the firm taking the space. There are also several changes of cards. People will miss it, who fail to read the entire sheet.

The dedication of the Chicago Auditorium on Monday evening was a grand affair. President Harrison was there and made a brief address, and Adelina Patti sang two selections. An original cantata was sung by a chorus of five hundred voices. It is the largest and grandest operatic building in the world and cost three millions.

THE LEADER GONE.

Jefferson Davis, President of the Southern Confederacy, Is Dead.

He Passed Peacefully Away at the Home of a Friend in New Orleans—Scenes at the Death Bed—His Eventful Life.

ENTERED INTO REST.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 6.—Jefferson Davis, ex-President of the Confederate States, died at the residence of his life-long friend, J. U. Payne, at 12:45 o'clock this morning. From the beginning of his fatal illness Mr. Davis had insisted that his case was nearly or quite hopeless. Shortly before 6 o'clock in the evening Mr. Davis was attacked by a severe congestive chill, followed by a high fever, and from that moment to the moment of his death the history of his case was that of a gradual sinking.

By 11:30 o'clock there were assembled in the death-chamber Mrs. Davis, Drs. Chaille and Bickham, Associate Justice and Mrs. Fenner, Miss Nannie Smith, grand-niece of the dying ex-President, and Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Farrar. More and more feeble became his respirations till they passed into silence and then the watchers knew that the silver cord had been loosed and the golden bowl broken. The end was peaceful and without pain.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 7.—The expression of sorrow among the people over the death of Jefferson Davis is as sincere as it is general. Friday when the news of his death spread throughout the city flags were suspended at half-mast from all the city and State buildings, newspaper offices, banks and insurance companies. It has been suggested that Governor Nicholls issue a proclamation setting apart a day of mourning, and that the people of the city dress their houses with crape out of respect for the distinguished dead. A movement to decorate residences with mourning colors has already been made and is meeting with favor throughout all parts of the city.

The funeral will take place Wednesday noon, Bishop Galleher, of the Episcopal church, conducting the ceremony. The body will be temporarily interred at Metaric Cemetery, in the tomb of the Veteran Association of the Army of Northern Virginia.

Mrs. Davis has been prostrated by the death of her husband. Her children, Miss Winfield Davis, "the daughter of the Confederacy," and Mrs. Hayes, of Colorado City, were not in the city. The former is in Paris and the latter was detained at Fort Worth, Tex., while on her journey to her father's bedside. Dispatches from Fort Worth and Paris report that the children were overcome with grief upon receipt of the news of their father's death.

[Jefferson Davis was born June 3, 1808, in that part of Christian County, Ky., which now forms Todd County. In 1824 he was appointed by President Monroe to the United States Military Academy, from which he graduated in 1828, and was assigned to the First Infantry. He served in the Black Hawk war of 1831-'32. June 30, 1835, he resigned, eloped with the daughter of Zachary Taylor, then a Colonel in the army, and settled near Vicksburg, Miss., as a cotton planter. In 1845 he was sent to Congress. In June, 1846, he resigned to accept the Colonelcy of the First Mississippi Volunteers, and at once moved to reinforce General Taylor on the Rio Grande. May 27, 1847, his regiment was ordered home. In August he went to the United States Senate, where he became a zealous advocate of State rights. In 1851 he resigned his seat to become candidate for Governor of Mississippi, but was defeated at the polls. A year later he supported Franklin Pierce for the Presidency, and as a reward for his labors was made Secretary of War. At the close of President Pierce's term he was again sent to the Senate and became the Democratic leader. January 10, 1861, he made a speech asserting the right of secession and urging that the garrison be withdrawn from Fort Sumter. January 24, being officially informed that Mississippi had seceded January 9, he withdrew from the Senate and went to his home. He was at once appointed Commander-in-Chief of the army of Mississippi, but February 18, 1861, he resigned that office to accept the Presidency of the Confederate States. Soon after this the capital was removed from Montgomery to Richmond, and Mr. Davis removed thither. November 10, 1861, he was formally elected President for six years and was duly inaugurated February 22, 1862. Before that he had held the office by virtue of appointment by the Provisional Congress. December 23, 1862, he issued a proclamation in retaliation for the emancipation proclamation of President Lincoln. In this he declared that General B. F. Butler was a felon, and ordered that all commissioned officers serving under him, as well as all serving with slaves, should be treated as "robbers and criminals deserving death."

When Atlanta was evacuated, September 1, 1864, Mr. Davis visited Georgia and tried to raise the spirits of the people there, but without much success. In January, 1865, he sent three commissioners to treat with the United States Government, but their mission was unsuccessful. In his last message to the Congress—March 13, 1865—Mr. Davis asserted that the Confederacy had ample means to meet all emergencies, and April 2, less than a month later, he was obliged to evacuate Richmond.

He was captured near Irwinsville, Ga., May 10, and taken to Fort Monroe. May 8, 1866, he was indicted for treason by a grand jury in the United States District Court for Virginia, sitting at Norfolk under Judge Underwood. May 13, 1867, he was admitted to bail in the sum of $100,000. He was never brought to trial, a nolle prosequi being entered by the Government December, 1868. In 1879 Mrs. Dorsey, of Beauvoir, Miss., bequeathed him her estate, and there he has since resided, occasionally appearing to make a speech in some Southern city. He was excepted from a bill restoring political rights to those who took part in the rebellion and excepted from a bill pensioning veterans of the Mexican war, it being charged that he was responsible for the horrors of Andersonville.]

FROM WASHINGTON.

News of General Interest from the National Capital.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—The total collections of internal revenue for the first four months of the present fiscal year were $46,783,350, an increase of $4,039,364 as compared with the corresponding period of last year. The increase on spirits alone was $2,398,160.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—The annual report of Secretary of the Treasury Windom was sent to Congress yesterday. It says the ordinary revenues from all sources for the fiscal year ended June, 30, 1889, were $387,059,658.84, and the expenditures were $281,996,615. The revenues for the fiscal year 1890 were estimated at $385,000,000, and the expenditures at $296,000,000, leaving a surplus of $89,000,000; revenues for 1891, $385,000,000; expenditures, $292,371,404. During the fiscal year 1889 there was applied to the redemption of the public debt, $90,979,427. The cash balance in the Treasury was $71,484,042.39. Bonds had been redeemed to the extent of $50,465,485.49, leaving the available cash on hand November 1, 1889, $45,835,762.40. The amount estimated for pensions for the year 1889 was $76,312,400, and the estimates for the same purpose submitted for 1891 are $98,587,252.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The annual report of Attorney-General Miller shows that during the year 2,267 civil suits and 14,588 criminal prosecutions were terminated, and there were pending 2,950 of the former and 7,812 of the latter class. Mr. Miller recommends that provision be made for a United States penitentiary and a United States reformatory, the latter for the confinement of the milder class of criminals.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—President Harrison, Vice-President Morton, Assistant Postmaster-General Clarkson and others left yesterday afternoon for Chicago to attend the opening of the Auditorium building on Monday next. Mrs. Harrison did not accompany the President, owing to the condition of her sister, Mrs. Scott-Lord, who is seriously ill.

EMIN BEY'S INJURIES.

Stanley Says His Condition Is in the Greatest Degree Critical.

LONDON, Dec. 7.—Henry M. Stanley, who arrived at Zanzibar Friday, communicates to Mr. Burdett-Coutts by cable that the condition of Emin Pasha is in the greatest degree critical, and that the German naval surgeons who have seen him declare that only twenty in a hundred such cases ever recover, this percentage including all the cases of men in the vigor of life.

The Farmers' Alliance.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 9.—The National Farmers' Alliance and the Farmers' and Laborers' Union adjourned sine die Saturday night. Each professes great satisfaction regarding the work accomplished and particularly regarding the plan of federation. The name of the combined federation is the National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union. The body will meet at Jacksonville, Fla., next December, the date to be fixed by the executive committee.

The Clearing-Houses.

NEW YORK, Dec. 9.—The exchanges at the leading clearing-houses in the United States during the past week aggregated $1,335,817,304, against $992,011,863 the previous week. As compared with the corresponding week of 1888 the increase amounted to 8.2.

In Ashes.

LOCKPORT, N. Y., Dec. 9.—Saxton & Thompson's flour mill, having a capacity for 1,000 barrels a day, and one of the largest in the State, burned Sunday morning. Total loss of between $150,000 and $300,000; partially insured.

Absconder and Forger.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—Silcott, the clerk of the National House of Representatives who recently fled with $72,000 of the funds in the keeping of the Sergeant-at-Arms, is said to be guilty also of wholesale forgeries.

A Leak in Cleveland's Treasury.

CLEVELAND, O., Dec. 9.—It has been discovered that between $300,000 and $500,000 have been diverted from the city treasury in the shape of bogus commissions and expenses paid in negotiating bonds.

Sad Fate of Dr. Peters' Party.

ZANZIBAR, Dec. 9.—Later advices confirm the report of the massacre of Dr. Peters' party. The camp was encircled by 1,200 Somalis at midnight and not a single member of the expedition escaped.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of a certain mortgage bearing date March 8, A.D., 1881, made by George L. Bidwell and his wife, Frances Bidwell to William J. Cocker and Isabella M. Cocker; Which said mortgage was on the Ninth day of March, A. D., 1881, duly recorded in the office of Register of Deeds for Lenawee County, Michigan, in Liber 100 of mortgages on page 693; And which said mortgage was afterward, to wit, on the 12th day of April, A.D., 1881, duly assigned to Birdsey J. Bidwell, by said William J. Cocker and Isabella M. Cocker, which deed of assignment was on the 29th day of April A.D., 1889, duly recorded in the office of Register of Deeds for Lenawee County aforesaid in Liber 118 of mortgages on page 577; by which default the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. And whereas there is at this date claimed to be due and unpaid as principal and interest on the said mortgage the sum of Five Hundred and Ninety-two and 36-100 Dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law or in equity to collect the same. Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale and the statutes of the state of Michigan in such case made and provided, for the purpose of realizing the money now as aforesaid due and owing on said mortgage, together with the interest to accrue thereon and costs and charges of this foreclosure, including an attorney fee of Twenty-five Dollars as provided by law and stipulated for in said mortgage, I shall on the Twenty-seventh day of January, A.D., 1890, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at the east front door of the court house in the city of Adrian, in said Lenawee County, (that being the place where the circuit court for said county is holden) sell at public vendue to the highest bidder all that parcel of land situate in the city of Adrian, Lenawee County, Michigan, described as follows, viz.: All the land of the parties of the first part situate on the "Flats," (so called) in said city, bounded on the easterly limit by Winter street, on the south by the northern boundary line of Remington's addition, on the west by College avenue, (or Water street, as is designated on Willits & Bird's Wall map of 1871) and on the north by the southern boundary line of residence lots, said lots fronting on Church and Winter streets in said city, being in all Three (3) acres of land, more or less; and being same land conveyed in part to said George L. Bidwell by Andrew Clement by deeds recorded book 52, folios 248, 249, and book 52, folios 472, 473, and in part convey to George L. Bidwell by Langford G. Berry by deed recorded in book 52, folios 250, 251, and in part by William K. Choate by deed of record in book 53, folios 116, 117; and in part by deed from Nathan Choate, of record in book 53, folios 115, 116. Books refered to being part of Lenawee County records.

CLEOPATRA.

Being an Account of the Fall and Vengeance of Harmachis, the Royal Egyptian,

AS SET FORTH BY HIS OWN HAND.

By H. Rider Haggard,

Author of "King Solomon's Mines," "She," "Allan Quatermain," Etc., Etc., Etc.

Illustrated by NICHOLL, after CATON WOODVILLE and GREIFFENHAGEN.

"Hush!" I said. "What is that? I hear a sound."

Charmion ran to the door, and gazing down the long, dark passage, listened. In a moment she came back, her finger on her lips. "It is the Queen," she whispered, hurriedly; "the Queen who mounts the stair alone. I heard her bid Iris leave her. I may not be found thus alone with thee at this hour; it hath a strange look, and she may suspect somewhat. What wants she here? Where can I hide me?" I glanced around. At the further end of the chamber was a heavy curtain that hid a little place built in the thickness of the wall which I used for the storage of rolls and instruments.

"Haste thee—there!" I said, and she glided behind the curtain, which swung back and covered her. Then I thrust the fatal scroll of death into the bosom of my robe and bent me o'er the mystic chart. Presently I heard the sweep of woman's robes, and there came a low knock upon the door.

"Enter, whoever thou art!" I said.

The latch lifted, and Cleopatra swept in, royally arrayed, her dark hair hanging about her and the sacred snake of royalty glistening on her brow.

"Of a truth, Harmachis," she said, with a sigh, as she sank into a seat, "the path to Heaven is hard to climb! Ah! I am weary, for those stairs are many. But I was minded, my astronomer, to see thee in thy haunts."

"I am honored overmuch, O Queen!" I said, bowing low before her.

"Art thou now! And yet that dark face of thine hath a somewhat angry look. Thou art too young and handsome for this dry trade, Harmachis. Why, I vow, thou hast cast my wreath of roses down amidst thy rusty tools! Kings would have cherished that wreath along with their choicest diadems, O Harmachis! and thou dost throw it down as a thing of no account! Why, what a man thou art! But stay; what is this? A lady's kerchief, by Isis! Nay, now my Harmachis, how came this here? Are our poor kerchiefs also instruments of thy high art? Oh, fie, fie!—have I caught thee, then? Art thou, indeed, a fox?"

"Nay, most Royal Cleopatra, pay!" I said, turning; for the kerchief which had fallen from Charmion's neck had an awkward look. "I know not, indeed, how the frippery came here. Perchance some of the women who keep the chamber may have let it fall."

"Ah! so—so!" she said, dryly, and still laughing like a rippling brook. "Yes, surely, the slave women who keep chambers own such toys as this, of the very finest silk, worth twice its weight in gold, and broidered, too, in many colors. Why, myself I should not shame to wear it! Of a truth it seems familiar to my sight." And she threw it around her neck and smoothed the ends with her white hand. "But there, 'tis a thing unholy in thine eyes that the scarf of thy beloved should rest upon my poor breast. Take it, Harmachis; take it and hide it in thy bosom, nigh thy heart, indeed!"

I took the accursed thing, and muttering what I may not write, stepped on to the giddy platform whence I watched the stars. Then crushing it into a ball, I threw it to the winds of heaven.

Thereat the lovely Queen laughed once more.

"Nay, think now," she cried. "What would the lady say could she see her love-gage thus cast to all the world? Mayhap, Harmachis, thou wouldst deal thus with my wreath also? See, the roses fade; cast it off," and, stooping, she took up the wreath and gave it to me.

For a moment, so vexed was I, I had a mind to take her at her word and send the wreath to join the kerchief. But I thought better of it.

"Nay," I said more softly, "it is a Queen's gift, and I will keep it," and as I spoke, methought I saw the curtain shake. Often since have I sorrowed over those simple words.

"Gracious thanks be to the King of Love for this small mercy," she answered, looking at me strangely. "Now, enough of wit; come forth upon this balcony—tell me of the mystery of those stars of thine. For ever did I love the stars, that are so pure and bright and cold, and so far away from all our fevered troubling. There would I wish to dwell, rocked on the dark bosom of the night, and losing the little sense of self as I gazed forever on the countenance of yon sweet-eyed space. Nay—who can tell, Harmachis?—perhaps those very stars partake even of our substance, and, linked to us by Nature's invisible chain, do, indeed, draw our destiny with them as they roll. What says the Greek fable of him who became a star? Perchance it hath truth, for yonder tiny sparks may be the souls of men, but grown more purely bright and placed in happy rest to illume the turmoil of their mother earth. Or are they lamps hung high in the heavenly vault that night by night some Godhead, whose wings are darkness, touches with his immortal fire, so that they leap out in answering flame? Give me somewhat of thy wisdom and open these wonders to me, O my servant, for I have little knowledge. Yet my heart is large, and I fain would fill it, for I have the wit could I but find the teacher."

AND WHILE I SPOKE.

Thereon, being right glad to find footing on a safer shore, and marveling somewhat to learn that Cleopatra had a place for lofty thoughts, I spoke and told her willingly such things as are lawful. I told her how the sky is a liquid mass pressing round the earth and resting on the elastic pillars of the air, and how above is the heavenly ocean. Next I [illegible] the planets float like ships as they rush upon their radiant way. Many things I told her, and among them how through the certain, never-ceasing movement of the orbs of light the planet that was called Dongou (Venus) when she showed as the morning star, became the planet Bonou when she came as the sweet Star of Eve. [The motion of the planets appears to have been familiar to the Egyptians]. And, while I stood and spoke watching the stars, she sat, her hands clasped upon her knee, and watched my face.

"Ah!" she broke in at length, "and so Venus is to be seen both in the morning and the evening sky. Well, of a truth, she is everywhere, though best she loves the night. But thou lovest not that I should use these Latin names to thee. Come, we will talk in the ancient tongue of Khem, which I know right well; the first, mark thou, of all the Lagidæ am I who know it. And now," she went on, speaking in mine own tongue, but with a little foreign accent that did but make her talk more sweet, "enough of stars, for, when all is said, they are but fickle things, and perchance may even now be storing up an evil hour for thee or me, or for us both together. Not but what I love to hear thee speak of them, for then thy face doth lose that gloomy cloud of thought wherewith thou drapest it and grows quick and human. Harmachis, thou art too young for such a solemn trade; methinks that I must find thee a better. Youth comes but once; why waste it in these musings? Time is it to think when we can no longer act. Tell me how old art thou, Harmachis?"

"I am six and twenty years, O Queen," I answered, "for I was born in the first month of Shomou, in the summer season, and on the third day of the month."

"Why, we are of an age even to day," she cried, "for I, too, have six and twenty years, and I, too, was born on the third day of the first month of Shomou. Well, this may we say—those who beggt us need have no shame. For if I be the fairest woman in Egypt, methinks, Harmachis, that there is in Egypt no man more fair and strong than thou, aye, or more learned. Born on the same day, why, 'tis manifest that we were destined to stand together, I as the Queen, and thou, perchance, Harmachis, as one of the chief pillars of my throne, and thus to work each other's weal."

"Or, perchance, each other's woe," I answered, looking up; for her sweet speeches stung my ears, and brought more color to my face than I loved that she should see therein.

"Nay, never talk of woe. Be seated here by me, Harmachis, and let us talk, not as Queen and subject, but as friend to friend. Thou wast angered with me at the feast to-night—was it not so?—in that I mocked thee with yonder wreath? Nay, 'twas but a jest. Didst thou know how heavy is the task of monarchs, and how wearisome are their hours, thou wouldst not be wroth because I lit my dullness with a jest. Oh, they weary me, those princes and those nobles, and those stiff-necked, pompous Romans. To my face they vow themselves my slaves, and behind my back they mock me and proclaim me the servant of their triumvirate, or their empire, or their republic, as the wheel of fortune turns, and each rises on its round! There is never a man among them—nothing but fools, parasites and puppets—never a man since with their cowardly daggers they slew that Cæsar whom all the world in arms was not strong enough to tame. And I must play off one against the other, if, may be, by so doing I can keep Egypt from their grip. And for reward, what? Why, this is my reward; that all men speak ill of me and—I know it—my subjects hate me! Yea, I believe that woman though I be, they would murder me could they find a means!" And she paused, covering her eyes with her hand, and it was well, for her words pierced me so that I shrank there upon the seat beside her.

"They think ill of me, I know it; and call me wanton, who have never stepped aside save once, when I loved the greatest man of all the world, and at the touch of love my passion flamed indeed, but burnt with a hallowed flame. These ribald Alexandrians do swear that I poisoned Ptolemy, my brother—whom, most unnaturally, the Roman Senate would have forced on me, his sister, as a husband! but it is false; he sickened and died of fever. And even so they say that I would slay Arsinoe, my sister—who, indeed, would slay me!—but that, too, is false! Though she will have none of me, I love my sister. Yea, they all think ill of me without a cause; even thou dost think ill of me, Harmachis. Oh, Harmachis, before thou judgest, think what a thing is envy!—that foul sickness of the mind which makes the jaundiced eye of pettiness to see all things distraught—to read evil written on the open face of good, and find impurity in the whitest virgin's soul. Think what a thing it is, Harmachis, to be set on high above the gaping crowd of knaves who hate thee for thy fortune and thy wit; who gnash their teeth and shoot the arrows of their lies from the cover of their own obscureness, whence they have no wings to soar; and whose hearts' quest it is to drag down thy nobility to the level of the groundling and the fool!

"Be not, then, ready to think evil of the great, whose every word and act is searched for error by a million angry eyes, and whose most tiny fault is trumpeted by a thousand throats, till the world shakes with the echoes of their sin! Say not: 'Tis thus, 'tis certainly thus'—say, rather: 'Nay, may it not be otherwise? Have we heard aright? Did she this thing of her own will?' Judge gently, O Harmachis, as wert thou me thou wouldst be judged. Remember that a Queen is never free. She is, indeed, but the point and instrument of those forces politic, wherewith are graven the iron books of history. O, Harmachis! be thou my friend—my friend and counsellor!—my friend whom I can trust indeed!—for here, in this crowded court, I am more utterly alone than any soul that breathes about the corridors. But thee I trust; there is faith written in those quiet eyes, and I am minded to lift thee high. Harmachis, I can no longer bear my solitude of mind—I must find one with whom I may commune and speak that which lies within my heart. I have faults, I know it; but I am not all unworthy of thy faith, for there is good grain among the evil seed. Say, Harmachis, wilt thou take pity on my loneliness and befriend me who have lovers, courtiers, slaves, dependents, more thick than I can count, but never one single friend?" and she leaned toward me, touching me lightly and gazed on me with her wonderful blue eyes.

I was overcome; thinking of the morrow night, shame and sorrow smote me. I, her friend!—I, whose assassin dagger lay against my breast! I bent my head, and a sob or a groan, I know not which, burst from the agony of my heart.

But Cleopatra, thinking only that I was moved beyond myself by the surprise of her graciousness, smiled sweetly, and said:

"It grows late. To-morrow night, when thou bringest the auguries, will we speak again, O my friend Harmachis, and thou shalt answer me." And she gave me her hand to kiss. Scarce knowing what I did, I kissed it, and in another moment she was gone.

But I stood in the chamber, gazing after her like one asleep.

CHAPTER XIII.

OF THE WORDS AND JEALOUSY OF CHARMION; OF THE LAUGHTER OF HARMACHIS; OF THE MAKING READY FOR THE DEED OF BLOOD; AND OF THE MESSAGE OF THE OLD WIFE ATOUA.

STOOD still, plunged in thought. Then, by hazard, as it were, I took up the wreath of roses and looked thereon. How long I stood so I know not, but when next I lifted my eyes they fell upon the form of Charmion, whom, indeed, I had altogether forgotten. And though at the moment I thought but little of it, I noted vaguely that she was flushed as though with anger, and that she beat her foot upon the floor.

"Oh, is it thou, Charmion," I said. "What ails thee? Art thou cramped with standing so long within thy hiding place? Why didst thou not slip hence when Cleopatra led me to the balcony?"

"Where is my kerchief?" she asked, shooting an angry glance at me. "I let fall my broidered kerchief."

"The kerchief! Why, didst thou not see? Cleopatra twitted me about it, and I flung it from the balcony."

"Yea, I saw," answered the girl, "I saw but too well. Thou didst fling away my kerchief, but the wreath of roses—that thou wouldst not fling away. It was 'a Queen's gift,' forsooth, and therefore, the Royal Harmachis, the Priest of Isis, the chosen of the Gods, the crowned Pharaoh wed to the weal of Khem, cherished it and saved it. But my kerchief, stung by the laughter of that light Queen, he cast away!"

"What meanest thou?" I asked, astonished at her bitter tone. "I read not thy riddles."

"What mean I?" she answered, tossing up her head, and showing the white curves of her throat. "Nay, I mean haught or all, take it as thou wilt. Wouldst know what I mean, Harmachis, my cousin and my Lord?" she went on in a hard, low voice. "Behold, I will tell thee—thou art in danger of the great offense. This Cleopatra hath cast her fatal wiles about thee, and thou goest near to loving her, Harmachis—to loving her whom to-morrow thou must slay! Ay, stand and stare at that wreath within thy hand—the wreath thou couldst not send to join my kerchief—sure Cleopatra wore it but to-night! The perfume of the hair of Cæsar's mistress—Cæsar's and others'—yet mingles with the odor of its roses! Now, prithee, Harmachis, how far didst thou carry the matter on yonder balcony?—for in that hole where I lay hid I could not hear or see. 'Tis a sweet spot for lovers, is it not?—ay, and a sweet night, too! Venus is surely in the right ascension!"

And all of this she said so quietly and in so soft and modest a way, though her words were not modest, and yet so bitterly, that every syllable cut me to the heart, and angered me till I could find no speech.

"Of a truth thou hast a wise economy," she went on, seeing her advantage; "to-night thou dost kiss the lips that to-morrow thou shalt still forever! 'Tis frugal dealing with the occasion of the moment; aye, worthy and honorable dealing!"

Then at last I broke forth. "Girl!" I cried, "how darest thou speak thus to me? Mindest thou who and what I am that thou looseth thy peevish gibes upon me?"

"I mind what it behooves thee to be," she answered quick. "What thou art, that I mind not now. Surely thou knowest alone—thou and Cleopatra!"

"What meanest thou?" I said. "Am I to blame if the Queen—"

"The Queen! What have we here? Pharaoh owns a Queen!"

"If Cleopatra wills to come hither of a night and talk—"

"Of stars, Harmachis—surely of stars and roses, and naught beside!"

After that I know not what I said; for, troubled as I was, the girl's bitter tongue and quiet way drove me well-nigh to madness. But this I know: I spoke so fiercely that she cowered before me as she had cowered before my uncle Sepa, when he rated her because of her Grecian garb. And as she wept then, so she wept now, only more passionately and with sobs.

At length I ceased, half ashamed, but still angry and smarting sorely. For even while she wept she could find a tongue to answer with—and a woman's shafts are sharp.

"Thou shouldst not speak to me thus!" she sobbed; "it's cruel—it is unmanly! But I forgot thou art a priest, not a man—except, mayhap, for Cleopatra!"

"What right hast thou?" I said. "What canst thou mean?"

"What right have I?" she asked, looking up, her dark eyes all aflood with tears that ran down her sweet face like the dew of morning down a lily's heart. "What right have I? O Harmachis! art thou blind? Dost thou not know by what right I speak thus to thee? Then must I tell thee? Well, 'tis the fashion in Alexandria! By that first and holy right of woman—by the right of the great love I bear thee, and which, it seems, thou hast no eyes to see—by the right of my glory and my shame. O, be not wroth with me, Harmachis, nor set me down as light, because the truth has at last burst from me; for I am not so. I am what thou wilt make me. I am the wax within the molder's hands, and as thou dost fashion me so shall I be. There breathes within me now a breath of glory blowing across the waters of my soul, that can waft me to ends more noble than ever I have dreamed afore, if thou wilt be my pilot and my guide. But if I lose thee, then lose I all that holds me from my worse self—and let shipwreck come! Thou knowest me not, Harmachis! thou canst not see how big a spirit struggles within this frail form of mine! To thee I am a girl, clever, wayward, shallow. But I am more! Show me thy loftiest thought and I will match it, the deepest puzzle of thy mind and I will make it clear. Of one blood are we, and love can ravel up our little difference and make us grow one indeed. One end we have, one land we love, one vow binds us both. Take me to thy heart, Harmachis, and set me by thee on the Double Throne, and I swear that I will lift thee higher than ever man has climbed. Reject me, and beware lest I pull thee down! And now, putting aside the cold delicacy of custom, stung thereto by what I saw of the arts of that lovely living falsehood, Cleopatra, which for pastime she doth practice on thy folly, I have spoken out my heart, and answer thou!" And she clasped her hands, and, drawing one pace nearer, gazed all trembling on my face.

For a moment I stood struck dumb, for the magic of her voice and the power of her speech, despite myself, had stirred me like the rush of music. Had I loved the woman doubtless she might have fired me with her flame; but I loved her not, and I could not play at passion. And so thought came, and with thought that laughing mood which is ever apt to fasten upon nerves strained to the point of breaking. In a flash, as it were, I bethought me of the way in which she had that very night forced the wreath of roses on my head. I thought of the kerchief and how I had flung it forth. I thought of Charmion in the little chamber watching what she held to be the arts of Cleopatra, and of her bitter speeches. Lastly, I thought of what my uncle Sepa would say of her could he see her now, and of the strange and tangled skein wherewith I was imneshed. I laughed aloud—the fool's laughter—that was my knell of ruin!

An Invariable Sign.

Swelling of ankles or feet when not due to rheumatism, Prof. DeCosta says, is always caused by a weak or diseased heart. So is shortness of breath, pain or uneasiness when lying on left side, smothering spells. The only cure is Dr. Miles' New Cure. Sold at Baker & Hall's.

The Echo is the weekly edition of the Detroit Evening News, and is a first-class family newspaper. Single subscriptions will be taken at this office for $1.00 and every subscriber will receive a copy of Munkacsy's famous picture "Christ before Pilate". Every renewal will be counted as a new subscription, and persons subscribing now will receive the December numbers of this year, free.

PILES! PILES! PILES!

Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment is the only sure cure for Blind, Bleeding or Itching Piles ever discovered. It never fails to cure old chronic cases of long standing.

Judge Coons, Maysville, Ky., says: "Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment cured me after years of suffering."

Judge Coffinbury, Cleveland, O., says: "I have found by experience that Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment gives immediate and permanent relief." Sold by J. J. Orr.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic researches, however, has proven this to be a fact, and result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to the applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet of this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 303 west King street, Toronto, Canada. [Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully.

VINEGAR BITTERS

Grandest Modern Discovery.

Triumph of Pharmacy.

The only true practical

ELIXIR OF LIFE AND HEALTH.

Is one that promotes digestion, improves the appetite, cleanses the liver, purifies the blood, and stimulates brain and nerves without injurious reaction, and one that may be taken alike by adult or infant. Profane compounds, made of vile rum or bad whiskey, sweetened or flavored, under the titles of bitters, tonics, &c., produce effects far worse than the disease for which they are taken.

Vinegar Bitters is a pure tonic, a nervine without being narcotic, a blood purifier without poison a liver tonic without purging, and above all, a life-giving stimulant without alcohol. The only medicine with such powers in the world.

A GENUINE TEMPERANCE BEVERAGE,

far surpassing alcohol in any shape as a tonic, and it might be called

LIQUID LIFE,

since it stimulates, invigorates and regulates digestion, nutrition, secretion, excretion, respiration, and all the functions whereby life is maintained—we literally take in vitality in spoonsful.

It is not too much to assert that the equal of Vinegar Bitters does not exist, and no counterpart or compound with similar virtues has ever been known.

CALIFORNIA,

if remarkable for nothing else, would be immortalized by the production of the medicinal fruits, roots and herbs of which this Bitters is composed. Many of them used by the Indians and the medical profession in the treatment of chills and fevers, rheumatism, catarrh consumption, neuralgia, headache, liver complaint, kidney disease, jaundice, gout, piles, boils, skin diseases, &c., &c., too numerous to mention, but easily understood when the action of the Bitters on the vital functions is remembered. The discovery was partly accidental but the present

PERFECT BITTERS IS THE RESULT OF SCIENCE.

Millions of sufferers have gratefully and gladly endorsed, during the past quarter of a century, the wonderful success of this

PHENOMINAL TONIC OF THE WORLD.

In order to meet every probable demand, two formulas of the same ingredients are now put up.

THE OLD STYLE IS STRONGER, SLIGHTLY BITTER AND MORE CATHARTIC.

THE NEW STYLE, PLEASANT TO THE TASTE AND EXPRESSLY ADAPTED TO DELICATE WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

REMEMBER,

There is no disease of low vitality, debility of functions, or nervous prostration for which

and its singular power over the lower organisms renders it the implacable foe of in malarial diseases cholera, consumption, internal diseases, &c., and so great is its power as a germicide that it is an

UNEQUALLED VERMIFUGE.

A book could be written of its virtues, and another of testimonials, but it is only necessary to remember its general action upon the liver, blood, brain and nerves, to realize its use in a majority of the ills that flesh is heir to, and that no family should ever be without a bottle of

HOLLOWAY HASH.

In spite of low prices, bad roads and other opposing circumstances, shipping continues active, oats, potatoes and hogs being the principal products that are exchanging hands, although milk, eggs and butter might be included in the list of exported articles. Among the names of exporters may be found Mr. Pratt of Blissfield, Mr. Sudborough, Mr. A. Hoxie and Mr. Philo Lossing. The latter had quite an interesting episode when driving his drove of hogs to the cars after weighing. The railroad fence having been taken down in several places for the convenience of other parties who failed to replace it, and Mr. Lossing being ignorant of the transaction deliberately drove the porkers in the rain over the neighboring farms and on the railroad with a freight train coming, before he fully realized the situation. But we think he realized everything before the unruly animals were safely lodged in the car; and right here belongs a compliment for the above-mentioned gentleman, for the only remark he was heard to make was, "somebody's neck ought to be wrung."

The rain on Tuesday interfered with the show, which was to have been held in the new hall, the building being rented before the arrival of chairs. Quite an enthusiastic and good-sized audience greeted the speakers on Thursday evening last, to rejoice over the completion of the building. The Glee Club furnished the music, while Mr. Levi Chase, Mr. Alex. Richards and Mr. Coonrod Lowe were the speakers.

Mr. L. B. Spencer has been rather indisposed, probably because of high living. Venison should be indulged in very temperately.

H. E. Wilson and brother arrived in town from Ohio last Friday.

Uncle Ned Broadbent came on his wedding trip down this way on Monday. Mrs. Ned will probably pay her visit on some future day, and will be gladly welcomed by the many friends of Uncle Ned, who were disappointed at not having a chance to get acquainted with her at this time. We congratulate Clinton on the gain—which is our loss—of one good citizen.

The Hash readers will rejoice with Mr. Frank Holder in the possession of a young son, who has recently taken up his abode in the family.

Mrs. Hugo Smith received notice on Wednesday morning of the death of her brother, Mr. Wm. Arnold, of Adrian.

A man who has practised medicine for 40 years, ought to know salt from sugar; read what he says:

TOLEDO O., Jan. 10, 1887.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co.—Gentlemen:—I have been in the general practice of medicine for almost forty years, and would say that in all my practice and experience have never seen a preparation that I could prescribe with as much confidence of success as I can Hall's Catarrah Cure, manufactured by you. Have prescribed it a great many times and its effect is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they would take it according to directions.

Yours Truly,
L. L. GORSUCH, M. D.
Office, 215 Summit St.

We will give $100 for any case of Catarrh that can not be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Taken internally.

Cancer of the Nose.

"My friend had cancer and my husband died of cancer. In 1875 a lump appeared on my nose, and from its appearance and rapid growth, I became alarmed with the idea that I, too, had cancer. I consulted my physician about it, and he gave me an ointment to put on it, when this did not relieve me, he then burnt it out, but the place would not heal. It gradually grew longer and worse, and I had fully made my mind up that I must die of cancer. Friends prevailed on me to try Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) This I finally consented to do. After taking a few bottles I was entirely cured. Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) cured me when the doctors and all other medicines failed." MRS. M. T. MABEN.

Woodbury, Hall County Texas.

REPUBLICAN AUTHORITY.

The first Congress during President Harrison's Administration will assemble at Washington this winter, and people will probably look to the New York Tribune for official interpretation of the policy of the Republican party at the National capital. Our metropolitan contemporary is especially identified with a Protective Tariff, pensions for Union veterans, and various other clauses in the Republican creed; and its endorsement, recently, as the official newspaper of the Republican clubs of the country makes it more than ever the principal National authority of the Republican party. Whatever else may be said of The Tribune, every one must concede that the paper is conducted with consummate ability. Its prospectus, printed in another column today, shows that it will spend a good deal of money during 1890 for matters that will be read with interest by men of every political faith. The reader is referred to The Tribune's own statement of them for further particulars. Some very eminent and brilliant names appear among its list of contributors. Prizes worth $2,440 are to be given away to those who raise clubs of subscribers, including a free trip to New York and entertainment in the city; and there are a great many new premiums for readers. A 20-page Catalogue has been prepared, which will be sent in return for a 2 cent stamp. The Weekly Tribune will be clubbed with the HERALD at $2.00

NEW YORK WEEKLY POST.

Thoroughly earnest work is being done in behalf of tariff reform by the New York Weekly Post, which holds that the time to discuss this economic question is now, rather than in the heat of a Presidential campaign. Every issue of the paper contains articles bearing upon some phase of the subject, together with questions by doubting readers, with answers by the editor, all tending to facilitate and simplify the discussion. The Post has been adopted by a number of clubs and other organizations as the best exponent of the subject, and its discussions are conducted in a spirit of fairness which entitle it to the respect of opponents, as well as advocates of the revision of a war tariff to adapt it to times of peace. The Post is compiling a directory of active tariff-reform organizations in the United States, and has already published one instalment of the list. The Weekly Post is a 12-page paper, and contains all the features requisite for a first-class general family journal. Price $1.00 per year. In combination with the HERALD at $2.00 per year. Sample copies free on request.

THE SUN FOR 1890.

Some people agree with The Sun's opinions about men and things, and some people don't; but everybody likes to get hold of the newspaper which is never dull and never afraid to speak its mind.

Democrats know that for twenty years The Sun has fought in the front line for Democratic principles, never wavering or weakening in its loyalty to the true interests of the party it serves with fearless intelligence and disinterested vigor. At times opinions have differed as to the best means of accomplishing the common purpose; it is not The Sun's fault if it has seen further into the millstone.

Eighteen hundred and ninety is the year that will probably determine the result of the Presidential election of 1892, and perhaps the fortunes of the Democracy for the rest of the century. Victory in 1892 is a duty, and the beginning of 1890 is the best time to start out in company with The Sun.

THE FORUM.

The contents of the Forum are, like the contents of a newspaper, so confined to subjects which demand present attention that announcements of them cannot be made far in advance. During the year 1890 there will be discussions of all important subjects brought forward by political, social, religious and scientific events; for, since the Forum was founded, there has been no problem of great public concern that has not been discussed in its pages by the masters of the subject on either side. Early in the year the following essays will be published:

Cardinal Manning—Laborers' Grievances.

Gen. Francis A. Walker—The Coming World's Fair.

John G. Carlisle—How the Tariff Affects the Farmer.

W. H. Mallock—The Relation of Art to Truth.

President C. K. Adams—The Moral Perils of College Life.

Four Years on Crutches.

For fifteen years I was afflicted with rheumatism, four years of which I was compelled to go on crutches. Words are inadequate to express the suffering I endured during that time. During these fifteen years of existence (it was not living), I tried every known remedy without receiving any benefit. I finally began on Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) which from the first gave me relief, and to day I am enjoying the best of health, and am a well man. I candidly believe the S. S. S. is the best blood purifier on the market to day. J. D. SPECIAL FEATURES.

Herbert Ward, Stanley's Companion.

Herbert Ward, the companion of Stanley in his explorations in Africa, is the only white man connected with Stanley's African explorations who has ever returned alive from the "Dark Continent." Mr. Ward's articles running through eight numbers of the "Ledger" are of the most intensely interesting description, and cover five years of his adventures in Africa, and they will be illustrated by sketches made by Mr. Ward, and by the reproduction of photographs taken by him in Africa. These pictures will throw much light upon the manners and customs of the hitherto unknown cannibal tribes of Africa.

The Story of a Forsaken Inn, (A SERIAL STORY) By Anna Katharine Green.

Life in British America, By Rev. E. R. Young.

Being the adventures and experiences of Rev. E. R. Young, the celebrated missionary, and his wife during their residence in the Polar region twelve hundred miles north of St. Paul, in which Dr. Young narrates how he tamed and taught the native wild Indians of the Northwest; how he equipped himself for and how he made his perilous sledging and hazardous canoe trips when visiting all the Indian settlements within five hundred miles of his home.

Honorable Henry W. Grady

Contributes a series of six articles on the "Wonderful Development of the Industrial Pursuits of the New South."

American Cookery, (A SERIES OF ARTICLES) By Miss Parloa.

Giving the reasons why it is imperfect, and some ways by which it may be improved.

Nihilism in Russia, By Leo Hartmann, Nihilist.

Leo Hartmann, a fugitive from Russian authorities, has been connected with the most daring feats of the Russian Nihilists. Mr. Hartmann shows how the intelligent people of Russia are becoming Nihilists in consequence of the despotism of the form of government. A participant in plots to kill the Czar, such as the blowing up of the Winter Palace, he is able to give true information as to how this and other great schemes were accomplished. The situation in Russia is sufficient to increase the love of every true American for our form of government.

EXTRA SOUVENIR SUPPLEMENTS.

Among these beautifully illustrated four-page souvenirs, which will be sent free to every subscriber, will be a poem by John Greenleaf Whittier, Illustrated by Howard Pyle.

Written for the "Ledger" by Mr. Whittier in his 82nd year. Another souvenir will be a beautifully illustrated poem written by Honorable James Russell Lowell.

The Ledger will contain the best Serial and Short Stories, Historical and Biographical Sketches, Travels, Wit and Humor, and everything interesting to the Household.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Wheat looks as fresh and green as in May.

Beevers & Cox began grinding feed Tuesday of last week, and will continue to grind until further notice.

Harrington and Lawton's signs over the entrance of their meat market is of a different design than any of the signs previously put out by A. R. Arner.

The ladies of the W. C. T. U. have left at the store of the General Supply Co., several articles of their own design and workmanship to be sold. Call and see them.

Johnny Witt, of Dutchtown, was in the village buying chickens, turkeys, etc., on Saturday last.

M. P. Brown of Tecumseh, and H. P. Gurney of Toledo, were in the village Friday. Mr. Gurney did some piano tuning while here.

The attendance at the box social held at the library last week Wednesday evening, was quite large and a very pleasant time enjoyed by all. The receipts amounted to $25.00.

The second number of the Ridgeway Record was received Saturday, and if it improves at each issue in appearance and interest, for a year, it will be one of the leading papers of the county ere twelve months roll by.

Mrs. Laura Cheever, Mrs. Mary Palmer and Mrs. Phebe Allison were called to Dundee last week on account their sister, Mrs. Zeliff, being thrown out of a wagon and hurt very badly: her injuries were such as to make her helpless, as it paralyzed the moter nerves.

Rhoba Arner spent Thursday and Friday at home, having a short vacation.

W. B. Arner returned Saturday from Augusta, where he has been for several weeks in the employ of Zimmerman's handle works.

G. P. Waring went to Toledo Wednesday on business in the interest of the general supply store.

James Barneby of Grand Rapids, is visiting his sisters, Mrs. G. W. and Mrs. Susan Clark, and their families.

The General Supply Co. have put in their place of business a telegraph instrument and can be interviewed over the local line at all hours when they are on duty.

The L. C. S. will be held at the home of Mrs. S. P. Smith, on Friday evening of the present week. She extends a cordial invitation to all.

On Saturday afternoon of last week the friends and neighbors of John Pattison made him a surprise, it being his fifty-fifth birthday. A few hours were spent very pleasantly, and after refreshments were served the friends departed for their several homes, leaving behind a large rocking chair for Mr. Pattison to rest in after a hard days toil, and a hanging lamp to light his long winter evenings; also a set of gold-band dishes and a jackknife, with the assurance that in Mr. Pattison and family they had friends that fully appreciated their friendship.

On account of the dark, stormy night the attendance at the meeting of the reading circle of the library, Tuesday evening, was not as large as it would have been if the evening had been pleasant. We believe, without an exception, that every one that was on the program responded. The poet selected for the evening being Will Carlton, the selections were unusually interesting and pleasing, and those who took part in furnishing selections did so with a will and presented them with much credit and respect to the Lenawee Poet. The sketch of the poet's life by Mrs. H. S. Russell, of Hudson, who is spending a few days with friends here, and who is personally acquainted with Mr. Carlton, was very interesting and pleasing. It is but just to all taking part to say that it was the most interesting and successful gathering the circle has had, and much credit is due Miss Belle Barlow for her earnest and unfailing efforts in preparing a program of so high and pleasing a character. The following is the program as called by Miss Barlow:

Sketch of the Life of Will Carleton by Mrs. H. S. Russell.

Sketch of the Character of his works by Miss Louisa Rogers.

Recitation—Gone with a handsomer Man—Lulu Rappleye.

Reading—The first Settler's Story—Mrs. Ella Waring.

Reading—The Editor's Guests—Mrs. W. L. Jones.

Recitation—The Christmas Convict—Mrs. H. J. Williams.

Reading—Farmer Stebbins at the Bat—F. J. Temple.

The circle will hold their next meeting at the library on Tuesday evening Dec. 31st. and a cordial invitation is extended to all who are interested in a work of this kind.

Simultaneously with the appearance in our community of a negro lecturing upon the subject of the "Race Problem," and even upon the same evening of his address, the Michigan Club had a discussion on the "Relation of Education to the Southern question," which the chairman of said club characterized as "a live question attracting the attention of all classes of the people." Noticing the coincidence, and remembering that the President in his message to Congress gave prominence to the subject of National aid to education, we have a pointer to the tactics to be employed for diverting public attention from other questions of full greater importance. It was a noticable fact, however, that a certain class of people were conspicuous for their absence from the meeting Monday evening, when and where the Negro would have been greatly encouraged by the presence of every member of the force which saved the country in the hour of its peril. Is it not a fact the country politician from away back, even although religious and cultured and complacant in the serenity of his confidence, is at the same time grievously if not simply indifferent to the consideration of live questions in this, another hour of his country's peril? Other thoughts crowd for utterance but we forbear.

BRITTON BUDGET.

Charlie Leonardson, of Blissfield, was seen on our streets Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Jay, of Flint, called on friends in Britton Friday.

Lawrence Brown, always good-natured, was unusually smiling last Saturday. Wonder why.

Miss Florence Beasley will make her home in Tecumseh the rest of the winter.

Don't ask W. J. Clark how he likes listings for kindling wood, unless you have got ten rods the start.

Muddy roads, eight miles to Macon, two young men wishing for sleighing. Why not try a balloon?

G. W. Hough opened his store on Monday of this week. Still room for more. When will the P. I.'s do something in this line?

Labe Babcock has rented James M. Smith's house on Kniffin avenue and will soon move over to our side.

Irv. Osborn has sold his new house on Beasley St. already, and it is said he now has in view the building of six houses on the north side of Lee St. east. That's right, Irv. There are at least three or four of our business men that have to live outside of the village. No houses to be had in town.

Rev. E. W. Borden has a plan for getting the school a little farther away from the railroads and the business places of the village. As we understand it, his idea is to exchange property with the east Ridgeway Christian Church society. Mr. Borden can say much in favor of his plan, and a letter in these columns would perhaps be a good way to get the subject before the people of Britton. Lets have it.

Montie was standing in the postoffice, writing to some one, and as we were standing behind him we could t[illegible] the color of his ears that he had just written, "My pen is poor, my ink is pale," when, bang! went a toy pistol, loaded with four caps, and as Mont came down from the ceiling he caught a glimpse of a small boy, with the still smoking weapon in his hand, making ten miles an hour round the corner. That boy's scalp was only saved by Mont's going so high.

We understand the railroad companies will have a man on the spot in a few days who will "spot" every boy that catches onto a train and suits for trespass will be commenced against every kid who is caught at this dangerous amusement. Boys, they don't hang for this offense, but the consequences will be very unpleasant and will call nine out of every ten of you away from home from thirty to ninety days, and this term is liable to knock you out of the realization of all your dreams of Christmas. They do not hang up their stockings there. No nail to hang them on. Can't drive nails into stone walls.

The Misses Bailey have moved their dressmaking establishment into rooms recently vacated by George Haner.

The ladies have Grandma Britton's quilt nearly completed, the sale of tickets is progressing equally well, and the drawing will soon come off.

Bert Allen and John Beasley, stand up! Lay down that razor! Drop that glue pot! There now, sirs! that place between your brick stores and the railroad track is dangerous and should have a good six-foot walk built on a level from the end of the walk in front of the stores to the railroad track. About face! Git!

The two chaps that took the advertisement of Uncle Tom's Cabin show out of the vacant store and pasted it on the wall in the school-house are known and are liable to a trip over the road.

LILLIE F. MORRELL UNDERWOOD.

On Tuesday morning, Nov. 26th, '89, in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Morrell of Macon, the earthly life of their youngest and dearly loved daughter, closed. She was also the beloved wife of Cyrus J. Underwood of Ridgeway. Among the severest of life's trials is when the young husband, or young wife must give up a life chosen partner into the cold and icy arms of death. "She is the partner of my life, of my joys, of my griefs." But of her life and death, for whom these words are written, it is impossible to eulogize upon with ink. Her life and triumphant death was more than can be given in the phraseology of that life as a christian, and in accord with Bible doctrine, do say, "she is not dead but gone before," thus making richer in comfort the way to her dear friends, who come after her unto the resurrection. The deceased was much comforted as she drew near the end in her faith and hope of a resurrection. Paul was more than equal unto those of his time, who were disbelievers in the resurrection, because he preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection. Less than one year has passed, and with husband and wife, one is taken and the other left. Yes, a mother goes down to the grave, and an infant daughter is left. What under all those exceedingly delicate and affectionate circumstances, together with surroundings, so full of hope from an earthly standpoint, that of the parental home upon either side of the two, that only so recently had joined hands as partners for life; yea, not but Godly peace within that angel-like soul could give such calm composure even down through the valley of the shadow of death. As pastor of the Christian church at Britton, of which her mother and the oldest daughter were members for more than three and a half years last past, Lillie, sister and mother were constant attendants, and though five miles away, the regular service was never so tedious but that they could be found in Sunday school. While a mother was an exemplary teacher of a class Lillie was secretary of our Sunday school. She loved the church and Sunday school, though never having made a public profession of religion until last winter in the Ridgeway M. E. church, yet at heart was a christian. On account of impaired health for some months before death chose its victim, was unable to carry out her convictions of duty. First she had greatly desired to unite with the church of her choice, that by so doing she might leave a public example in favor of the religion of Christ in baptism as the mode taught by the gospel. Yes, she desired to live that she might do good in the world. When having seen that her departure was drawing near, said: "well, I had thought that I might be raised, but the Lord knows what is best." When her friends gathered around her, and she would speak of the end, it was with serene confidence and without a tear, while she would say to those about her: "O, don't cry; O, yes you may, it is all right, I have not shed a tear; yes I did the other morning find one big tear rolling down my cheek while Cyrus cried so hard, but I put up my hand and wiped it off." The night before she died she spent the time from two o'clock in the morning in conversation with her mother, and said: "well I have been praying, and I ought to have prayed more yesterday. You tell my dear father that I have been praying for him." The evening before death she was at tea with the family, also at breakfast with them the morning of her death. Had she lived ten days longer she would have been just the age of her beloved sister Edith Morrell Kniffin, whose burial took place on the 30th day of May, 1885. As sisters, as it was with Saul and Jonathan, they were lovely and pleasant in their lives and in death they were not divided." Their ages each almost 20 years. Lillie arranged for her burial to be by the side of her sister; also arranged that her mother take care of her infant daughter during her life, then the child's father should have the daughter. The funeral rites were conducted from the home of her parents on Thanksgiving day, when a large assemblage of friends and acquaintances were present, (though the day was tedious,) to express sympathy for the friends of the deceased. Rev. James Wright, pastor of the Christian church, discoursed from 7th Cor. xiii, 12. Now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face. These words were spoken by the deceased when she kissed her friends good bye, saying face to face, then calmly closed her eyes is death.

The husband and families of the deceased express their thanks to the neighbors and friends for their kindness and sympathy during the sickness, death and burial of an affectionate wife and a beloved daughter; also to Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Anderson, of Tecumseh, for their gift of a beautiful box of cut flowers. J. W.

Knute Nelson is a Republican member of Congress from Minnesota. A sentiment with his name to it was "a banner on the wall" the other night at the celebration by the young men's democratic club in Canton, O. The sentiment reads:

"I will put free sugar, free salt, free coal and free lumber against free whiskey and free tobacco under all circumstances, and so will the great mass of the American people.

Says Henry George: Look at our tariff. Here we see the power of the government applied directly, purposely, continuously and unconstitutionally, to give some citizens an advantage over other citizens—to make the rich richer, and the poor poorer. Look at Mr. Carnegie, with his income of millions and his castle in Scotland; look at the men of whom he is the type, and then at their workmen, the poor deluded creatures, who have been told that it is they who are protected; that this precious system of robbery is all for them.

The Republican caucus had arranged for the election of Rev. Chas. B. Ramsdell, a relative of Mrs. Harrison, as chaplain of the House, but the House defeated the plan by re-electing Dr. Milburn. The failure of a Harrison relative to get an office must fill Benjamin with grave misgivings regarding the status of the presidential office, and the stability of American institutions in general.—Chicago Herald.

The solidity and strength of this republic never was, and never could be more clearly exhibited than by the silent consent of popular sentiment that the survivors of a rebellion against the Federal Government may publicly manifest their respect to the memory of their chief. THE CHINESE WALL MEN.

BOSTON, Nov. 21, '89.

Among the good things for the cause of tariff reform that were said and done here with so much profusion last night should not be omitted the address of Gen. Francis A. Walker before the Newton Tariff-Reform Club at its dinner at the Woodland Park Hotel in Auburndale. This was the first meeting of the Club for the season, and the private report of the secretary was that the interest in tariff reform has shown a fresh impetus during the fall, and the Club now has a membership of 140 residents of Newton. Gen. Walker's address was a scholarly discussion of the meaning and historical development of the doctrine of protection, but certain passages had a vital application to the existing political condition, and they will be read with interest wherever he is known. The parts of his address that bore most closely upon current events were as follows:

Down to the war of secession there was no party, there was no considerable body of men advocating protection as a permanent policy. During the war our present high tariff was established solely on the plea of the revenue necessities of the Government. When was it that the great majority of those among us who are now protectionists, in the later sense of the word, became so? That would be a very interesting investigation which should seek to draw the line across the pages of the Congressional Globe and across the sheets of the daily press that should show the transition from the "infant industries" stage of the protectionists argument to the stage when protectionism was boldly and unqualifiedly announced as a beneficent standing policy. The transition certainly has not been marked by any apologies on the part of the protectionists for passing from one into the other stage, or any explanation of their change of front. Nobody claims, I believe, that there has been any new revelation on the subject, unless it be the gospel according to Blaine, yet here we have a complete change of attitude. The recent campaign was fought so largely on the "home market" issue that some persons may be disposed to think that the "infant industries" argument is altogether gone by, but the time may come when those who are so glibly denouncing foreign trade and declaring themselves well satisfied to command the markets of sixty millions of Americans may be glad to get back to as good cover as that afforded by the now despised argument for infant industries.

The policy of universal, undiscriminating protection finds little support in anything that was said or written in this country before the outbreak of of the Rebellion, and after the extreme necessities of the public revenue had fairly passed with the restoration of peace, a movement began, which for a long time had a high degree of public approbation, for the extension of the free list. But this movement received a decided check upon Mr. Blaine's entrance upon the Republican canvass of 1884, and since that time the advocates of undiscriminating and universal protection have been growing more and more active and defiant, until to-day we find the Republican party, as represented by its chief organs at least, standing upon this principle. A remarkable example of the effect of this change of purpose is found in the pending proposal largely to increase the duty upon tinplate, of which none is now produced in the United States, and yet which, though of such immense importance to the canning industry and to the tinsmiths' business, it is proposed to subject to enormous taxes in the hope that somebody, somewhere, may think it worth while to begin the manufacture of it.

There are really two classes of protectionists in our country. The one favors duties generally low, and the other favors duties so high that they may be regarded as prohibitory. The difference between these classes of protectionists is not a difference in degree but in kind. The moderate protectionists contemplate foreign competition as still a desirable force operating upon native industry to stimulate its exertions. The extreme protectionists, or Chinese-wall men do not regard foreign competition as in any measure a beneficent force. On the contrary, they deprecate it as only and altogether bad, and seek to deprive it of all influence upon native industry. This may be done by prohibitory laws or by duties so high as practically to give the domestic manufacturers the complete command of the market. This is now the demand of those associations which have recently been organized under the name of "home market clubs." This is the form in which protectionism is now presented to the people of the United States. Flushed with an apparent victory at the polls, the protectionists of this class think to have their own way hereafter in everything. Apparently they think they have their enemies beneath their feet, and that the future control of the tariff policy of the United States is in their hands. I think it is not extravagant to say that there has been more pure Chinese-wall talk in this country within the last twelve months than during our whole previous history as a nation. Whether the protectionists of the United States really have passed over to this extreme position, or whether their present attitude is due partly to the fierce antagonism of the recent political struggle and to the spirit of contradiction, partly to the extravagance of a few leaders of newspaper organs, no one can say with confidence. For myself, I believe that the great majority of the Republican party will take an early opportunity of returning to, of an early occasion of showing that they have never for themselves left the position occupied by their fathers on this subject, the only position sanctioned by the ablest and most judicious writers on that side, namely, of moderate protection. I believe that the recent access of jubilant, vehement, aggressive, defiant protectionism will prove to be a mere passing passion, and that most of those who have given way to it, or allowed themselves to be represented, will soon make it known that they favor only moderate duties, carefully adjusted to give domestic industries what they consider a fair start in the race, without withdrawing them from the wholesome and stimulating influence of foreign competition.

I believe that it is in expounding and enforcing the differences of purpose and opinion thus exhibited that the hope of revenue reform lies. I think we have committed a great tactical error in attacking protectionists as such, and thus causing all protectionists to draw together for common defence, instead of employing our forces in combating those extreme and altogether indefensible views which have made our existing tariff the schedule of abominations it is. Driving all protectionists into a compact body, we have made it inevitable that the contral of that body should pass into the hands of the least moderate and fair-minded section. I believe that but a very small fraction of the Republican party are in reality protectionists of the Chinese-wall type, while the great majority are protectionists only in the sense in which Daniel Webster was a protectionist. But we have recently seen that party go entire and solid into a Presidential election on a platform as bigoted and reactionary as any that could have been drawn by a Pennsylvania pig-iron manufacturer. I believe that our tactics have been mistaken with reference to the object immediately in view, and, moreover, that this is not the right way to educate the people to sound views upon this subject. Ever since the failure to recast the tariff in 1870 and 1871 I have been strongly of the opinion, that the true policy of reform was to attack the tariff in its worst features, one by one, without attempting a general revision, at least until the ranks of the protectionists had been broken at more than one point. For want of this, we have allowed the almost accidental agglomeration of war duties to remain a burden upon the industries of the land these eighteen years. Even in 1887, I thoroughly believe that if Mr. Cleveland's admirable message to Congress had been followed up simply by a bill enlarging the free list, without touching a single duty that was not to be altogether repealed, and had we gone into the campaign of 1888 upon the issue of free wool, free lumber, free salt, free iron, and free coal, we should have carried the election, and be now engaged, with the deliberation required for so much detail, in reducing the chaos of ill-considered and badly related duties to order and system in the interest of a freer trade.—N. Y. Evening Post.

Remarkable Nerve.

The early history of America is full of instances of men having great nerve. But we are rapidly becoming the most nervous people on earth. The recent increase of insanity, epileptic fits, headache, backache, neuralgia, sleeplessness, nervousness, dyspepsia, fluttering of the heart, etc., points to an early decay of the race, unless this tendency is checked. Nothing will cure these diseases like Dr. Miles' Nervine, warranted to contain neither opium nor morphine. Sample bottles free at Baker & Hall's Drug Store. Don't fail to try it.

Catarrh

Is a constitutional and not a local disease, and therefore it cannot be cured by local applications. It requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, working through the blood, eradicates the impurity which causes and promotes the disease, and effects a permanent cure. Thousands of people testify to the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for catarrh when other preparations had failed. Hood's Sarsaparilla also builds up the whole system, and makes you feel renewed in health and strength.

"I used Hood's Sarsaparilla for catarrh and received great relief and benefit from it. The catarrh was very disagreeable, especially in the winter, causing constant discharge from my nose, ringing noises in my ears, and pain in the back of my head. The effect to clear my head in the morning by hawking and spitting was painful. Hood's Sarsaparilla gave me relief immediately, while in time I was entirely cured. I think Hood's Sarsaparilla is worth its weight in gold." MRS. O. B. GUNN, 1029 Eighth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

If that tremendous coil were tightened around me, I knew that I might at once check my luggage for the undiscovered bourne. In this crisis of my fate I saw the great python's tail in close proximity to his mouth. I grasped the snake's tail and pushed a yard or two down his yawning jaws. Serpents seldom bite their prey; they lubricate it and suck it down. THE CLOSE OF THE REIGN.

LESSON XII, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, DEC. 22.

Text of the Lesson, 1 Kings xi, 26-43.

Commit Verses 42, 43—Golden Text, Eccles. xii, 13—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

26. "Jeroboam the son of Nebat." Over twenty times is this man, whom we now meet for the first time, thus mentioned in the two books of Kings, and in most places it is as "Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin." He became the first king of the ten tribes and set up the two golden calves at Dan and Bethel for Israel to worship. (Chap. xii, 26-30.) His name, according to Young, signifies "Enlarger," and he was certainly an expert in the way of enlarging the sins of Israel.

"Even he lifted up his hand against the king." At the beginning of Solomon's reign it was written that the Lord his God had given him rest on every side, and that there was neither adversary nor evil occurrent (chap. v, 4), but now all is changed.

27, 28. "And this was the cause that he lifted up his hand against the king." The most of our lesson today is an opening up of this sentence, shewing that Jeroboam's rebellion was of Jehovah. We are first told that as Solomon built and repaired various works he observed that Jeroboam was an industrious young man, and he therefore promoted him to be ruler over all the charge of the house of Joseph.

29-31. "The Prophet Ahijah, the Shilonite, found him in the way." Here is another man whom we now meet for the first time; but what a contrast to Jeroboam, for Ahijah is twice called by that exalted name, "Servant of Jehovah (chapters xiv, 18; xv, 29), and he bears the word of Jehovah. As to Jeroboam, he is found in the way, no doubt in the way of industrious service in the position in which Solomon had exalted him, little thinking that he was also in the way to a kingdom. Literally he was in the way out of Jerusalem, and probably on the way to oversee the work appointed to him. He is clad in a new garment, and as the prophet meets him he seizes the garment, rends it in twelve pieces and hands ten of the pieces to Jeroboam, by this rather startling but very significant act assuring him that the Lord God of Israel will rend ten of the tribes from Solomon and give them to him.

33. "Because that they have forsaken me, * * * and have not walked in my ways." Passing over, for the present, the verses referring to what God will do for David's and Jerusalem's sake, we continue the story of Jeroboam, and here is the reason why ten-twelfths of the kingdom is to pass from Solomon to him. Wisdom and her ways give peace, prosperity and true happiness; but if we forsake wisdom and give ourselves to folly we must expect to reap as we sow. We wonder how Solomon, who had been so exceeding abundantly blessed by the Living and True God, could turn from Him to the abominations of the worship of idols, but we have already been told that it was because he loved many strange women. Woman is God's best earthly gift to man, but God's gifts abused become curses instead of blessings.

35. "I will take the kingdom out of his son's hand and will give it unto thee, even ten tribes." As I notice the ten or more "I wills" of God in this lesson and wonder why God should select Jeroboam, I can only think of the words of the Spirit in Dan. iv, 32, 35: "The Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men and giveth it to whomsoever He will: He doeth according to His will in the army of Heaven and among the inhabitants of earth; and none can stay His hand or say unto Him, What doest Thou?" It is no power of Jeroboam that is to wrest the kingdom from Solomon's son; it is all the Lord's doing from first to last.

37. "And I will take thee, and thou shalt reign according to all that thy soul desireth, and shalt be king over Israel." Here is a secret of the heart laid open by the great searcher of hearts, who is often pleased to give us what our hearts desire that thus He may prove us to see whether we will walk in His ways or not. We read that Solomon gave the queen of Sheba all her desire, but here is a greater than Solomon granting to Jeroboam his soul's desire; and the same Lord is saying to us: "Whatsoever ye shall ask in My Name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son."

38. "If thou wilt hearken, * * * I will be with thee." Not only is the Kingdom promised to Jeroboam, but God offers to make it permanent if he will only be obedient. The Lord Himself is the true King, and He will establish any one who will truly represent Him by obeying His commands, walking in His ways, and doing right in His sight.

32, 34, 36. "For my servant David's sake." We return now to the reason why the whole kingdom was not to be rent from Solomon, and we find this as the first reason. Four times in this lesson Jehovah speaks of him as "David my servant," and twice we find the expression "For my servant David's sake," and it is also said, "because he kept my commandments and my statutes." This was the manner of David's life, taken as a whole, and his love for the statutes and commandments of the Lord is fully told forth in Psalm cxix.

"And for Jerusalem's sake, the city which I have chosen out of all the tribes of Israel." See also verses 13, 36; Israel was a chosen people, Jerusalem a chosen city, David a chosen servant, and all to magnify the Name of Jehovah; when they failed to do this He delivered them to their enemies to be chastened.

39. "I will for this afflict the seed of David, but not forever." David and his obedience brought blessing, Solomon and his sins brought affliction, but inasmuch as God's covenant with David is forever (II Sam. vii, 12-16), therefore there will be a restoration and the Kingdom shall be established in the True David in due time (Isa. ix, 6, 7; Luke i, 32, 33).

40. "Solomon sought therefore to kill Jeroboam." Thus did Saul to David, but not thus did David to Saul, not even to Shimer when he cursed and threw stones.

41. "The Book of the Acts of Solomon." In II Chron. ix, 29, three books are mentioned as containing a record of his acts; but these with his 1,005 songs (I Ki. iv, 32) are not found. We have his Song of Songs, many of his proverbs, and his book as preacher; and if his acts had been as good as his words we might like to read them, but from what we know of him conclude we lose nothing by not having them. In the Gospels and Acts of the Apostles we have the record of the acts and words of a greater than Solomon. Let us give good heed to them.

42, 43. "Solomon slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David his father." Forty years a king, riches and wisdom and honor unprecedented bestowed upon him, yet he acts as a fool; a thousand wives and one son, and that son robbed of his inheritance by his father's sins. Is it not a sad story? But was Solomon saved? Where we have no clear testimony we cannot say positively. We may hope that ere he went out to meet God he truly repented and turned to Him. How is it with you, dear reader?

Their Business Booming.

Probably no one thing has caused such a general revival of trade at C. A. Wright & Co's Drug Store as their giving away to their customers of so many free trial bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. Their trade is simply enormous in this very valuable article from the fact that it always cures and never disappoints. Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Croup, and all throat and lung diseases quickly cured. You can test it before buying by getting a trial bottle free, large size $1. Every bottle warranted.

KING OF THE BLOOD

The Most Thorough Purifier of the Blood Yet Discovered.

Cures all Humors, from a common tion to the worst Scrofula.

It purifies the Blood.
It invigorates the Liver.
It regulates the Bowels.
It strengthens the stomach.
It gives vivacity in place of lassitude; cheerfulness in place of gloom, and robust vigor in place of debility.

Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Disordered Liver, Constipation, Nervous Affections, General Debility, in short all the numerous diseases and discomforts caused by impure blood are speedily conquered by this powerful corrector, the chief and sovereign of all ancient or modern medical discoveries—KING OF THE BLOOD.

Its name is its best description as it is a royal dispenser of the blessings of health and vanquishes the foes that lurk in the blood.

It banishes PIMPLES, SALT RHEUM, SCALY ERUPTIONS, ULCERS, SCALD HEAD, FEVER SORES, and all SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

It checks CONSUMPTION in its early stages. It has frequently cured it when advanced.

It disperses TUMORS and CANCERS without the Surgeon's knife.

It cures DROPSY, general or partial.

It cures FEMALE WEAKNESS and DISEASE.

It reduces in a safe and effectual manner all swellings, external or internal.

It eradicates the effects of Venerial Disease and Mineral Poisons and establishes a sound constitution.

Many certificates, much further information and full directions for using, will be found in the pamphlet, "Treatise on Diseases of the Blood," in which each bottle is enclosed.

Price $1 per bottle containing 12 ounces, or 50 doses. Sold by druggists or medicine.

If your druggist does not happen to have it on hand, request him to order a supply of it for you and you will be cheaper than for you to order direct of us, and less trouble.

A line may be a very long one and yet be the shortest between given points.

HOW CAN THE LONG BE THE SHORT ?

For instance the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railroad has over 2000 miles of road, magnificently equipped and managed, it is one of the greatest railway systems of this country; for the same reasons it is the traveler's favorite to all points in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Montana. It is the only line to Great Falls, the future manufacturing center of the Northwest; to the fertile free lands of the Milk River Valley; and offers a choice of three routes to the coast. Still it is the shortest line between St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Winnepeg, Cronkston, Moorhead, Cassleton, Glyndon, Grafton, Fergus Falls, Wahpeton, Devils Lake, and Butte City. It is the best route to Alaska, China, Japan, and the journey to the Pacific Coast, Vancouver, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco will be remembered as the delight of a lifetime once made through the wonderful scenery of the Manitoba-Pacific Route. To fish and hunt; to view the magnificence of nature; to revive the spirit; restore the body; to realize the dream of the home-seeker, the gold-seeker, the toiler, or the capitalist, visit the country reached by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway. The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets, stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

All Sores, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Sore Throat, Lameness, Rheumatism, Piles, Inflammation of Lungs and Bowels, Bronchitis, Croup, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Affection of the Spine, Erysipelas, Nervous Irritation, and all disorders attendant with Inflammation.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years,

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates it bears which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should be perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

MERRY WEDDING CHIMES.

A brilliant social event took place in the village last evening at the residence of Mr. V. J. Woodward, the occasion being the marriage of his daughter, Mae Florence, to Milbern R. Keyser. About ninety invited guests were present, besides the immediate families, and for three hours the goddess of mirth reigned supreme. Shortly after six o'clock the nuptial knot was securely tied by Rev. W. H. Babbitt in a few happy words, Mr. Albert Boyce and Miss Anna Hinley officiated as groomsman and bridesmaid, respectively, Misses Nellie Heesen, Maggie Hahn, Hattie Vreeland and Minnie Cupples acted as maids of honor. Congratulations followed, supplemented with refreshments and social enjoyment. The arrangement for serving supper was unique but admirable. Mr. P. V. Woodard's home, which is located next door and about three rods distant, was utilized for that purpose, and thus the parlors of Mr. V. J. Woodard's residence were not encroached upon by the supper tables. After the menu had been properly dispatched, the company whiled away the hours most happily until train time, when the young people accompanied the bride and groom to the Lake Shore depot and saw them safely aboard the Jackson train. They take a brief trip to Chicago and on their return will make their home with the bride's parents until spring. The following guests were present from abroad: Mrs. Frank Connet and Mrs. Harriet Blossom, of Adrian; L. W. Kimball and Miss Clyde Marstellar, of Clinton; Mrs. Ira Culver, of Hudson; Miss Mollie Totten, of Kalamazoo; Miss Hattie Vreeland, of St. Johns. The couple, thus united for life, have lived in this community from childhood, and are both blessed with a large circle of friends and admirers. The bride is a graduate of our high school, and the groom is well fixed, with promising prospects for the future. It happens to but few couples to begin their matrimonial journey under brighter auspices, or accompanied with more hearty congratulations. The HERALD adds its best wishes to all the others, not as a mere formality, but as a heartfelt token of esteem and good-will to a young couple who deserve all the kind words they will receive. The array of bridal gifts was large, costly and imposing, giving evidence of the esteem of their friends, more complete than words could express. Chief among them were a Chickering piano from the father and mother of the bride; a heavy silver cake basket from Mr. and Mrs. H. Keyser; a steel engraving, frame and easel from the last graduating class; a berry dish from the S. S. class; a gold watch and chain from the groom. In addition to these there was an extended list of minor gifts, not only from relatives, but from church and society friends, which, owing to its length, it is impossible to present in full.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

The plain truth is that the abominableness of this wearther cannot be done justice to in the language limit prescribed by a family newspaper.—Adrian Daily Times, Dec. 17.

Well, if the Times editor gives up the task, with the whole of the English language at the end of his tongue, it probably would not be worth our while to attempt to do the subject justice, although we are positive that the whole of Raisin township, with Ridgeway and Palmyra thrown in, would know how to appreciate any statement we might be tempted to make in regard to rain, mud, or weather.

John P. Witt, after a week of persistent industry in the poultry business, thinks he has realized fully a thousand dollars,—not, perhaps, all in trade, but owing to the appearance of a ten-pound boy, who has taken up his abode in the family.

A. D. Macham has recently put up one of Hoxsie's steam cookers, and undoubtedly finds it a great success, for after cooking one lot and feeding it up he said: "I swang! That goes so good I'll cook another," and for all we know, he is cooking feed yet.

Water courses and marshes are the abodes of fever and ague; Laxador has proved a most valuable preventive of malaria and an efficacious remedy in the treatment of malarial diseases.

A BEAUTIFUL RESIDENCE.

During the past ten or fifteen years many of the enterprising farmers of the township of Franklin have laid down the "shovel and the hoe," retired from the reaper and the plow, and taken up their abodes in the village of Tecumseh. They generally purchase a house in town or build one, and always make good citizens and neighbors. Among these additions to our village population no man is more highly respected or has more friends in our community than B. C. Knapp. He has recently finished a fine dwelling house on Pottawatamie st. and settled down to enjoy his new home for the remainder of his days. We happened around that way one day last week shortly after noon, and by a singular coincidence Mrs. Knapp had a bountiful dinner ready at exactly the same hour. After doing full justice to an excellent meal, we accepted an invitation to look over the house.

It is the first house west of S. W. Bordine's on the north side of Pottawattamie st., and is an exact counterpart of Mr. Bordine's dwelling, both in its exterior appearance and interior arrangement. The house is full two stories high with a roomy and well lighted basement. The lower floor contains a front hall, parlor, sitting room, dining room, family room, kitchen, rear kitchen or wash room, bath room and closet. The upper floor contains three large chambers, each of which is provided with an ample closet, and also a good store room over the rear wing. The interior wood work is done in butternut and white ash, with doors and inside blinds of pine, all dressed with hard oil and varnish. There is an open grate and mantel in the sitting room. The kitchen is admirably done off, being provided with a pump for soft water and a sink, large dish cupboards and other conveniences. The well water pump is on a covered porch just outside the rear kitchen door. This latter room is used for washing purposes and for cooking in hot weather. The bath room contains a full size stationary bath tub and a porcelain wash basin, both of which are fed with a pipe leading from a tank of soft water in the attic. The cellar is divided into three rooms. One of these contains the furnace, which heats the entire house, and fuel bins. The other two are finished with cement floor and plastered walls. The larger of these is the cellar for general purposes. The smaller one, separated from the other by a tight partition which can be kept always cool, is used for storing fruits, canned vegetables and similar articles in. The arrangement of the cellar is one of the most convenient features of the entire house. The exterior is painted in the prevailing drab and brown shades and the whole is surmounted with a slate roof. The carpets in the lower rooms were ordered by sample through J. S. Kinney, and came ready made to fit each room, the front hall and stair case. The job was let to the Mensing Building Co., who furnished all the material and did all the work. The entire house is a model of neatness and convenience.

Mr. and Mrs. Knapp began life many years ago upon a new farm in Franklin, and experienced many privations incident to a pioneer life. They have done their full share of hard work, and no one will begrudge them the beautiful home which they can enjoy to the fullest extent in their declining years.

THE FARMERS' UNION.

The Union met at H. B. Eaton's Friday evening, Dec. 13th, with a full house and interested audience. In the discussion of the question: "Is it beneficial for the farmer to join the Patrons of Industry" much interest was manifest and a variety of opinions expressed. While the condition among farmers was to be regretted, yet the prevailing sentiment seemed to be that the Patrons of Industry did not furnish the necessary remedy except, through organization, it better prepares them for united action. The necessity of such action seemed apparent to all.

TECUMSEH & FRANKLIN FARMERS' CLUB

One of the most enjoyable meetings of the season was held at Mr. Hoag's Dec. 11th. Their pleasant rooms were filled with old and young, who listened to the very interesting and amusing program. Question box was omitted. The latter part of the evening spent in social chat and music. The stirring old war songs carried ones memory back to those days when our "Boys in Blue" marched forth to the sound of fife and drum.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

Village of Tecumseh, Mich.
Council Room, Dec. 2, 1889.

Regular Session.

Present—President Heesen, Messrs. Elliott, James, Kennedy, Smith, Heck Ames and the recorder.

The minutes of the last regular meeting were read and approved.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The chairman of the cemetery committee reported that the committee were in favor of granting the petition of Beers Post to erect a flag staff on their lot in the cemetery. On motion the report was accepted and the Post was granted permission to erect said flag staff under the supervision of the cemetery committee.

REPORTS OF OFFICERS.

The sexton reported three adult interments for the month of November, and two lots sold, together with the treasurer's receipt for $10.50 interment fees. Reports accepted and ordered filed.

The street commissioner submitted the following report for November:—Hand work, 2 days, street commissioner, 10 days, corporation team 9½ days. Report accepted and ordered filed.

The marshal reported the building of the following sidewalks, as per orders of the council:—Estate of Richard Ford, bill $16 72; Mrs. Henrietta Keyser, bill $17 09; James Mitchell, bill $15.34; John McLain, bill $9.70, Ella McKeown, $12 69.

NEW BUSINESS.

The following bills were presented and on motion referred to the Finance Committee:—S. C. Stacy $5.00; M. F. Marks, $4.12; T. R. Kyle, $9,55; Tecumseh Coal & Mfg. Co. $10.53; Jones & Underhill, $23.05; Temple, McClure & Co. $59 33; Moreland Bros. & Crane, $25.20; E. A. Hodges, street labor, $20.00; W. Berger, street labor, $2.50.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

The finance committee reported favorably on the above bills. On motion the report was accepted and orders directed drawn for the several amounts.

On motion the council decided to engage a sexton for the ensuing year at the next regular meeting.

On motion the purchasing agent was instructed to purchase 15,000 feet of oak lumber.

Council then adjourned.

CHAS. F. FIELD,
Recorder.

DIED.

DOKE—In Tecumseh, Nov. 30, '89, Charlie M., son of E. A. and Saddie Doke. Aged 8 months. Gone but not forgotten.

Oh many lips are saying this
Mid falling tears to-day,
And many hearts are aching sore
Our darling has passed away.

We watched his pretty playful ways,
Through days as they passed by,
But cast far from us the fear
That he was going to die.

He seemed so sweet, so good, so pure,
To our admiring eyes,
We never thought this precious fruit
Was ripening for the skies.

And when at last the death stroke came,
So swift, so sure, so true,
The hearts that held him here so dear
Were almost broken to.

Put by his cradle, his empty chair,
Fold up the garments he used to wear,
Kiss him, and leave him, our hearts, delight,
In Jesus arms he sleeps to-night.

E. J. D.

Died, at the residence of his parents in Tecumseh, on Sunday evening, Dec. 15, John R., second son of Richard and Ellen Caldwell, in the 17th year of his age.

"A pure spirit has returned to God who gave it."

HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA CALENDAR for 1890 is out, and the demand for it is certain to be immense, for a more "taking" calender it is difficult to even imagine. Art and utility are beautifully blended in the lovely girl's head on a dark olive background, and the neat pad appended giving the months in concise, readable shape, with a history of the year alternating in rhyme, and also illustrated. Early application at the druggists will be necessary to secure this gem. If you fail there, send six cents in stamps to C. I. Hood and Co., Lowell, Mass.

The proprietors of Ely's Cream Balm do not claim it to be a cure-all, but a sure remedy for catarrh, colds in the head and hay fever. It is not a liquid or a snuff, but is easily applied into the nostrils. It gives relief at once.

OBITUARY.

PHILO. C. MILLS.

In the death of Philo C. Mills the county of Lenawee loses one of its pioneers, an honorable and an honored citizen. Born at Mt. Morris, in the state of New York, on the 16th day of August, 1810, he had passed his 79th birthday; and during his long life had so lived as to merit and win the confidence and esteem of a large circle of friends.

At the age of twenty-two he came to the then wilds of Michigan, and settled in the town of Franklin, where he resided more than forty years. At the age of twenty-four he married Miss Mary Keeney, at Le Roy, in the state of New York, with whom he lived most happily until her death, which occurred on the 23d day of February, 1887.

In 1873, having accumulated a competence and educated their children, Mr. and Mrs. Mills decided that they had done their full share of hard work, and leaving the farm, took up their residence in the village of Tecumseh, where they resided until 1882, when they removed to this city, where they have enjoyed the fruits of their long years of industry.

On the 31st day of May, 1888, Mr. Mills was again married to Mrs. Maria Wilcox, the widow of the late Edwin Wilcox, a former resident of the town of Cambridge, who survives him. This last marriage was also a happy one. It gave him the congenial companionship and care so much needed in his declining years.

Mr. Mills came of ancestry of which any descendant may well be proud. His father, Major Philo Mills, was born in Connecticut in 1775, but at an early day removed to western New York, where he resided until 1835, when, following the fortunes of his son, he came to Michigan, settling upon adjoining land in the town of Franklin. He was, in point of property and many other respects, the prominent man of the town, owning at one time nearly 1,000 acres in a body. He was a large-hearted, public spirited man, a zealous Baptist, assisting in organizing a church, and donating ground and a house of worship to that society.

His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Green, was a woman of marked character. Her father and three brothers were soldiers in the Revolutionary war. Their ancestry is traced back to John Green, who was a compeer of Roger Williams, and expelled with him from Massachusetts, and subsequently forming the colony of Rhode Island and the first Baptist church of America.

Major and Mrs. Mills had seven sons and seven daughters, of whom Philo C., the subject of this sketch, was the sixth in the order of birth, and the survivor of them all. All are dead. Those of the early residents of Franklin, who still survive, will well remember the hospitable, and, for those days, the elegant home of Major Mills.

Seven young ladies and six young men, in one large house, constituted a society of themselves, but they were seldom left alone. All were excellent singers, all admirable entertainers, and when assembled around the fireside of the old mansion, or gathered in a group at church, they presented a picture which could not easily be effaced from the memory.

As already stated, Philo C. Mills was one of the pioneers of Franklin, and spent more than half of his life in that town. Few of those now living there have any definite idea of what pioneer life involved. At that time the town was an almost unbroken wilderness. The early pioneers not only had to clear a space upon which to erect their humble dwellings, but to remove the timber from and make the roads by which they could be reached, when erected. It involved a struggle requiring courage, energy and ability of a high order. Those first settlers not only possessed these qualities in an eminent degree, but were high-toned, public-spirited, patriotic, moral and religious as were Churches and schools followed fast upon the steps of the immigrant, and in every good work Philo C. Mills was ever among the foremost.

Mr. Mills' last hours were peaceful and happy. He had no fear of death. "He knew that eternity lay close by the shores of time. He knew that his Redeemer lived." He bade his sorrowing wife and children good-bye, as if about to take a journey. Mr. Mills left surviving, and to mourn his death, five children: Adelbert W. Mills, of Tecumseh; Mrs. Mary Blair, of Napoleon; Mrs. Helen M. Dodge, Mrs. Frances M. Pomeroy, and Mr. E. Leroy Mills, of Adrian city.

His funeral was attended at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Pomeroy, on the 2d inst., by many of his early friends. Services were conducted by Rev. W. K. Spencer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Clatworthy. Hon. W. S. Wilcox, Hon. Joseph R. Bennett, George R. Allis, John I. Knapp, Andrew J. Hunter and Norman Geddes acted as pall-bearers.

Cold Waves

Are predicted with reliable accuracy, and people liable to the pains and aches of rheumatism dread every change to damp or stormy weather. Although Hood's Sarsaparilla is not claimed to be a positive specific for rheumatism, the remarkable cures it has affected show that it may be taken for this complaint with reasonable certainty of benefit. Its action in neutr lizing the acidity of the blood, which is the cause of rheumatism, constitutes the secret of the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla. If you suffer from rheumatism, give Hoods Sarsaparilla a fair trial; it will do you good.

OUR HOLIDAY GREETING.

The list of business houses in Tecumseh, began two weeks ago in this supplement, is panning out beyond all expectations. But we began the scheme in good faith, and we intend to fight it out on this line, if it takes till next 4th of July. The truth of it is, a complete index of the business interests of Tecumseh is no small affair, and it is no small task to prepare one that will do full justice to the subject. Every line of retail trade is represented in this village at the present time, and well represented too. Our merchants are enterprising men, they are men of experience who know how to buy their goods to the best advantage, and their expenses are moderate. These two facts enable them to sell at a small margin of profit.

There is a little business secret, which we will reveal to our readers right here, which few men know, or at least appreciate, and which gives our merchants a marked advantage over those of most country villages. Nearly all of our merchants are men who have had years of training in their respective lines of trade. They are cautious, conservative business men, possessing ample capital to enable them to buy for cash, and enjoying a gilt edged credit in the eastern markets. The idea that the largest buyers can purchase goods the cheapest is a fallacy. A moderate buyer with good credit can buy goods to much better advantage than a heavy buyer with poor credit. We boldly make the assertion that the merchants of Tecumseh can purchase their supplies in the eastern markets on as favorable terms as those of any city in Southern Michigan south of Jackson. This fact enables them to keep as large and as well assorted stocks of goods as can be found in many cities of 20,000 inhabitants. On the other hand rents and expenses of all kinds are low in this village. The corporation is practically out of debt. Our municipal and school affairs have always been conducted efficiently and economically. We have never been troubled with boodle aldermen or paving rings. And yet our local affairs have not been administered on a parsimonious basis. In the march of public improvements we are fully abreast of the times, but we have never been cursed with official extravagance or corruption, and hence taxes, rents, and expenses are extremely low. But few towns in Michigan possess the advantages above enumerated in so marked a degree as Tecumseh, and our retail merchants make the most of these advantages too. Tecumseh needs more manufacturing establishments, and these will come in due time. The developments during the next twelve months in that direction will astonish a good many people. We need an electric light plant and that will be a fixed fact before another apple crop is marketed. These few digressive remarks will show why the merchants of Tecumseh are continually enlarging and extending their circle of trade, why they can compete successfully with the tradesmen of much larger towns, and why they enjoy reasonable prosperity in the midst of general business depression. But in the words of A. Ward, "let us resoome."

Geo. H. Seelye bought out the boot and shoe business of W.V. Wimple in the month of May last, overhauled the store, enlarged the stock, and now has a very neat and complete establishment. During Mr. Seelye's brief residence among us he has gained a good trade by his courteous treatment of customers and his honorable dealing. He has evidently "come to stay" and is already regarded as a business fixture in this community.

The Anderson family in Tecumseh is about as numerous as the Smith family, and nearly all of them are in trade. Albert Anderson was one of the pioneer merchants of Tecumseh, and when he retired from business a few months ago, his sons donned the father's armor, and under their fostering care Anderson Bros' grocery house is booming right along. They are working up a splendid grocery trade and are an honor to the family name.

C. A. Slayton is another man of the younger generation who is following in the footsteps of his illustrious sire. For many years J. P. Slayton was one of the big blocks in the business arch of this town. The thorough training which Charley enjoyed under paternal instruction he will reap the benefit of while life lasts. He has not only held the old business but has largely extended it. No man in Tecumseh, either young or old, enjoys a higher business standing to-day.

Spayde Bros. are comparatively new comers here, having bought out the clothing store of Kies Bros. a year ago last spring. They had both had considerable experience in trade before coming here, and at once took a leading position among our retail dealers. Since Joe Wilson left town they have enlarged their store and stock and now control one of the most complete establishments in town. "Nothing succeeds like success." The young men have met with marked success since their advent among us, and that tells the story.

Whitenack, Bordine & Co. is one of the old solid firms of this community. John Whitenack bought the business—well, we don't remember how many years ago, but we have grown from boyhood to years of discretion since that time. Mr. Whitenack retired from the active management of the house many years since, and the young men have built up a heavy and lucrative trade. They are well fixed in every respect and are evidently settled down for a life's journey.

Millard P. Brown differs with most everybody else on politics, and yet everybody likes him. He has quit taking pictures for the present, but still holds forth at the ground floor gallery, where he divides his time between pianos and organs, sewing machines and life insurance. Mr. Brown has the assistance of his brother Fred at present, and both of them are kept busy with their increasing trade. There are possibilities for a big business here in both the music and life insurance lines, and we hope they will settle down here permanently.

Harris & Hiteshu—have we forgotten them? Not much. They are not overly large men, physically, but they fill the old corner store, figuratively speaking, to perfection. They belong to the new guard of recent arrivals, but they have already established a first-class business reputation. They keep rather a peculiar stock of goods, but purchasers can always find plenty of bargains lying around loose in their store. If you don't wish to take our word for it, try them and see.

"The old corner" in the Lilley House block stays right there, and amid all the changes and mutations in business circles the old firm of Adamson Bros. moves right along, conquering and to conquer. A thorough knowledge of their calling, strict attention to business details, economy in expenditures, careful scrutiny in making purchases, have combined to give them a rousing trade. They keep an extra corps of clerks during the holiday season. If you don't see what you want, ask for it.

One of the neatest and best conducted merchant tailoring establishments we know of anywhere is the store run by Jones & Hazlett. This is one of our recent firms, and it has taken a first-class position from the veryoutset. The young men, though young in years, are "old heads" at their calling. They are filling a field most acceptably, which is fully appreciated by their numerous customers.

If we took this occasion to mention every advertiser that is represented in these columns, the list would swell beyond our available space. The individuals and firms, who are running business cards, legal ads., and patent medicines in the HERALD at the present time, are all honorable men. They believe in printer's ink and show excellent judgement in selecting their advertising medium; but as this list was designed chiefly to enumerate our retail houses proper, we draw the line with them.

Again, some of our heaviest business concerns, houses that support many families, and pour thousands of dollars every month into the channels of trade, are doing a foreign and wholesale traffic entirely. These are not represented in our columns, and are not included in the enumeration. Tecumseh is largely indebted for her prosperity to Brewer's foundry, and her two roller flouring mills.

Last—but not least, by a long shot—is the "Old Reliable TECUMSEH HERALD." We haven't much space to spare to talk about this house. The man who runs the paper immigrated to this town at an early period of his existence, and has boarded here for several consecutive years. We consider him neither better nor worse than mankind in general. Like all printers he rides a hobby. He thinks his own paper is a leetle the best one this side of Jordan. Any man who signs for the HERALD, and pays a year's subscription, spot cash in advance, can rely upon his friendship. Those erring mortals who fail to take the paper, or taking it, fail to pay for it, he regards with pity, and prays for their regeneration. But with the near approach of the Santa Claus season, his heart overflows with charity for all, and he cordially extends to all his gentleman and lady friends alike a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

HE FOUGHT AT WINCHESTER.

An Old Rebel Soldier Found Warm Friends When Arraigned as a Prisoner.

In the case of the State vs. John Stuart, indictment for larceny, the prisoner appeared in the court-room, scuffling along, scarcely able to walk. He wore a solid check shirt, a very-much-worn suit, and a battered hat.

Appearing as State witnesses were two well-dressed sleek-looking men, who were determined to send the old man to the penitentiary.

"Has the prisoner any counsel?" asked Judge Phillips.

"I have none," answered Stuart. "I am a poor man and unable to pay an attorney."

The judge saw by the man's looks that his was an unusual case, and said: "Well, go on and tell your story."

"Well, sir, I was in the confederate army, and at the battle of Winchester I was shot through both hips. Since then it has been exceedingly hard for me to support myself. I went to work for this man last year upon his word to board and clothe me, and to pay me what my services were worth. During that time he paid me 10 cents with which I bought tobacco. At the end of eight months he refused to pay me any money and refused to give me any clothes, saying my services were worthless. Then I went into his wardrobe, took a suit of clothes to hide my nakedness and left. He had me indicted for larceny, and I have been in jail ever since."

As the old man finished a murmur of indignation was heard througout the court-room.

"You say you were shot at Winchester?" asked Judge Phillips, who was himself an officer in the splendid and memorable charge.

"Yes, sir."

"Were you in the second charge to the left on the other side of the town?"

The prisonor's face brightened.

"Yes," he said, "I was there—Rhodes' division—and was shot while crossing the ravine just below the hill."

The judge was satisfied then that the old veteran was telling the truth, but to be certain he called the State's witness.

While the witness was giving in his testimony, which was to the effect that the old man's story was about right, but that he refused to pay him anything because his services were worthless, Stuart leaned over to Solicitor Settle. "Mr. Settle," he said, "your father and I were friends. I lived in Rockingham county, and your father persuaded me to enlist in his company. I received my wounds while following him. Since then it has been hard for me to keep out of the poorhouse."

By this time Judge Phillips, and Solicitor Settle, and everybody else in the court-room, were satisfied that the old soldier had been pitilessly persecuted, and the faces of the onlookers showed the deepest pity and sympathy for the unfortunate man and the blackest indignation for his employer.

"Mr. Solicitor," said the judge, "change your bill of indictment from larceny to trespass."

This was willingly done by Mr. Settle.

"Now," he continued," judgment is suspended and the prisoner discharged."

Scarcely had the last word been spoken before every man in the room applauded, and great tears were rolling down the cheeks of strong men. As the old man who, half an hour before had been friendless, hobbled out of the court-room, hundreds of men drew around him to skake his hand. Our townsman, W. B. Glen, volunteered to secure him a pension. Mr. Hollyfield, offered him a position as miller and in less than five minutes a purse was made up to buy the old soldier a suit of clothes.—[Leesburgh Mirror.

Bluffed on a Sure Thing.

There were two of the men in our gang of Pennsylvania oil-well diggers and blasters who were constantly fooling with the nitro-glycerine, says a writer in the New York Sun. They would take chances to make your hair stand on end, and the trouble was they imperiled the safety of many others. One of their favorite pastimes was to get out after noon-day lunch and toss a two-pound can of the stuff as far as they could heave it. I more than once saw them stand fifty feet apart, and on three or four occasions saw the can miss their clutch and fall to the earth. Our foreman and all the other men did a great deal of swearing over this foolishness, and once the men were discharged for it, but they were taken back after a time, and as we grew more used to the stuff we took more chances.

One day the men got out with their can, and as the fun was about to begin our foreman said;

"Boys that nonsense will be the death of you yet."

"Bet you ten to five it won't!" replied one of them.

"Yes, and I'll bet you ten to one it won't!" bluffed the other as he shook his wallet at the foreman.

The latter failed to cover, and as he sauntered off down the hill I followed him. We had walked about 200 feet when we were suddenly lifted up and thrown flat to the earth, and then followed a crash which seemed to have rocked the continent. As soon as we could get up we ran back to the derrick, or where the derrick was. It had disappeared, as well as our shanty, and on the site was a hole into which you could have dumped a cottage. Not the slightest scrap of the two can tossers could be found, and the foreman and I stood for several minutes staring into the cavity.

Then he suddenly slapped his leg, waved his hand in disgust, and growled:

"What a two-story fool I was not to take those bets!"

A Fine Field.

"I know; but his best is really very level."—[Harper's Bazar.

HOW BOWSER SHAVED HIMSELF.

"Mrs. Bowser, do you know how much time the average man consumes per week in getting shaved?" queried Mr. Bowser, as he entered the house the other evening with a parcel under his arm.

"I do not."

"Well, I figure at an hour and a half, to say nothing of the expense. One also runs many risks by shaving in a public place."

"Yes."

"And I shall hereafter shave myself. I can do it in seven or eight minutes, at a cost of less than two cents, and I run no risk of having my throat cut by some lunatic."

"Well, I hope you'll make a success of it, but—"

"There you go! Did I ever attempt anything you didn't discourage?"

"But you know you tried it twice and gave it up, and threw your outfits away in disgust"

"And why? Because some one used my razors to cut kindling wood!"

"Mr. Bowser!"

"At least it appeared that way to me, and I got a lame arm and we went off on a visit, and there were several other reasons. From this time forward I shall shave myself, and I shall begin after supper."

After supper he prepared himself with three towels and a quart of hot water, and went up stairs to begin operations. I crept softly up and took a seat on the landing just as Mr. Bowser had removed coat and vest and collar, and was mixing the lather. While he was soaping his face I heard him growl several times, and afterwards ascertained that it was caused by his jabbing the brush into his mouth and eyes by mistake. About one-half of the lather was deposited on his shirt front before he got through. He was just seventeen minutes getting ready for the razor, and when he took it up I heard him multer:

"This thing handles mighty awkward; if that fellow has gone and sold me a left-handed razor I'll prosecute him to the last ditch?"

He held it in various positions to get "the hang," and when he finally got it he made a careful motion along his right cheek. To his great delight he didn't cut his head off. On the contrary he shaved off a whole spoonful of lather, and I heard him chuckling:

"Egad! But I'm getting there with both feet! No barber could beat that!"

Mr. Bowser wears a mustache, and is proud of it. At the third or fourth scrape along his cheek one end of the mustache got in the way of the razor, and a share of it was carried overboard, so to speak.

"By thunder," gasped Mr. Bowser, as he regarded the damage, and he carefully washed all the lather off that side to closer inspect the calamity. Investigation proved that the damage was not beyond repair, and he renewed the lather and went ahead.

In the course of the next fifteen minutes Mr. Bowser must have removed as many as two hairs from his face, and he uttered fully 100 sighs and grunts. He tried the razor in his right hand and in his left, and in every conceivable position, and he brushed on the lather until a hoe would scarcely have scraped it off.

"You see," I heard him saying to himself, "a fellow has to fool around awhile to get confidence in himself. I expected it would take about half an hour this time, but inside of a week I'll make a clean shave inside of five minutes. There—that's a good job."

He wet a towel and wiped the lather off his face and took a look in the glass. The result astonished him. So far as he could see he had not removed a single beard. He had scraped off the lather, but the beard was still there. He growled away for a while, and then mixed a fresh lot of lather and brushed it on, and, after satisfying himself that the razor's edge was all right by cutting a hair he pulled from his head, he laid it against his chin. He gradually turned it up and began to scrape, and I heard him softly saying:

"Now, then, I've got the real hang of it. I was carrying it too flat There's a trick—"

Two things suddenly happened. He cut the left corner of his moustache off and gashed his chin at the same stroke, and the next instant he bounded into the hall and shouted for me.

"Well, what is it?" I asked, as I rose up.

"Look here! I'm fatally wounded?" he cried, as he danced around the hall.

"Let me see. Why, it's nothing but a slight cut. Let me wash the lather off."

It was a lively cut, and it bled freely for a quarter of an hour, during which time Mr. Bowser did a great deal of sighing and groaning and forgot about his mustache. When I had plastered up the cut he returned to the glass, and discovered that his moustache was lopsided, and wheeled on me to exclaim:

"Look at it! Look at that, Mrs. Bowser!"

"Yes, you haggled your mustache. I'll get the shears and trim it off."

"Never! Keep right away from me! Mrs. Bowser, your plot has been discovered!"

"Don't be so foolish, Mr. Bowser. I told you you couldn't shave yourself."

"It is all as plain as day now!" he continued, as he upset the lather cup and walked through its contents; "you probably figured that I'd cut my throat. You were setting at the head of the stairs to catch my death rattle!"

"Did I tell you to bring home that razor? Didn't I try to discourage you from shaving?"

He turned from me without a reply, and I went down stairs. He came down after about half an hour. He had been obliged to sacrifice a third of his mustache to get it in proper shape again and the lather which had gotten into his eyes gave him the appearance of having wept for a week.

"It's too bad," I said, breaking a long and embarrasing silence.

"Oh, it is, is it?" he sneered in reply. "Too bad that I'm not lying a headless corpse up stairs and you figuring on my life insurance!"

"Well it's no use to talk to you, Mr. Bowser."

"Not a bit, Mrs. Bowser. You had a plan; I checkmated it. You stand revealed in your true light as a would-be Borgia, or worse. This is the last straw, Mrs. Bowser—the very last. In the morning we will talk business."

But when morning came he didn't have a word to say. I found his shaving outfit in the side yard, where he had thrown it from the window, and the girl is now using the razor to peel potatoes. —[Detroit Free Press.

A SURETY.

When sad with life's burdens I've smiled them away
By remembrance of joys in an earlier day,
When my heart was so light that no care cast a shade,
And woe was the mist that an April shower made.

I ask not the solace of pleasures unknown—
Fate rules the future, the past is my own!

O, tender the glance from her soft eyes of brown;
O, merry the shouts as we came by the town;
While laughter and wit flowed in harmony sweet,
As our sail caught the breeze at the head of the fleet,

And over the waters faint music was blown—
Fate, keep thou the future, the past is my own!

A little hand pressed me—a pouting lip kissed—
I stole still another; it could not be missed!
Our skipper, discreet as a sphinx, turned to sight
The steamer that started up out of the night;
So we and the stars were together—alone!
Fate, take thou the future, the past is my own!

Ah, memory, thou goddess whose mirrors reflect
The glad that we do and the things we neglect,
Hold up once again that sweet evening of yore
When we studied so fondly young love's witching lore;
Could my heart make a choice it were fashioned of stone!
No, fate rule the future, the past is my own!

And so, through the story of life as it runs—
Its darkness, its sorrows, its shadows, its suns—
There is always this glory and peace we may keep,
Though hope seems to mock us and faith lies asleep,
The bliss we have had still is ours, dearer grown—
Whatever the future, the past is our own.

A PILLOW TRAGEDY.

The Belated Confession of One of the Guilty Conspirators.

Our village was pretty small when I first came to it. But then, as far as that is concerned, I was pretty small myself, and so in every way suited the village. In thinking over my own youthful days it seemed to me a pity that the history of that village should go unrecorded for want of a historian. So I propose, in lack of a better person coming forward, to write some of the particulars of the history of this quiet village. I shall call it Bruceville, because that was not its name, and yet it is near enough the name to be recognized by any of its eminent citizens, while the assumed title, I hope, will protect me if an exasparated populace should undertake to bring a libel suit against me, or to take into the courts of law any of the misdeeds that I shall have the painful duty of chronicling or confessing.

It is generally supposed that the young men, or boys, rather, of the cities are very much worse, as far as pure wickedness is concerned, than the innocent youth who resides in the country or in a small village. My own experience does not bear out this popular idea. If there exists in this world any gang of youngsters who more richly deserved the cells of a prison than we did I have yet to hear of them. I had some aspirations myself to being the leader of this gang of boys, but I have to admit that there were many among us who could astonish even me in suggesting new and entertaining crimes which were to be committed on the suffering inhabitants of that village.

Bruceville is situated in Western Canada, about two miles back from Lake Erie. The village now boasts of a very fine brick school, and I believe there is a principal there and assistant teachers, and a great many other things that were not prevalent when I was a boy. I went to the first school that was ever opened at Bruceville, and that was the first school I ever went to myself. The teacher was a young woman who had amassed a great deal of knowledge apparently; at least we thought so at the time, and the people of the village rented the lower story of a residence for a school-house. I have rather dim recollections of my struggle with learning through the first book. I vaguely remember being trounced once or twice, but I have no recollection as to what the trouble was. I know that even at that early time I was marked as being a boy who, if he kept on in the way he had started, was going to develop into a veritable monster of wickedness. I can remember that there was a certain feeling among some of us that we were not at all the favorites of this teacher, and I believe to this day that the teacher did not have the tact to conceal her preferences. This partiality was brought to a climax one summer's day by her inviting all her favorite pupils up to her house, or the house of her father, to engage in the wild dissipation of games and cracking nuts, and such like hilarious enjoyment. Four or five of us were not invited, and that night I went early to bed. When the young scoundrels of the village wanted to start out on a career of depredations we always went to bed early. Each of the boys had a particular way of getting out of the house unknown to the other inmates, and my own means of exit was crawling through the window on to the kitchen roof, getting down that on the top of a board fence, and then from that to the ground. We always collected each other by mysterious whistles, imitations from the whip-poor-will or quail, and in going to our rendezvous we skirted along the fence or in the dark shadows of buildings, crouching down with our caps drawn over our eyes. This was to avoid possible discovery, although there was no person in creation that would have thought any thing of it if he had met us right in the middle of the street anyhow. Still, there was a certain delight in making a sneak for it, and on this particular occasion four or five of us had gathered for the purpose of breaking up that party at the teacher's house. The teacher belonged to a large family of pioneers who had scattered around that neighborhood. As a number of the family had the same names, both first and second, various adjectives were used to designate the particular one meant. Her father was known as "Swampy John," because he lived on the other side of the swamp, about half a mile distant from the village. Another relative was called "Hilly" John, because he lived on the brow of a hill. The swamp through which we had to pass to get to Swampy John's house was a weird, lonesome place, which took at least six boys, together, each protesting that he was not the least afraid, to cross it. Any single boy, or any two of us for that matter, would have willingly chosen to go to perdition rather than to cross that swamp in the nighttime. But the main road that passed through the village passed through the swamp, and the first house on the other side was Swampy John's. After a whispered consultation it was resolved that we should make up a swamp ghost with which to scare the life out of the teacher and the scholars. It may be mentioned that on the occasion of this party the teacher's father and mother were away visiting somewhere, and would not be back that night. This we had learned from the fortunate invited pupils, who told it as an indication that joy would be unconfined and that there would be no older heads present to interfere with the amusement. The ghost was made up as follows: A pillow was taken and a string tied around the middle of it. Then black pieces of cloth were pinned to represent mouth, nose and eyes. A piece of red flannel was pinned to the black mouth so that it hung out in a picturesque fashion and added to the attractiveness of the pillow as we had fixed it.

A rope was then tied around the center of the pillow to give to it a general resemblance to a man being hanged, and with this all the conspirators started along the road that led through the big swamp. The terrors of the swamp may be understood when I say, as we passed along the lonesome road that was cut through it, we all became terrorized at our own pillow, and one of the weaker brethren became so frightened that he started back, but realizing the fact that he would have to tread the rest of the fearful way alone he stuck by us, being less afraid to be in our company even with the frightful ghost that we had with us, than to go back to the village alone. When we cautiously climbed over the fence and got into the yard that surrounded Swampy John's house we crawled up along the fence to the residence itself. Of course we might easily have gone in by the gate and up the walk, but that wouldn't have had the daredevil effect that we wished to produce even among ourselves. The house was gayly lighted up, and the noise of revelry could be heard. The curtains in the front had been pulled down, but the side window was curtainless, and there we arranged our nefarious business. A pole was stuck up against the house, to which the rope was tied that suspended the frightful-looking pillow, and the pillow was then swung to and fro, so that it would beat gently against the window-pane. The effects of a great scheme are never noticeable until the scheme itself is tried. We now saw that we should have brought a sheet with us to wrap around the lower part of the pillow, so as to give a more realistic view to our ghost. Taking down the pole again and lowering the rope somewhat, it was so arranged that the head of the apparition appeared just above the window-sill, and there was nothing below to intimate that the ghost came to an abrupt conclusion, and nothing to show an investigating person that it was a pillow and not a ghost. Over the sill of every window a conspirator was peering in to see who would first notice the apparition at the uncurtained pane. When it was discovered an unearthly shriek rent the air. I never knew who it was that saw it first or who it was that gave the shriek. But instantly every eye was directed to the terrible specter at the window. One universal howl went up from the guests. The little girls and little boys clung around the skirts of the school-mistress, and she—for she must have been only a young girl herself, although we thought her at that time the embodiment of old age and wisdom—was just as frightened as the rest. She stared at the apparition with dilated eyes and white face. I had a very good view of her and I thought for the moment she was going to faint. The children all around her were screaming and crying and howling for help when there was no help. But the school-ma'am was clear grit. Like the other lady of the adage, she did not believe in ghosts, but she was afraid of them. She knew the lonely situation of the house and realized the fact that it would still be an hour or two before the first of the parents came with lanterns to bring home their children. She knew that if the children were not calmed down there wouldn't be any of them to bring home before another ten minutes. So she quickly shook her skirts free from the clinging youngsters, and for a moment we thought that she was going to come out and scatter us, and then our hearts stood still. She sprang to the door and threw it wide open, and the next word she spoke struck terror into the hearts of the villainous conspirators.

"Here, Tiger! Here, Tiger!" she shouted, and a great big dog bounded in from the kitchen, while we broke in dismay for the fence at the road. Then there were screams and yells from an entirely opposite party. Tiger, who was a great, big, brutal animal, sprang out into the darkness and instantly followed the fleeing mob. He took away most of my wearing apparel as I scrambled over the fence. Every one of us suffered more or less, and we ran the whole way through the swamp road into the village. Then we thought with terror, at last I did, that the pillow was still hanging at the window.

The next day the question in the quiet village was: "Who lost a pillow?" The people of the village were scandalized at the outrage that had been committed, and every one counted pillows. Alas! and alas! in our house there was one pillow short, and many a time next day I wished I had that pillow to sit down on.—Luke Sharp, in Detroit Free Press.

THE LESSON OF LIFE.

Poor Narcissa's Was a Bitter One Indeed.

"Poor Charlie!" said Miss Mindencroft. "I am very sorry for him—very, indeed—but a woman with a career before her can't be encumbered with such a husband as that!"

Narcissa Mindencroft stood before the full-length mirror that was vailed in white muslin and swinging between gilded standards, a proud, imperious beauty of nineteen.

"My dear," said sage Mrs. Nerol, "isn't Mr. Dallas the same that he was a year ago, when you first became engaged to him?"

"I suppose so," said Narcissa, half reluctantly. "But it is I that have changed, Mrs. Nerol. Signor Ferroni says that there is a fortune in my voice. I am to be trained for the operatic stage. I am to travel in Italy and study six hours a day. Charlie wants me to marry him and settle down as a mere drudging housekeeper! The idea!"

"That is all nonsense, Narcissa," said Mrs. Nerol, with spirit. "Charlie Dallas is the last person in the world to expect his wife to become what you term a drudging housekeeper."

"It's all the same thing," said the olive-cheeked beauty. "I don't think I shall marry at all, to tell the truth!"

Mrs. Nerol shook her head sadly. She knew the nature of the brilliant, proud, spirited young creature too well to attempt any remonstrance with her.

So Narcissa Mindencroft went to Italy to study for the operatic stage, with her maid and a grim, spectacled old lady, who wore dyed black silks and, talked monotonously about "having seen better days." Charles Dallas was left behind—a part of the past which seemed to Narcissa as nothing in regard to her radiant future.

But life has its shadows as well as its sunshine and poor Narcissa's path was destined to pass through both.

Scarcely five years had passed since she stepped upon the deck of the European steamer and we see her again sitting solitary and alone in the second-story back room of a third-rate New York boarding-house. The Roman fever had smitten her down just as she was about to reap the laurel crown of success, and after a horrible dream of fevered pain she had recovered consciousness only to realize that she had utterly lost the fine, delicate timbre of her voice, and—more terrible than all—that she was quite penniless and deserted even by the old lady who "had seen better days."

"Not contagious," the old lady had said, hurriedly flinging her belongings into a bag when first Miss Mindencroft had been taken ill. "Ah—it's very well for the doctors to say so—but who can be certain that it is really so? I've my own interests to look to, and I never was of any particular use in a sick chamber!"

So Narcissa had come back to her native city, humble and chastened in spirit, to find every thing totally changed. Good old Mrs. Nerol was dead. No one knew any thing of Charlie Dallas—and the poor girl put an advertisement for music pupils into the papers and counted over the slender contents of her purse with the terrible fear lest they should give out before there were any prospects of a reinforcement.

Apparently, however, nobody was particularly desirous of availing himself of the services of "a young person who had been educated in the best Italian school for the voice and piano," and Narcissa's prospects were getting decidedly dispiriting, when Mrs. Miller, the organist of the chapel, where she crept daily to say her prayers, accosted her one day.

"Miss Mindencroft," she said, abruptly, yet not unkindly, "I think you told me you could sing?"

"I can—a little," said Narcissa, meekly.

"Do you think you could undertake two or three ballads at a soiree?" asked Mrs. Miller. "'Dreaming,' 'When Swallows Build,' an aria from 'Martha,' or something of that kind? A friend of mine was engaged to sing at Mrs. Dayton's on the twentieth of the month, but she has a sore throat and I am commissioned to find a substitute."

"Oh!" cried Narcissa, with a fluttering heart, "I would be so glad of the opportunity. I would do my very, very best!"

"Have you a piano at your lodgings?" asked Mrs. Miller.

Narcissa colored and shook her head.

"I can not afford it," said she. "I am very poor."

"Then we will go to my house and try your voice," said Mrs. Miller.

The verdict was:

"Not bad. Your voice is tolerably sweet, but not strong. I dare say, however, it may do for this occasion."

Poor Narcissa. This "faint praise" was a contrast to what she had expected when she had first trained her fresh young voice for the applause of breathless thousands. But she stifled her mortification and smiled her gratitude for Mrs. Miller's encouragement and recommendation. And then she went home to practice her ballads and make the best bargain she could with old Madame Monise, who kept a second-hand clothing emporium, for one evening's use of a dark blue silk dress, trimmed with black lace, which was not so very much worn! For Narcissa had nothing of her own but the plainest black alpaca, and a well-worn olive-green serge, neither of which costumes, however respectable in themselves, were exactly adapted to the splendors of Mrs. Dayton's ball-rooms.

The eventful evening arrived at last, and the professional balladist found herself seated at the piano, among the glittering throng. She need not have been so nervous, nobody took any notice of her beyond the merest passing glance. Mrs. Dayton herself, a sweet-faced blonde in white satin and pearls, came up to the singer when her first little song was finished, and thanked her pleasantly.

"I will send a waiter to you with a glass of wine," said Mrs. Dayton. "You must be tired."

So until the time for her next song should come Narcissa sat quietly watching the dancers, the promenaders, the inevitable flirters, while one Herr Sobieski did musical wonders upon the violin. Presently she saw in the flower-garlanded portal of the door a tall figure which she knew well, though years had elapsed since last she looked upon it—Charles Dallas' self.

She turned to the plump, elderly lady who sat next her, eating forced strawberries and cream with a countenance of the serenest satisfaction.

"Who is that gentleman by the door?" she asked. "The gentleman talking to Mrs. Dayton?"

The plump lady paused, with a strawberry as plump as herself poised upon her gold spoon.

"Why," said she, "it's Mr. Dayton, to be sure."

"I think you must be mistaken," said Narcissa, with her heart beating very fast. "I—I am quite certain that I used to know him years ago; and his name was Dallas—Charles Dallas."

"It is the same one," said the plump, elderly lady, nodding her head. "You haven't heard of the death and eccentric will of his rich uncle? Dallas inherited a fortune fit for a Prince, with only the condition that he should add the surname of the old miser—Dayton—to his own. Dallas-Dayton, it is printed on the cards; and his wife was a great heiress, too; she was Miss Moneyman, of the firm of 'William Moneyman & Co.' But I am told the marriage was quite a love-match. You can easily see how devoted they are to each other. Mr. Dayton met with quite a disappointment early in life, I have heard; but it is easy to perceive"—with a complacent chuckle—"that the old wound is entirely healed by this time."

So Narcissa Mindencroft sang her second ballad and her third, and received her check for ten dollars from Mrs. Dallas-Dayton's gracious hand and went home, quite unnoticed and unrecognized by the man to whom her smile or her frown had once been like a second fate! There were a great many people there, and it was scarcely to be expected that the host should seek out the paid ballad singer who trilled her notes for the amusement of her guests, any more than she should distinguish Herr Sobieski or Signor Tremolini who played the violin and "did" the cornet solos. It was all right and natural enough.

But Narcissa cried quietly upon her pillow when she got back to her cheerless room. A homeless, friendless, loveless old maid—it was hardly the sort of life she had anticipated when she threw off Charles Dallas' faithful love like a worn-out glove.

The lesson of life! We all have to learn it, but to some it is bitterer, far, than to others.—Amy Randolph, in N. Y. Ledger.

Raw Oysters Self-Digestive.

"Fothergill on Indigestion," in speaking of the oyster being eaten habitually and by preference in the raw or uncooked state, says: "It is interesting to know that there is a sound physiological reason at the bottom of this preference. The fawn-colored mass which constitutes the dainty of the oyster is its liver, and this is little less than a mass of glycogen; associated with the glycogen, but witheld from actual contact with it during life, is its appropriate digestive ferment—the hepatic diastace. The mere crushing between the teeth brings these two bodies together, and the glycogen is at once digested, without other help, by its own diastace. The oyster in the uncooked state, or merely warmed, is, in fact, self-digestive. But the advantage of this provision is wholly lost by cooking, for the heat employed immediately destroys the associated ferment, and the cooked oyster has to be digested like any other food by the eater's own digestive powers."

She Wounded His Heart.

As a confectioner's wife at Buda-Pesth was cutting tissue-paper with a sharp-pointed knife, a young man, a friend, bent over her to kiss her. She lifted her hand in defense, and before she was aware of it the knife had wounded the young man to the heart. He died almost immediately.

Vessels Built of Paper.

The German naval authorities are said to have been making experiments lately with a torpedo boat built of compressed paper. The vessel is eleven feet long and was found to show great strength and more elasticity when rammed by another boat.

A Distressing Accident at the Village of Saukville, Wis.

A Mother and Her Three Children Drowned in the Milwaukee River—Details of the Peculiar Disaster.

FOUND WATERY GRAVES.

PORT WASHINGTON, Wis., Dec. 12.—A terrible and peculiar drowning accident occurred Wednesday by which a mother and her three children were drowned at Saukville, on the Milwaukee river. A 6-year-old son of Claude Augustin went to the river bank and ventured out on the ice. It suddenly broke and he fell into the river. His mother heard his cries and rushed to his rescue. Frantically throwing herself into the icy water she endeavored to save her drowning boy. In a few moments she was beyond her depth and drowning herself. Her 17-year-old daughter, Augusta, heard the cries and hastened to the spot. Seeing her mother in the water she rushed to her rescue. The ice broke with her and she was thrown into the chilling torrent, mother and daughter locked themselves together in a death struggle and sunk beneath the water and ice. They were just disappearing when a 4-year-old son of Mrs. Augustin, who had been with the sister, toddled out on the ice. With plaintive cries of "Mamma! mamma! I want you!" he ran over the ice until he reached the hole in which his mother, his sister and his brother were buried. The little fellow saw his mother and sister sink and threw himself, as he supposed, into his mother's arms. In an instant he was carried beneath the ice. A man named Christian Nelssen saw the tragedy, but was powerless to render any aid. He was on rotten ice and broke in several times before he reached the spot where the family had been wiped out. When he finally got there they had disappeared. The body of Mrs. Augustin was recovered, but the bodies of the children can not be found.

LAID TO REST.

Funeral of Jefferson Davis in the City of New Orleans.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 12.—The funeral of Jefferson Davis, which took place in the Metaire Cemetery at 11:30 a. m. yesterday, where his body is temporarily placed in the tomb of the Army of Northern Virginia, was one of the most imposing and the most memorable in many respects that has ever been witnessed in the South.

Dispatches from every part of the Southern States indicate that the mourning of the South was general and that the day was observed in all the principal cities. Memorial services were held at Danville, Va.; Charlotte, N. C.; Charleston, W. Va.; Nashville, Tenn.; Marshall, Mo.; Raleigh, N. C.; Norfolk, Va., where the flags of the shipping were at half-mast and minute guns were fired; Wilmington, N. C.; Rome, Ga.; Montgomery, Ala.; Augusta, Ga.; Birmingham, Ala.; Lexington, Va., and Richmond, Va. The display of mourning emblems was general in all the cities, bells were tolled and cannon fired.

EIGHT MEN KILLED.

Two Disasters on the Pennsylvania Road at Different Places.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—Sunday evening the Pennsylvania railroad congressional limited express from New York for Washington while passing Benning's station, four miles north of this city, ran into a wagon containing five men, instantly killing four and badly wounding the fifth. Two of the killed were white men, named Bradford Godfrey and J. H. Field. The two colored men were named Morris Flowden and Charles Makil.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 16.—An eastbound express train on the Pennsylvania railroad struck a wagon containing four men Saturday night at a grade crossing in Tacony, a suburb of this city. Henry Morgan, of Bristol, Pa., and Jack Ritchie and William Hotchkiss, of Tacony, were killed, and Dennis McShaffer, driver of the wagon, perhaps fatally injured.

Bridges Wrecked at Johnstown.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., Dec. 16.—The only damage done by the flood Saturday was the wrecking of the Woodvale, Lincoln and Cambria bridges and the flooding of Woodvale, Iron and Washington streets. Two bodies were recovered from the Conemaugh, having been washed out by the high water. Both were those of men unidentified.

Girl Burglars Sentenced.

WOOSTER, O., Dec. 16.—Hattie Sang and Minnie Snyder, aged 16 years, have been sentenced to two years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. Recently they broke into and robbed a store, and on being asked for an explanation they said they wanted to do something "devilish."

Another Kansas Bank Closed.

RICHFIELD, Kan., Dec. 16.—The Bank of Richfield failed to open Saturday morning, having made an assignment to R. K. King, of this place, for the benefit of creditors. The assets are claimed to amount to $50,000: liabilities, $21,000.

Three Miners Buried.

ISHPEMING, Mich., Dec. 14.—Three miners were buried Friday morning by a fall of ground at the Iron Mountain mine. Their names are not known. The chances of rescuing them are slight.

Burned to Death.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Dec. 14.—The Oklahoma House was destroyed by fire early yesterday morning, and James Russell, a boarder, was burned to death and several others badly hurt.

Favor Annexation.

MONTREAL, Can., Dec. 14.—At a meeting of the leading French-Canadian political organization in this city the club declared for annexation to the United States.

Eleven Horse Thieves Lynched.

CHEYENNE, Wy. T., Dec. 12.—"Kettle Jack's" gang of horse and cattle thieves in the Big Horn valley, eleven in number, have been lynched by a band of settlers.

FROM WASHINGTON.

News of General Interest from the National Capital.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—At the earnest solicitation of his Democratic colleagues Representative Cothran has consented to reconsider his determination to resign his seat his Congress. It was represented that his action might injure the party in view of the close political complexion of the House.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14.—Thomas Parker, a well-known citizen of Washington, died here Thursday, aged 83. He was one of those who drew Lafayette's carriage into Washington from Baltimore in 1824. He was father-in-law of ex-Governor Charles P. Johnson, of Missouri.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14.—At the session of the Pan-American conference yesterday President Blaine appointed the various committees and the conference adjourned until January 2.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14.—The bureau of statistics of the Treasury Department reports that during November the value of breadstuffs exported was $10,053,446.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—Hon. Jehu Baker, who represented the Fourteenth Illinois district in the Fiftieth Congress, has served notice of contest on W. S. Foreman, the present member from that district. A batch of testimony, under seal, was received by the elections committee in the House Saturday. This will not be opened until the case is called. Mr. Baker had signified his intention of not contesting, and his present action is something of a surprise.

HORRIBLE.

Exiles to Siberia Said to Have Been Massacred—Nine Lives Taken.

LONDON, Dec. 16.—Reports have been received here of the massacre of Siberian exiles. It is alleged that a party of exiles, having hesitated, contrary to orders, in regard to the withdrawal of a petition, were attacked by police and soldiers. Six were shot dead, including a young woman. Nine were wounded. The pretext for the attack was that the petition was of a rebellious character. A court-martial condemned three of the survivors to death and the others to long terms of imprisonment. One of the wounded was carried to the gallows on a bed. When the noose had been adjusted the bed was removed. Friends of the victims declare this to be the worst case in Siberian records.

A TERRIFIC BLAST.

Three Glycerine Magazines Explode at North Clarendon, Pa., Causing a Great Amount of Damage.

TITUSVILLE, Pa., Dec. 16.—Three separate glycerine magazines blew up Sunday morning at North Clarendon, seven miles above Warren. The amount of glycerine exploded was over ten tons. The magazines were owned by the Rock Glycerine Company, John Kuhn and Mr. McKay. The explosion set fire to two 85,000-barrel tanks full of oil belonging to the National Trust Company. They are still burning and will be total losses. Several oil derricks were also burned. No one so far as can be learned was injured. Nearly every window in Clarendon was broken and much damage was done to surrounding property. No cause is assigned for the accident. The loss is estimated at $100,000.

"HELD UP."

A Lone Highwayman Gets In His Work on Another California Stage.

NEVADA, Cal., Dec. 16.—A stage from Downeville was held up Sunday afternoon four miles above here by a lone highwayman. There were three passengers on the stage, but one of them escaped to the woods. The others were ordered to dismount. A freight wagon with two men came along, and these men were also compelled to dismount and join the stage passengers. About $150 was taken from the stage passengers and five packages of registered mail were stolen. The robber attempted to break open the express box, but failed. The teamsters say that two other highwaymen were hidden in the bush.

Many Cattle Dying.

DAVENPORT, Ia., Dec. 16.—Cattle are dying by wholesale in Cleona township, this county, from the result of smutty corn. Fully 150 cattle have already died, and it is no uncommon thing for a farmer to go into his fields and find one or more of his stock dead. Farmers who have turned their cattle into corn-fields are changing them back into the pastures as rapidly as possible.

IF OUR CLOCK COULD SPEAK

It isn't a scrumptious thing to see—
It's rather short of paint—
Its brows will al'aye wrinkled be—
Its tick is growin' faint;
The circulation's noways good—
The j'ints too stiffy play—
It some't oft'ner than it should
Forgits the time o' day;
'Twill stop an' try to recollect
Fur somethin' like a week;
But there'd be music, I suspect,
If our old clock could speak!

In rain or shine, through peace an' war,
It's still been, as appears,
A member of our family for
Some five and fifty years;
It stood right there through thick and thin,
An' kep' track of the sun,
An' raked its own opinions in
'Bout what we mortals done;
It's had good watch o' young an' old
(An' looked so mild and meek!)
Some anecdotes thet' would be told
If our old clock could speak!

It's stood aroun' at every meal
'Mid clash o' plate and cup,
An' heard us out ideas reveal,
An' size our neighbors up;
It's traced our little bickerin's, too,
An' seemed to sympathize,
A squintin' softly at us through
Them solemn key-hole eyes;
It's umpired many a lively game
O' social hide-an'-seek;
'Twould score a number o' the same,
Providin' it could speak!

How our folks drove to town one day,
An' lef' us chilrun free
With self-protectin' things to play,
"But let the ol' clock be!"
An' though we young uns (never still)
Hadn't thought o' that before,
We now couldn't let it 'lone until
It crashed down on the floor!
We tremblin' set it up again,
Half-runnin' with a squeak;
'Twas lucky for our jackets then
The critter couldn't speak?

How ol' folks went to church one night
An' left us all—sly elves—
If we'd conduct there—good an' right—
A meetin' by ourselves;
But neighbor gals an' boys in teens
Walked in—an' first we knew,
We fell to playin' "oats, peas, beans,"
"Snap up an' catch 'em," too;
We scattered, when, by good ear-luck
We hearn the big gate creak;
The old clock frowned and ticked an' struck,
But couldn't make out to speak!

Ah me! the facts 'twould just let fly
Suppose it had the power!
Of courtin' chaps, when on the sly,
They turned it back an hour;
Of weddin's—holdin' tender yet
The bride's last virgin grace;
Of fun'rals—where it peeped to get
A good look at the face;
It knows the inside-out o' folks—
An' nature's every freak;
I'd write a book if I could coax
That wise ol' clock to speak!

Still straight as any gun it stan's
Ag'in the kitchen wall;
An' slowly waves its solemn han's
Outlivin' of us all!
I venerate some clocks I've seen,
As e'en a'most sublime;
They form revolvin' links between
Etarnity an' time,
An' when you come to take the pains
To strike a dreamy streak,
The figurative fact remains
That all the clocks can speak.

A CRUEL DECEIVER.

How Willoby F. Tabbs Won and Lost His Adored.

A Little Tale of Love's Devotion Which Illustrates the Fact That Genius Has No Show in This Unappreciative World.

Willoby F. Tabbs, the author, worshiped, at a distance, the beautiful Miss Pearl Balch, daughter of the millionaire. Willoby knew that his position as an author would secure him a hearing—that is, he believed that he could gain the ear if not the hand of the heiress; but he did not care to win her by means of his reputation; he wanted to win her by his personal graces and the brightness of his conversation. It was, therefore, necessary that he should not let his real name be known; that he should, in some way, approach her as an ordinary man, and then when he should win her throw off his disguise and delight her with the truth.

One night he sat in his room musing over the creation of some possible scheme. "Let me see now. Unless I go as a distinguished man of some sort I can not get an introduction to her, and in that event I should gain no real victory. When I marry I want to know that my wife loves me for myself alone; but the difficulty remains, for other than the well-known author or the well-known somebody how can I act? But wait. Might I not go in the character of a servant and thus catch an occasional chance of speaking to her? I've hit it. By George, I'll be her father's coachman."

The next day a boy, entering the office of Jacob Balch, said that a man wished to see him.

"Tell him I'm busy."

"But he says his business is very important."

"Tell him to come in."

A man dressed in neat but plain clothes entered.

"Well, sir, what business have you with me?"

"I notice," said the visitor, "that you have a very fine team of horses."

"Yes, but I don't want to sell—"

"Oh, I didn't suppose you did. Let me get through, please. I notice that your team is not very well driven and, more than that, not very well taken care of."

"Humph! I don't know but you are right."

"And I have come," the visitor continued, "to tell you that I should like to have the opportunity to serve you as coachman. I have been in the employ of a number of leading gentlemen both in this country and in Europe, and know that I should give satisfaction; and to show how thoroughly in earnest I am, let me say that I will serve on trial for six months and shall during that time expect no wages."

Mr. Balch, being a millionaire, was ever impressed by a proposition that did not cost any thing.

"What's your name?"

"John Jones, sir."

"Ah, a good honest name, and, John, I don't know but I'll give you a trial. Do you know where I live?"

"Yes, sir."

"All right. Come around this evening at seven o'clock."

John was engaged. He was a middling driver, and by reading up on "how to take care of horses," managed to make a good showing. One morning he approached his master and said:

"I find, sir, that after doing my work at the stables I have considerable time on my hands."

"Well."

"I was thinking, sir, that during that spare time I might work in the flower garden. For which I should make no charge," he added, perceiving an expression of anxiety on the millionaire's face.

"All right, John, just go ahead. That's the best fellow I ever ran across," he continued when John had withdrawn.

The bright smile of a beautiful day was settling into the thoughtful mood of evening. Pearl was walking in the garden. The coachman was hovering over a bed of tulips.

"John, how are the roses?"

"Doing very well, miss, considering the unfavorable weather we have had recently. The rose is the genius of flowers; to be beautiful, the atmosphere about it must be inspiring."

She stopped and looked earnestly at him.

"Other flowers," he went on, "represent the common race of man, but the rose is the poet."

"Yes," she said, after a slight pause, "but the rose is not the most delicate, for do we not have to keep some flowers in a hot-house?"

"Not the poets, though," he quickly replied, "for the poet's province is not the hot-house, but the open garden of nature."

"I am surprised, John—er—Mr. Jones, to find you so sentimental."

"Miss, I have chosen this mode of life merely to indulge my sentiment. I might have gone into business, but business is a worm that enters into the bud of fancy; I might have chosen a profession, but the cheating at law and the blundering pretenses of medicine are the stabbers of imagery."

"You quite surprise me, Mr. Jones. Do you read much?"

"I am not a great reader, but an ardent one. In literature I have my loves, and I am true to them."

Evening after evening Pearl and John met, by accident, of course, in the garden.

"You are, in my opinion, a noble man," she once said.

"You forget that I am your father's coachman."

"No, I do not," she replied. "I know that you are a coachman, but—but—"

"But what, miss?"

"Do not call me miss. The word is harsh."

"It is not so bright, but in my case more appropriate than Pearl."

She caught her breath with a quick sigh. "You may call me Pearl."

"Let me call you something else."

"What else?"

"Something sweeter—my darling."

He caught her in his arms. "Angel," he said, "will you be my wife? Will you run away with a coachman?"

"Yes, a thousand times yes," she whispered.

"Pearl, I have something to tell you."

"What is it, love?"

"Something that will make your heart beat with gladness."

"Tell me, love."

"Pearl, I saw you, and was determined to win you. I am not a coachman. I am Willoby F. Tabbs, the author."

She broke loose from him. "What, you not a coachman! Wretch! You have deceived me!"

"What's this!" exclaimed the millionaire, coming upon them.

"This wretch has deceived us, father!"

"Let me explain," Willoby began; "let me tell—"

"Tell me nothing!" the old man howled, and then kicked Willoby into the street.—Opie P. Read, in Arkansaw Traveler.

HERE'S A GOOD YARN.

And It Is so Very Original That It Must Be True.

A correspondent of Forest and Stream had been told that there were trout in Big Spring creek "that long" (indicating something less than a yard), and so, he writes, having no fish-line, I twisted a formidable cable of black linen thread, and for some hours I patiently waded the icy stream and tried to convince the fish that my ponderous tackle was not so bad as it looked; still, they wouldn't even consider the matter. I had my doubts as to there being any fish there after all, but I threw a grasshopper on the surface of the current, and as I watched it drift down over a deep green pool under a ledge of rock an enormous trout rose majestically, much as I have seen porpoises roll, and gathered in the grasshopper, thereby putting an end to my doubts at once.

Well, thinks I to myself, that's a little the biggest trout I ever saw or heard of, and I must certainly make another effort. So, with many misgivings, I set about twisting another line of white thread, when suddenly it occurred to me that if I could make him jump like that again, so coolly and easily, I would have time enough to put a rifle bullet mighty close to him before he could settle back to the safety of deep waters. Shooting trout on the rise, too, would certainly be original if not exactly lawful.

So I threw away the thread and hooks and, taking my rifle along, caught another grasshopper. This I threw just as I had thrown the other, and the moment it struck the water I sighted it and followed it along as it drifted over the same pool. As before, there was a gleam of scarlet and olive green, the hopper was gone and before I knew it I had discharged the rifle into the mighty swirl. No result at first, and I thought what a fool I was to suppose that I could shoot a jumping fish with a rifle, but presently a huge pink belly made its appearance, coming to the surface, and there floated my fish, larger ever than he had appeared before. I rushed in on a shallow riffle and seized him as he came down. Oh! such a beauty and not a bruise on him. He must have been entirely under water before the bullet got there, but he had received such a shock that he hardly moved after it. I had no means of weighing him, but his length was 20¾ inches.

JAMES UPDYKE, Jr.

A KOORDISH ADVENTURE.

Thomas Stevens, the adventurous traveler who completed the feat of traveling around the world on a bicycle, writes [illegible] Koordistan:

It was while making my way through one of the wildest sections of the country in western Persia, that I found myself among a tribe of wild Koords. These people roam the deserts of Koordistan with their flocks and herds, living in black tents made of woven goats hair.

It is considered very unsafe for a traveler to venture among these half-savage nomads alone, and the governor of the province usually sends an escort of soldiers to guard a person through the territory. The Pasha Khav of Ovaljik wanted to send an escort with me, but I always found an escort a nuisance, owing to the necessity of moderating my speed to the ability of of the horses.

Over the smooth camel trails and gravelly deserts it was no trouble for me to cover sixty miles, or more, in a day with the bicycle, whereas the horsemen would never want to travel more than about thirty. This annoyed me, and I preferred venturing into the Koordish country alone.

Although they are not to be trusted, and are freebooters by nature and instinct, these wild children of the Persian deserts are very hospitable. So long as one is beneath the shelter of the chieftain's tent, both his person and property are held sacred. No sooner does the traveler start on his journey again, however, than he is liable to be overtaken and robbed by his hosts of an hour before.

The first night I slept in the Koordish tents I was treated hospitably; but, before riding two miles, I was interrupted by a couple of stalwart ruffians who intended to rob me, and would have done so had I not drawn my revolver, and holding it it ready, passed steadily on.

They hesitated a moment and then, to my great relief, turned back in the direction of the tents and I saw no more of them.

Early in the evening of the second day among the Koords, I reached a camp of about twenty tents, occupying the foot of a range of low hills. From the rude, uncivilized appearance and demeanor of the shepherds whom I passed in making my way towards the camp, I could see at once that they were a rough crowd; but, there was no other place to go, so I had to seek the hospitality of their tents, whether I liked the outlook or not.

The chief of this camp I found was absent on a visit to another branch of the tribe, many miles away. In the absence of the chieftain, one of the elders usually takes upon himself the office of entertaining guests. In this particular camp, however, there seemed to be no well-regulated arrangements of any kind.

One of the men motioned me into the nearest tent, and by and by a young woman brought me a bowl of clabbered goat-milk and a dish of pillau (boiled rice, or wheat) and herbs. She was a girl of most singular and striking appearance.

She was certainly not less than six feet tall—a very great stature for a woman—and her eyes were round and wild-looking, like the eyes of a cat, or more correctly, of some wild animal. So very strangely like a wild animal's eyes were they in shape and expression, that it seemed to me as if they would most assuredly turn green and shine in a dark room like a cat's eyes.

All the women in the camp now came flocking about me, ta take a curious look at the stranger from Frangistan, riding on the iron horse. They were a wild-looking lot of females. Many of them had their unkempt looks dyed to a fiery red, or "carrotty" hue; and this, with the peculiar, savage expression of their eyes, made them look as ferocious as so many human tigresses. All of them had these round, staring eyes; never before had I seen such an array of wild-animal orbs—no, not even in the Zoo at Central Park.

As they stood there watching me eat with the greatest curiosity, I dimly recollected reading, when a boy, about travelers being waylaid and captured on the road by bands of these tiger-eyed Koordish women. I remembered smiling and thinking the stories nothing but "traveler's tales" at the time, but I could see plainly enough then that these women were capable of anything that tigresses are capable of.

Although everything seemed to be managed in a loose, haphazard way in this camp, no order, no mannerliness about anything, they gave me some sheepskins to sleep on, and in the morning something more to eat.

When about mounting my bicycle to start, about twenty women came racing from the different tents, shouting and laughing like a lot of rude school-boys let out of school for a half-holiday. From the manner in which they issued from the tents, it was very plain that they had planned it all beforehand.

With much boisterous hilarity they surrounded me, and refused to let me go. If I attempted to break away from them, some would seize the bicycle, and others cling to my garments. They seemed to take a rude, boisterous delight in dancing about and worrying me, as though I were a rat and they a gang of puppies barking and capering about. They were a ferocious-looking lot of women, and their object was, very plainly, to overpower and rob me.

One of them jammed my helmet down over my eyes, and several tugged away at my coat trying to pull it off, believing, no doubt, that my money would be found in the pockets. Several times broke loose, but they would form a ring around me again at once.

I was at a loss what to do. The men had all taken themselves off, evidently on purpose to leave the field clear for the women to rob me. One could not very well use his revolver on women, nor, even use violent measures of defence. No American or Englishman worthy of the name, would strike women, even though, like these wild Koordesses, they might be bent on doing him violence.

At length after trying in vain several times to escape, I bethought me of a little strategy that would perhaps secure my freedom. Most of the money I had with me was in Turkish gold coin, concealed in a money belt beneath my clothes. In a small leather case which I carried on the bicycle, however, I had a bag of native silver coins, which I needed to pay the incidental expenses of the road.

Bidding my tormentors keep quiet a minute by an impressive gesture, for I didn't know a word of their language, I took out this bag of coins, showed them that it was all the money there was in the case, and distributed it among them. They seemed to be but partly satisfied at this; evidently they expected to obtain a richer booty than a handful of silver pieces.

But although reluctant to let me go, they offered a less determined frout than before, and I finally broke away from them. Springing into the saddle, I hastened to make good my escape; but I had to be pretty lively about it, for several of the more determined of these wild-eyed women came racing after me almost as swiftly as dear. It was a unique experience, and one that I shall not be very likely to forget, this adventure with the mob of Koordish women.

STURDY JUDGE CONKLING.

Anecdotes About Him and His Famous Son the ex-Senator.

Old residents of Auburn tell many anecdotes of sturdy Judge Conkling and of the boyhood days of his distinguished son, Roscoe Conkling. Charles Briggs, for instance, for many years the freight agent of the New York Central road, at Auburn, delights in telling how the future United States Senator came to him one day and said;

"'I have had a row with my father, Charley, and I want to go on the road as a brakeman. Will you help me to get a place?'

"He must have been about 16 then," said Briggs, "but I knew there was good stuff in him. I knew, too, that it would distress his father, who was a very proud man, to have his son employed in any such capacity. So I reasoned with Rosc, urging him to study law, or something like that. Well, he did study law, and was appointed district attorney of Oneida county before he was 22 years old."

The old judge did not bolieve in shining by borrowed light, as this little incident will show. On one occasion he was introduced as "the father of Senator Conkling." Straightening himself up until his fine and dignified figure was seen to advantage, he said:

"Introduce me as Judge Conkling, sir."—[New York Press.

Governor Oglesby on Himself.

Governor Oglesby is a frank, blunt old chap, not at all tender with other people's foibles, and occasionally developing a tendency to jump on himself and give himself a scolding. Some months ago F. H. Wines, secretary of the State board of charities, sat with the governor on the cars between Chicago and Springfield. Uncle Dick was in a thoughtful mood, and he finally turned to his companion and inquired:

"Wines, what can you look back on in your life and take genuine pleasure in? What good have you done? What have you accomplished in this world? Is the world any better for your having lived in it?"

Wines accepted the challenge thus forced upon him, and modestly recounted some of things which led him to believe his life had not been an absolute failure.

"And now, Governor," said he, "what have you done? What goods works have you performed?"

"That's just what I've been thinking about," replied the Governor; "and do you know, Wines, I have come to the conclusion that Dick Oglesby is a d——d old fraud."

Krupp Knocked Out by Pittsburg.

Another conquest for Pittsburg iron industries is securing the government order for hard steel rolls for the Philadelphia mint by Messrs. Trethewey, and an order for twenty-four rolls from the Argentine republic.

Every great steel center in the country has tried repeatedly to wrest this order from Krupp, of Germany. This firm was the only one in the world that knew how to harden the surface of the rolls, and at the same time allow the body of the roll to contract and expand. For many years Messrs. Trethewey have labored and expended a great deal of time and money in trying to learn the process. Their efforts have at last been crowned with success.

The rolls have to be perfectly smooth. A hole into which a pin's point could be inserted would render them worthless, because the work they have to perform is most delicate, rolling paper, tinfoil, gold plate, and bullion.

Room for the Heavenly Feet.

The young ladies of Burnett, Wis., have formed "The Heavenly Foot" society, the object of which is to do away with the practice of wearing a number 2 shoe on a number 5 foot.

President Jackson, so the story goes, once said to a bibulous White House employe: "Pat, I am heartily tired of this; we will have to separate." "Where's yer honor goin'?" promptly came the witty reply.

"Madam," said the conduotor, as he came along to the old lady who had a good-sized chunk of a boy seated beside her, "if that boy is over 5 years of age he will have to pay half fare."

"He is my grandson, he is," she explained, "and I'm taking him home to stay with me for a few weeks. His mother hain't been a bit well this hull summer and——"

"He is certainly 8 or 9 years old," interrupted the conductor.

"And as I was saying, she's tried almost everything, and hain't got no benefit. I recomended June weed tea, and she drank as much as six gallons afore she quit. She then——"

"Half fare, madam!"

"Yes, but I wanted to say that I then told her she'd better have William go to the woods and dig some sarsaparilly root and bile it up. That's an old standby with all the Johnsons. Bile it down to about a gallon, and then add a pint of whisky and keep——"

"Madam, I'm in a hurry!" sharply interrupted the official.

"Yes, but I want to tell you. You may git a poor spell some time, and want something to brace you. The Johnsons have used sarsaparilly for upward of forty years, and if it's rightly prepared it has no ekal. After you put in the whisky you want to keep it in a cool place. I s'pose you've got a cellar in your house, haven't you? If you hain't——"

"Bub, how old are you?" asked the conductor as he turned to the child.

"His name is Joshua," she explained as she patted him on the head. "His mother kinder wanted to call him Lincoln or Garfield, but I hung out for the old-fashioned names. It was a close shave between Joshua and Obediah, but Joshua came in ahead. Biblical names you know, while Obediah, was of no particular account. If I remember right Obediah fiddled while Jerusalem was bnrnin' up. Joshua, spell dog for the gentleman."

"D-o-g," announced the child in loud tones.

"La! but isn't he smart!" exclaimed the grandma, as she patted him again.

"Madam," said the condctor, making one last effort, "the rules of the road bind me to collect fares whenever they are due. This boy——"

"As I was saying he will stay with me about four weeks," she interrupted. "He had a kind of rash breaking out on him in spells for the last three months, and I'm going to have him try buttermilk for it. The Johnsons have allus sot s ore by buttermilk et's almost as good as—"

He turned and passed on to the next, outwinded and discouraged, and she snuggled the boy up and said:

"Now Josh, you kin go to sleep for an hour, and when you wake up I'll give ye a biled egg and a cookie."

A Toss-Up for a Nomination.

Judge Elijah Robinson, of Louisiana, Mo., is at the Midland, says the Kansas City Times. Judge Robinson is one of the best-known politicians in Central Missouri. He has twice made the race for the Democratic nomination for congress in the seventh congressional district, and each time missed it by but a scratch. Two years ago the fight for the nomination was a red hot though a friendly one. Judge Robinson, of Pike, and Richard Norton, of Lincoln, were the foremost candidates, and before the day of the convention rolled around these two had distanced the rest of the crowd, and it was evident that one or the other would win. It is the unexpected that always occurs in that district, and this fact kept every man in the race, and when the nominating convention met in the little town of Warrenton, August 26, every candidate was in the field and the fun began. Buttons were pulled off and button holes pulled out until the delegates were a careworn and unhappy-looking crowd.

The balloting was begun. Ballots to the number of 200 were taken. A deadlock was on, and for two days the opposing forces battled. After the first day it narrowed down to Robinson and Norton. There were sixty-six votes in the convention. Thirty-four would nominate. Each could get thirty-three votes, but the thirty-fourth persisted in vacillating.

The second day of the convention, so the story goes, Norton and Robinson met by appointment in the parlor of one of the hotels. Mutual friends were present, the doors were locked, and it was proposed to settle the matter.

"How shall it be done?" asked Robinson.

"Flip a dollar," replied Norton.

"Agreed," was the answer.

"Heads or tails?" asked Norton.

"Tails," shouted Robinson, as the coin went spinning toward the ceiling. Tails it was and Robinson took the coin.

"I'll take heads," said Norton. The coin came down with the goddess uppermost. It was horse and horse and the excitement was intense. A seat in congress was pending on the next throw. Not a man spoke as Norton picked up the coin for the final throw.

"Tails again," said Robinson, as Norton nervously flipped the dollar.

The calm face of the goddess again came down last and Norton had won. The two shook hands, went back to the hall, where the weary delegates were voting on about the six hundredth ballot. The tip was given; on the next ballot the deadlock was broken and Norton nominated. He was elected by about 2,500 majority. Judge Robinson, who lost a seat in congress by the chance flip of a dollar, is prominently mentioned as a candidate again two years hence.

A Parisian Joke.

The many acquaintances of Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds, prominent members of the First Baptist church of this city, says the Minneapolis Journal, are telling an amusing story in which the two were the chief characters. The scene is laid in gay Paris. Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds recently made a lengthy European trip. While in Paris, they were patrons of a fashionable hotel. Several months before leaving for the tour abroad Mrs. Reynolds assiduously applied all her energies to studying the French language. She was an unusually apt scholar. When the time for leaving home came Mrs. Reynold's teacher congratulated her upon the rapid manner in which she had mastered the language, and Mrs. Reynolds personally believed she was proficient enough to cope with the Parisians in their own tongue when the great metropolis should be reached.

Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds spent many a pleasant day in Paris, and only have in remembrance one brief half day of agonizing misery. It happened this way: In Parisian hotels the attaches are suave and obliging. One afternoon Mr. Reynolds journeyed down town alone. When Mrs. Reynolds found herself ready to leave her apartments, she turned to the bright-eyed waiting maid, and with the best French at her command, told the girl to tell her husband, when he returned to the room, that she had gone down into the public parlor, where she would wait for him.

"Oui, madame, replied the girl with a knowing smile and a low courtesy. It was evident the girl had had such commands given her before.

Mrs. Reynolds passed down to the public parlor. She waited a full hour for her husband, and by this time became very nervous over his non-appearance. She went up stairs and went out upon the verandah. When nearly opposite her apartments she heard strange sounds from within. Passing quickly to the window, she was thunderstruck to see her husband pacing the floor at a lively gait, gesticulating wildly with his hands, and muttering savagely. Ever and anon he would try the door. It would not open. Mrs. Reynolds ran to his assistance; opened the door; the girl was found and then followed general explanations. Mrs. Reynolds French had tripped he up, so to speak. The girl understood her to say she should lock her husband in when he returned, and she obeyed orders. Both Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds afterward enjoyed the joke hngely.

Thereafter, however, Mrs. Reynolds insisted that the language of her forefathers was good enough for her.

In place of a Christmas tree and the scholars receiving presents, the Baptist Sunday school will have a supper and social on Christmas Eve. Tuesday evening. The scholars are making presents to send up in the Northern peninsula.

On the 18th day of December, Anno Domini 1889, a full fledged, fat, frisky musquito entered the confines of our sanctum with all the dignity and sauciness which would characterize such a visitor in the dog days. The oldest inhabitant can now scratch his head to recall a parellel.

B. L. Baxter met with a serious accident last Saturday, which may lay him up for some time. While returning from his farm near Deerfield, he accidently drove into a ditch, overturning his buggy and throwing him out. His collar bone was broken and his body seriously bruised. Medical attendance was summoned and he is doing as well as could be expected.

Blissfield Advance: An Ogden young couple, coming home from protracted meeting a few nights ago, sat a while to rest on a large log lying by the road side. Soon they heard coming steps. She said: It must be my father! get behind the log." He had his best clothes on, but he got. The comer was not pa, but another admirer, who insisted on seeing her home as she was alone. She had to consent and they went on, leaving number one behind the log cursing his luck.

Last week Friday Mr. Henry Anderson, who is still living at Devils Lake, cut his foot quite severely with an ax, while splitting wood. He will be laid up for some time, as he is compelled to use crutches.

Tecumseh W. C. T. U. will observe the 16th anniversary of the temperance Crusade. The services will be held at the M. E. church on Sunday evening, December 22, at the usual hour, 7 o'clock. Everybody is invited to attend.

The Michigan Farmer is the best agricultural paper for any Michigan farmer to take. It is a first-class farm journal in every respect. It stands among the best papers on our club list, where it has frequently been before. The Farmer, including the Household and the Herald, will be furnished for $2.

There is fun ahead. At the last meeting of Macon grange it was resolved to hold a "hard times social" on Wednesday evening, January 8th, and everybody is going to be invited to participate. Two prizes will be offered for the two best specimens of hard times, The program will be given in due time.

A Christmas service will be held by the Sunday school of the Presbyterian church at 6 p. m. next Sunday night in the church. The service will consist of appropriate music, a brief address, some selections, etc., together with other devotional exercises. An invitation is extended to all. Remember the hour, 6 o'clock.

The white ribboners will give the anniversary tea, at their temperance rooms, December 27. Let there be a good attendance of the members at the rooms, at two o'clock, as there will be the yearly report given, plans of work for the coming year, and the election of officers. Tea served from 5 to 7, at 10 cents.

To our patrons who desire an able, orthodox, Republican weekly, we have a word to say. You cannot select a better paper than the Detroit Tribune. It is your home organ, it is well edited, bright and newsy. For men of this class, the Tribune and HERALD form an excellent combination. We furnish the two for $2.00.

When you come to select a literary and family weekly of general circulation, it can be said without any exaggeration that the Detroit Free Press still leads the procession. And in politics, it is a strong, manly champion of tariff reform. For a Democrat, no better combination can be selected than the Free Press and the HERALD. We can furnish both papers for $2.00.

At a regular meeting of W. R. C. No. 177 held on Friday evening, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

This is awful weather for the photographers.

C. W. Back will be the new postmaster at Blissfield.

Last fall every one was praying for rain. We are getting it now with vengeance.

Nellie Reynolds is clerking at the Novelty Store during the Holiday rush.

Dr. and Mrs. Kate Cleveland, of Detroit, will spend the holidays at their home in Tecumseh.

Those who want steady work can get a good paying job by reading the "ad." headed "work for the winter."

The frame for the new M. E. Parsonage is up and the work is progressing as rapidly as possible between showers.

In the "Editor's Drawer" of HARPER'S MAGAZINE for January Charles Dudley Warner will discuss the reasonableness of the chewing-gum habit.

Zimmerman's new factory is being pushed foward as rapidly as the weather will premit. It is expected that the shop will be in running order early in the new year.

Dr. H. L. Stewart left home, last Monday, for a trip South. He will visit Chattanooga and other points in that vicinity, and expects to be gone until about New Years.

Geo. S. Tiffany is absent on an eastern trip. He attended a brick makers convention at Philadelphia last week and read a paper on the evolution of the brick machine.

Why not have a Farmers Institute at Tecumseh next February? If the committee were appointed at once, a fine program could be prepared. We commend the idea to the Farmers' Clubs of this vicinity.

Last Friday evening Captain C. R. Miller, of Adrian, delivered a lecture at Raisin Valley Seminary on the "Humanitarian Progress of Law", stating its gradual development from the ancient times down to the present form of government.

The recent death of H. R. Johnston, the traffic manager of the Mackinaw road will be a serious loss to that road. F. B. Drake will act as manager hereafter and T. C. M. Schindler will fill the position of general passenger agent.

While coupling cars at the Lake Shore yards last Friday, Arthur Harding was a little slow in getting his fingers from between the bumpers, and consequently has had several wrapped up for the past week. They will heal in time.

"A talk about Jesus"—will be the subject of a Christmas Sermon for next Sunday morning, December, 22nd, at 10:30, at the Universalist Church. In the evening at seven o'clock a discourse in commemoration of "The landing of the Pilgrims," December, 21st, 1620.

The holiday edition of the Hudson Gazette last week was a stunner. It was printed on tinted book paper and contained sixteen pages, just double the regular size. It was well filled with holiday advertising and was a model of typographical excellence. "Our Jim" is getting there every time.

E. Leroy Mill, of Adrian, a small man with an open face and full jewelled American movement, wants to be census supervisor in the first district. He's secretary of the Lenawee County Agricultural society, and almost well enough acquainted to give the census of the district without canvassing it.—Evening News.

The Cronin jury returned a verdict Monday evening. Three of the prisoners were found guilty and their punishment fixed for life imprisonment, one was sentenced to three years imprisonment, and one was acquitted. It was evidently a compromise verdict, and will disappoint the hot heads on both sides, but even this verdict is far preferable to a disagreement of the jury.

The people of this town should not forget that a committee is engaged in preparing a comic drama entitled "A Scrap of Paper." This is a meritorious play and will be presented by the best local talent. Tickets can be obtained at Spayde Bros, S. P. Hosmer's, Adamson Bros, and at R. C. VanAntwerps. Montie Rowland and Willie McGlasshen, will be on deck with tickets. Look out for them.

The prevailing stormy weather, seemingly, has had little to do with at least one of the Toledo roads. The Wabash has distinguished itself again by overcoming the elements with good road bed, track and train. The train known as No. 42, which arrived at 7:30 this morning, made a fine run for winter weather, worthy of being put on record. The train consisted of nine cars, one of which was the private car of General Manager Hays. In this car is a speed regulator, and it indicated a speed between some points of as high as 68¾ miles an hour, and the average time was 55 miles an hour. The train came in promptly on time and the general manager with his car proceeded to Detroit. That little speed recorder showed the Wabash to be in pretty good condition.—Toledo Blade.

Much needed on a chilly day;
Our cloaks, you know, are rich and fine,
We always keep a perfect line.

Dress goods and trimmings, silks and plush,
You always find a perfect rush
Around the counters, crowded full
Of cottons, silks, and goods of wool.

In fancy goods, why call and see,
I'm sure you'll everyone agree
That here's the place to buy the best,
And every one will sure invest.

If solid comfort you would seek,
Into the third room take a peek;
We've carpets, rugs—the very best,
With blankets, quilts and all the rest

That speak of comfort and good cheer,
Enough to bless the coming year;
A Merry Christmas, one and all,
Just listen to our Xmas call.

We wish you well, where e're you go,

We make several additions this week to our club list which our readers should examine and make a note of.

It is said that George William Curtis, in HARPER'S MAGAZINE for January, will side with the street bands and organ grinders in their fight for liberty in New York.

C. J. Woolley, the well known piano man, for many years tuner for Whitney & Currier, of Toledo, has severed all connection with that house, and will visit Tecumseh as usual, tuning and repairing pianos and pipe organs. Mr. Woolley is special agent for the Kroeger pianos of New York. He will be in Tecumseh on the 16th to remain one week. His address is 234 Truth Street, Toledo, Ohio. Telephone 1141.

Now that everybody is looking about them to see what magazine they will take for the coming year, we would advise them to inquire into the merits of Demorest's Family Magazine. We have just received the January number of this wonderful publication, and cannot speak too highly in its praise. It is certainly what its name implies, a Family Magazine; for in it will be found something to amuse or instruct every member of the family. The mystery is how such a publication can be furnished for only $2.00 per year. It is done, however, by W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York.

With a bright and entertaining December number, the popular Magazine of American History completes its twenty-second volume. It is a noteworthy fact that no other periodical of the time is so carefully preserved by its readers for elegant binding as this literary and historic treasure, and in no library on this continent does a more valuable series exist for reference, its corps of writers being unsurpassed. This splendid magazine is steadily exerting an educational and healthful influence in all departments of literature and study. Subscription price, $5.00 a year, published at 743 Broadway, New York City.

THE END IN SIGHT.

The Cronin Murder Trial in Chicago Will Soon Be Finished.

The Fate of the Five Suspects Soon to Be Known — The Attorneys for the [illegible] Making Their Pleas.

THE CRONIN TRIAL.

CHICAGO, Dec. 11.—At the resumption of court yesterday morning Mr. Forrest continued his attack on the credibility of witnesses for the State. He took up the expert testimony in regard to the blood, and claimed that the State had failed to prove that there was any human blood at all in the Carlson cottage. Then Mr. Forrest attacked the State's counsel and asserted confidently that every circumstance which had been introduced at this trial, which was not brought out at the coroner's inquest, was fabricated. He closed his morning speech with a strong denunciation of the alleged attempts of the police to suppress evidence favorable to the accused.

At the afternoon session Mr. Forrest took up the matter of O'Sullivan's alibi, and declared it must be true because the witnesses in testifying to it had differed in the matter of details. On the main point that O'Sullivan was in the house on the night of May 4 they all agreed. In details they differed. But Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, according to great theologians, differed as to details, but agreed on the main point. Therefore O'Sullivan's alibi was well founded and Coughlin's alibi was equally substantial. But even if it were not it didn't matter. The burden of proof lay on the State, and unless the State proved that Coughlin was at the cottage—overwhelmingly proved it—it could not be for an instant supposed that he was there, the evidence of Mertes and Nieman being unworthy of consideration. He then turned his attention to the testimony concerning the two knives found in Coughlin's possession by Barney Flynn. Starting out with the proposition that possession is prima facie evidence of ownership, he asserted that Mr. Hynes' statement of the probabilities of two men having two knives exactly alike being one chance in a million was proof of the improbability of Mr. Conklin's identification.

CHICAGO, Dec. 12.—At yesterday's session Attorney Forrest resumed his address by an attempt to prove the reliability of the alibi for Dinan's white horse. His argument on this point was exhaustive. Not one circumstance connected with the identification of the animal by Mrs. Conklin was in his mind worthy of belief. The accusation of the State that Dan Coughlin had a motive in killing the doctor was then considered, and Mr. Forrest said that the testimony was given by disreputable characters and was not worthy of consideration. Mr. Forrest then gave his attention to the cause of Martin Burke, and said that there was nothing suspicious in Burke's movements subsequent to May 4. Not a word of evidence had been introduced at the trial to show that Burke was in the Carlson cottage on the night of May 4. The method of identification of Burke in Winnipeg, he said, was unfair, and showed that the State had no hopes of his really being the man that hired Martensen to haul the furniture, or even that it was Burke who rented the cottage. Mr. Forrest closed his speech with an appeal to the jury to acquit his clients because nothing had been proved against them beyond a reasonable doubt.

CHICAGO, Dec. 14.—In the Cronin case yesterday Judge Longenecker made the closing speech, in which he briefly reviewed the testimony and remarks of the defendants' attorneys, and in his remarks said to the jury: "If you believe that my associates and myself have conspired to send the defendants to the gallows by manufacturing evidence, if you believe it, it is your holy duty to acquit the five men sitting there and recommend that the members of the prosecution be indicted and tried for conspiracy to commit murder. Why, if the people believed it, they should take me to the nearest lamp post and hang me without court or jury. Do you think I would put on a witness whose story I didn't believe? Do you think I would fix up a story to hang these men? Gentlemen, before God I had rather have my arms torn from my body than to engage in such villainy." In closing the State's Attorney said: "You are not here to acquit guilty men or convict innocent ones. You are here to do your duty as honorable, honest men."

Judge McConnell immediately began the reading of his charge to the jury. The charge was very elaborate and fair to both sides. He began by saying that the jury were the judges of the law as well as of the facts in this case. He then gave the legal definition of the crime murder. Its punishment as provided by the statutes of the State of Illinois, the law as it is applied to an accessory, the presumption of innocence and the theory of a reasonable doubt, the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence to satisfy the jury of the guilt of the defendants, and said that in giving weight to the evidence as to the manner and cause of death the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that death occurred as charged in the indictment.

The jury must enter upon the consideration of each circumstance proven, having in their minds the presumption of innocence of each of the defendants, and if such fact or circumstance can be explained consistently with the innocence of the accused it is their duty to so explain it. Any circumstance which is essential to a conclusion of guilt against the defendants, or either of them, should be established beyond all reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty before it can be used by the jury against the defendants.

In regard to Beggs the judge said the fact that Beggs was presiding officer of Camp 20 is not a circumstance standing alone tending to establish his guilt of the crime charged in the indictment in this case. And as there is no evidence in this case that any overt act was committed by the defendant Beggs in the commission of the alleged murder charged in the indictment in this case, therefore, unless it is established that a conspiracy was entered into to commit the murder charged in said indictment, to which conspiracy the said Beggs was a party, he should be acquitted.

The jury must not disregard the testimony of witnesses where it appears to be fair, and not unreasonable or unnatural, and where they have not been in any manner impeached. All the evidence must be considered and a verdict rendered in accordance with its weight. If the jury believe from the evidence in this case, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendants, or any of them, conspired and agreed together, or with others, to kill and murder Patrick Henry Cronin, and that in pursuance and furtherance of that common design and by a member or members of such conspiracy the said Patrick Henry Cronin was killed and murdered in manner and form as charged in the indictment in this case, then such of these defendants, if any, are guilty of the murder, whether the identity of the individual doing the killing be established or not, or whether such defendants were present at the time of the killing or not.

Under the charge of conspiracy against any of the defendants to commit murder, it must be proven beyond every reasonable doubt that such defendant combined with one or more persons in the common purpose and with the common design to murder the deceased before you will be justified in believing that the conspiracy existed as charged against him. The burden of proof rests upon the prosecution, and it is required to prove beyond all reasonable doubt that the defendants, and not somebody else, committed the crime charged in the indictment.

The evidence on both sides must be considered without any feeling of resentment or revenge, and if the jury finds that the evidence in this case fails to show any motive on the part of the defendant to commit the crime charged against him, then this is a circumstance in favor of his innocence which the jury ought to consider in connection with all the other evidence in the case in arriving at a verdict. In considering the case, however, the jury are not to go beyond the evidence to hunt up doubts, nor must they entertain such doubts as are merely chimerical or conjectured. A doubt to justify an acquittal must be reasonable, and it must arise from candid and impartial investigation of all the evidence in the case, and unless it is such that were the same kind of doubt interposed in the graver transactions of life it would cause a reasonable and prudent man to hesitate and pause, it is insufficient to authorize a verdict of not guilty. If, after considering all the evidence, you can say you have an abiding conviction of the truth of the charge, you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt.

In this case the jury may, as in their judgment the evidence warrants, find any or all of the defendants guilty, or any or all of them not guilty; and if in their judgment the evidence warrants they may, in case they find the defendants, or any of them, guilty, fix the same penalty for all the defendants found guilty, or different penalties for the different defendants found guilty. And in case they find the defendants, or any of them, guilty of murder, they should fix the penalty either at death or at imprisonment for life in the penitentiary, or at imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term of any number of years not less than fourteen.

At 4 o'clock the case was given to the jury and they retired for consultation. No verdict being reached at 10 o'clock court adjourned.

CHICAGO, Dec. 16.—No verdict was reached yesterday, but early this morning it was reported that the jury, after a deliberation of forty-eight hours, had voted that Daniel Coughlin, Martin Burke, Patrick O'Sullivan, John F. Beggs and John Kunze were guilty of the murder of Dr. Patrick Henry Cronin, and that the three former should hang, Beggs be imprisoned for life and Kunze for twenty-five years. It is more than likely a good deal of it is conjecture, as the jury is closely guarded and a leak is almost impossible. All the morning papers say that probably an agreement has been reached and will be presented at the opening of court at 10 o'clock this morning.

DEATH OF GEN. DAVID ATWOOD.

A Prominent Figure in the History of Wisconsin Gone.

MADISON, Wis., Dec. 12.—General David Atwood, editor and proprietor of the Wisconsin State Journal, died suddenly Wednesday afternoon. His death was entirely unexpected. General Atwood was one of the oldest and most widely-known journalists in the Northwest.

[David Atwood was born at Bedford, N. H., December 15, 1815. He came West at an early day and settled near Freeport and engaged in farming. In 1845 he came to Madison and identified himself with the Express in the capacity of editor, reporter, compositor and foreman. He reported the proceedings of the Territorial Legislature and the entire proceedings of the Constitutional convention. In 1852 he commenced the publication of the Daily State Journal. One year afterwards he associated with himself Horace Rublee, the present editor of the Milwaukee Sentinel. General Atwood was always a stanch Republican. He was one of the leading spirits in the organization of the party, and in 1855 was appointed clerk of the first Republican Assembly ever elected. In 1858 he was commissioned Major-General of the Fifth division of State militia. In 1860 he was elected to the Legislature. He was elected mayor of Madison in 1868. In 1870 he was elected member of Congress to fill the vacancy caused by the death of B. F. Hopkins. While in Congress he obtained an appropriation to finish the United States court-house and post-office here. He leaves a widow and three children, one son and two daughters.]

ROBERT BROWNING.

Death of the Noted English Poet—His Principal Works.

LONDON, Dec. 13.—Robert Browning, the poet, died at 10 o'clock Thursday night without any suffering. He was born in Camberwell, Eng., in 1812, and educated at the University of London. His first published poem, "Pauline," a tale in verse, appeared in 1833. Among his principal works are "Christmas Eve and Easter Day," "Men and Women," "Dramatic Lyrics," "The Ring and the Book," "Red Cotton Night-Cap Country; or, Tuft and Towers," "Return of the Druses," "Colomb's Birthday," "Aristophanes' Apology," "La Saisiaz," "Dramatic Idyls" and "Joco-Seria." In all he published twenty-six volumes.

A Distillery Burned.

PEORIA, Ill., Dec. 14.—The Star distillery, owned by J. & G. Horget, at Pekin, was entirely destroyed by fire at an early hour yesterday morning. The loss was $40,000; insurance, $19,000. Joseph Scheidel, night watchman, was burned to death and several others narrowly escaped. The warehouse, containing 140 barrels of whisky, was also consumed. The cattle-sheds, containing 500 head of cattle, were saved. The distillery was not in the trust. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Silcott's Successor.

DES MOINES, Ia., Dec. 12.—W. C. Shurtleff, of Waterloo, Ia., has been appointed to the position made vacant by the defalcation of Cashier Silcott, and left for Washington Wednesday to enter upon his duties. He was appointed upon the recommendation of Congressman Henderson. He is about 30 years old and has been chairman of the Republican county central committee for several years.

Robbed the Sheriff of $5,000.

WHEELING, W. Va., Dec. 12.—While Sheriff James Watson and Deputy Sheriff James A. White, of Mercer County, were at the Baltimore & Ohio depot waiting to take an East-bound train a sneak thief got away with a sachel in Watson's custody. The valise is said to have contained $5,000 in negotiable paper.

Two Robbers Lynched by Farmers.

DALLAS, Tex., Dec. 16.—Half a dozen farmers who were returning to their homes after selling their cotton were robbed by highwaymen on the road near White Rock. Bloodhounds were put on the tracks of the highwaymen and two of the robbers were captured and hanged by the enraged farmers.

The Clearing Houses.

NEW YORK, Dec. 16.—The exchanges at the leading clearing-houses in the United States during the week ended on Saturday aggregated $1,180,858,539, against $1,325,817,304 the previous week. As compared with the corresponding week of 1888 the increase amounted to 8.9.

Acquitted.

TUCSON, A. T., Dec. 16.—The trial of the seven men on the charge of robbing Paymaster Wham of the United States army of $26,000 last May was concluded Saturday. The jury rendered a verdict of acquittal as to all of the defendants.

Murder and Suicide.

KENT CITY, Mich., Dec. 14.—James Gilmore, a farm hand near here, killed Mrs. James McDonald, the wife of his employer, yesterday, and then took his own life. The refusal of the woman to elope with him caused the deed.

Money for Ireland.

DETROIT, Mich., Dec. 13.—Rev. Dr. Reilly, treasurer of the Irish National League, has cabled $15,000 to Dr. Kenny, treasurer of the Irish League, for use of the tenants' defense fund.

MORTGAGE SALES.

DEFAULT having been made in the payment of a certain mortgage bearing date March 8, A.D., 1881, made by George L. Bidwell and his wife, Frances Bidwell, to William J. Cocker and Isabella M. Cocker; Which said mortgage was on the Ninth day of March, A. D. 1881, duly recorded in the office of Register of Deeds for Lenawee County, Michigan, in Liber 100 of mortgages on page 693; And which said mortgage was afterward, to wit, on the 12th day of April, A.D., [illegible] assigned to Birdsey J. Bidwell, by said William J. Cocker and Isabella M. Cocker, which deed of assignment was on the 29th day of April A.D., 1889, duly recorded in the office of Register of Deeds for Lenawee County aforesaid in Liber 118 of mortgages on page 557; by which default the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative. And whereas there is at this date claimed to be due and unpaid as principal and interest on the said mortgage the sum of Five Hundred and Ninety-two and 36-100 Dollars, and no proceedings have been instituted at law or in equity to collect the same. Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of said power of sale and the statutes of the state of Michigan in such case made and provided, for the purpose of realizing the money now as aforesaid due and owing on said mortgage, together with the interest to accrue thereon and costs and charges of this foreclosure, including an attorney fee of Twenty-five Dollars as provided by law and stipulated for in said mortgage, I shall on the Twenty-seventh day of January, A.D., 1890, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at the east front door of the court house in the city of Adrian, in said Lenawee County, (that being the place where the circuit court for said county is holden) sell at public vendue to the highest bidder all that parcel of land situate in the city of Adrian, Lenawee County, Michigan, described as follows, viz.: All the land of the parties of the first part situate on the "Flats," (so called) in said city, bounded on the easterly limit by Winter street, on the south by the northern boundary line of Remington's addition, on the west by College avenue, (or Water street, as is designated on Willitts & Bird's Wall map of 1874) and on the north by the southern boundary line of residence lots, said lots fronting on Church and Winter streets in said city, being in all Three (3) acres of land, more or less; and being same land conveyed in part to said George L. CLEOPATRA.

Being an Account of the Fall and Vengeance of Harmachis, the Royal Egyptian,

She turned whiter yet—white as the dead—and on her face there grew a look that checked my foolish mirth. "Thou findest, then, Harmachis," she said, in a low, choked voice, and dropping the level of her eyes—"thou findest cause of merriment in what I have said."

"Nay," I answered, "nay, Charmion; forgive me if I laughed. 'Twas rather a laugh of despair; for what am I to say to thee? Thou hast spoken high words of all thou mightest be; is it left for me to tell thee what thou art?"

She shrank, and I paused.

"Speak," she said.

"Thou knowest—none so well—what I am and what my mission is; thou knowest—none so well—that I am sworn to Isis, and may, by law divine, have naught to do with thee."

"Ay," she broke in, in her low voice and with her eyes still fixed upon the ground; "ay, and I know that thy vows are broken in spirit, if not in form—broken like wreaths of clouds—for, Harmachis, thou lovest Cleopatra!"

"It is a lie!" I cried. "Thou wanton girl, who wouldst seduce me from my duty and put me to an open shame!—who, led by passion or ambition, or the love of evil, hast not shamed to break the barriers of thy sex and speak as thou hast spoken—beware lest thou go too far! And if thou wilt have an answer, here it is, put straightly as thy question, Charmion, outside the matter of my duty and my vows, thou art naught to me!—nor, for all thy tender glances, will my heart beat one pulse more fast! Hardly art thou now my friend—for, of a truth, I scarce can trust thee. But, once more, beware! To me thou mayest do thy worst; but if thou dost dare to lift a finger against our cause, that day thou diest! And now is this play done?"

And as, wild with anger, I spoke thus, she shrank back, and yet further back, till at length she rested against the wall, her eyes covered with her hand. But when I ceased she dropped her hand, glancing up, and her face was the face of a statue, wherein the great eyes glowed like embers, and round them was a ring of purple shadow.

"Not altogether done," she said gently; "the arena must yet be sanded!" This she said having reference to the covering up of the blood stains at the gladiatorial shows with fine white sand. "Well," she went on; "waste not thine anger on a thing so vile. I have thrown my throw and I have lost. Væ victis!—ah! Væ victis! Wilt thou not lend me the dagger in thy robe, that here and now I may end my shame? No? Then one word more, Most Royal Harmachis: If thou canst, forget my folly; but, at the least, have no fear from me. I am now, as ever, thy servant and the servant of our cause. Farewell!"

And she went, leaning her hand against the wall. But I, passing to my chamber, flung myself upon my couch and groaned in bitterness of spirit. Alas! we shape our plans, and by slow degrees build up our house of Hope, never counting on the guests that time shall bring to lodge therein. For who can guard against—the Unforeseen.

At length I slept, and evil were my dreams. When I woke the light of the day which should see the red fulfillment of the plot was streaming through the casement, and the birds sang merrily among the garden palms. I woke, and as I woke the sense of trouble pressed in upon me, for I remembered that before this day was gathered to the past I must dip my hands in blood—even in the blood of Cleopatra, who trusted me! Why could I not hate her as I should? There had been a time when I had looked on this act of vengeance with somewhat of a righteous glow of zeal. And now—and now, why, I would frankly give my royal birthright to be free from its necessity! But, alas! I knew that there was no escape. I must drain the cup or be forever cast away. I felt the eyes of Egypt watching me, and the eyes of Egypt's Gods. I prayed to my Mother Isis to give me strength to do this deed, and prayed as I had never prayed before; and, O wonder! no answer came. Nay, how was this? What then had loosed the link between us that, for the first time, the Goddess deigned no reply to her chosen servant? Could it be that I had sinned in heart against her? What had Charmion said—that I loved Cleopatra? Was this sickness love? Nay, a thousand times nay!—'twas but the revolt of Nature against a deed of treachery and blood. The Goddess did but try my strength, or perchance she also turned her holy countenance from blood.

I rose filled with despair, and went about my work like a man without a soul. I conned the fatal lists and noted all the plans—ay, in my brain I gathered up the very words of that proclamation of my Royalty which on the morrow I should issue to the startled world.

"Citizens of Alexandria and dwellers in the land of Egypt," it began, "Cleopatra, the Macedonian, hath, by the command of the Gods, suffered justice for her crimes—" All these and other things I did, but I did them as a man without a soul—as a man moved by a force from without and not from within. And so the minutes wore away. In the third hour of the afternoon I went, as by appointment fixed, to the house where lodged my uncle Sepa—that same house to which some three months gone I had been brought when, for the first time, I entered Alexandria. And here I found assembled in secret conclave the leaders of the revolt in the city, to the number of seven. When I had entered and the doors were barred, they prostrated themselves and cried: "Hail Pharaoh!" But I bade them rise, saying that not yet was I Pharaoh, for the chicken was still in the egg.

"Yea, Prince," said my uncle, "but his beak shows through. Not in vain hath Egypt brooded all these years; an thou fail not with that dagger-stroke of thine—and how canst thou fail?—naught can now stop our course to victory!"

"It is on the knees of the Gods," I answered.

"Nay," he said, "the gods have placed the issue in the hands of a mortal—in thy hands, O Harmachis!—and there is it safe. See; here are the last lists. Thirty-one thousand men who bear arms are sworn to rise when the tidings come to them. Within five days every citadel in Egypt will be in our hands, and then what have we to fear? From Rome but little, for her hands are full; and, besides, we will make alliance with the Triumvirate, and, if need be, buy them off. For of money there is plenty in the land, and if more be wanted thou, Harmachis, knowest where 'tis stored against the need of Khem, and outside the Roman's reach of arm. Who is there to harm us? There is none. Perchance, in this turbulent city, there may be a struggle, and a counter plot to bring Arsinoe to Egypt and set her on the throne. Therefore must Alexandria be severely dealt with—aye, even to destruction, if need be. And for Arsinoe, those go forth to-morrow on the news of the Queen's death who shall slay her secretly."

"There remains the lad Cæsarion," I said. "Rome might claim through Cæsar's son, and the child of Cleopatra inherits Cleopatra's rights. Herein is a double danger."

"Fear not," said my uncle; "to-morrow Cæsarion joins those who begat him in Amenti. I have made provision. The Ptolemies must be stamped out, so that no shoot shall ever spring from that root blasted by Heaven's vengeance."

"Is there no other means?" I asked sadly. "My heart is sick at the promise of this red rain of blood. Well I know the child; he hath Cleopatra's fire and beauty and great Cæsar's will. 'Twas shame to murder him."

"Nay, be not so chicken-hearted, Harmachis," said my uncle, sternly. "What ails thee, then? If the lad is thus, the more reason that he should die. Wouldst thou nurse up a young lion to tear thee from the throne?"

"Be it so," I answered, sighing. "At least he is spared much, and will go hence innocent of evil. And now for the plans."

Long we sat taking counsel, till at length, in face of the great emergency and our high emprise, I felt something of the spirit of former days flow back into my heart. At the last all was ordered, and so ordered that it could scarce miscarry, for it was fixed that if by any chance I could not come to slay Cleopatra on this night, then should the plot hang in the scale until the morrow, when the deed should be done upon occasion. For the death of Cleopatra was the signal. These matters being finished, once more we stood and, our hands upon the sacred symbol, swore the oath that may not be written. And then my uncle kissed me with tears of hope and joy standing in his keen black eyes. He blessed me, saying that gladly would he give his life, ay, and a hundred lives if they were his, if he might but live to see Egypt once more a nation, and me, Harmachis, the descendant of its royal and ancient blood, seated on the Throne. For of a truth was he a patriot indeed, asking nothing for himself, and giving all things to his cause. And I kissed him in turn, and thus we parted. Nor in the flesh did I ever see him more who hath earned the rest that as yet is denied to me.

So I went, and, there being yet time, walked swiftly from place to place in the great city, taking note of the positions of the gates and of the places where our forces must be gathered. At length I came to that quay where I had landed and saw a vessel sailing for the open sea. I looked, and in my heaviness of heart I longed to be aboard of her, to be borne by her white wings to some far shore where I might live obscure, and, forgotten, die. Also I saw another vessel that had dropped down the Nile, from whose deck the passengers were streaming. For a moment I stood watching them, idly wondering if they were from Abouthis, when suddenly I heard a familiar voice beside me.

"La! La!" said the voice. "Why, what a city is this for an old woman to seek her fortune in! And how shall I find those to whom I am known? As well look for a rush in the papyrus-roll. Begone! thou knave, and let my basket of simples lie, or, by the Gods, I'll doctor thee therewith!"

I turned, wondering, and found myself face to face with my foster-nurse, Atoua. She knew me instantly, for I saw her start, but in the presence of the people checked her surprise.

"Good Sir," she whined, lifting up her withered countenance toward me, and at the same time making the secret sign, "by thy dress thou should'st be an astronomer, and I was specially told to avoid astronomers as a pack of lying tricksters who worship their own star only. And, therefore, acting on the principle of contraries, which is law to us women, I speak to thee. For surely in this Alexandria, where all things are upside down, the astronomers may be the honest men, since the rest are clearly knaves." And then, being by now out of earshot of the press, "Royal Harmachis, I am come charged with a message to thee from thy father Amenemhat."

"Is he well?" I asked.

"Yea, he is well, though waiting; for the moment tries him sorely."

"And his message?"

"It is this: He sends greeting to thee, and with it warning that a great danger threatens thee, though he can not read it. These are his words: 'Be steadfast and prosper.'"

I bowed my head and the words struck a new chill of fear into my soul.

"When is the time?" she asked.

"This very night. Where goest thou?"

"To the house of the honorable Sepa, Priest of On. Canst thou guide me thither?"

"Nay, I may not stay; nor is it wise that I should be seen with thee. Hold!" And I called a porter who was idling on the quay, and giving him a piece of money, bade him guide the old wife to the house.

"Farewell," she whispered—"farewell till to-morrow. Be steadfast and prosper!"

Then I turned and went my way through the crowded streets, wherein the people made place for me, the astronomer of Cleopatra, for my fame had spread abroad.

And even as I went my footsteps seemed to beat: Be steadfast! Be steadfast! Be steadfast! till at last it was as though the very ground cried out its very warning to me.

CHAPTER XIV.

OF THE VAILED WORDS OF CHARMION; OF THE PASSING OF HARMACHIS INTO THE PRESENCE OF CLEOPATRA; OVERTHROW OF HARMACHIS.

WAS night, and I sat alone within my chamber, waiting the moment when, as it was agreed, Charmion should summon me to pass down to Cleopatra. Alone I sat, and there before me lay the dagger that was to pierce her. Long and keen it was, and the handle was formed of a sphinx of solid gold. Alone I sat, questioning the future; but no answer came. At length I looked up, and behold! Charmion stood before me—Charmion, no longer gay and bright, but pale of face and hollow-eyed.

"Royal Harmachis," she said, "Cleopatra summons thee presently, to declare to her the voices of the stars."

So the hour had fallen!

"It is well, Charmion," I answered. "Are all things in order?"

"Yea, my Lord; all things are in order; well primed with wine, Paulus guards the gates, the eunuchs are withdrawn save one, the legionaries sleep, and already Sepa and his force lie hid without. Naught has been neglected, and no lamb skipping at the shambles doors can be more innocent of its doom than is Queen Cleopatra."

"It is well," I said again; "let us be going." And rising, I placed the dagger in the bosom of my robe. Taking a cup of wine that stood near I drank deep of it, for food had I scarce tasted all that day.

"One word," she said hurriedly, "for it is not yet time—last night—ah, last night!—and her bosom heaved—"I dreamed a dream that haunts me strangely, and perchance thou also didst dream a dream. 'Twas all a dream and 'tis forgotten; is it not so, my Lord?"

"Yea, yea," I said; "why troublest thou me thus at such an hour?"

"Nay, I know not; but to-night, Harmachis, Fate is in labor of a great event, and in her painful throes mayhap she'll crush me in her grip—me or thee, or the twain of us, Harmachis. And if that be so—well, I would hear from thee before 'tis done, that 'twas naught but a dream, and that dream forgot—"

"Yea, 'tis all a dream," I said, idly; "thou and I, and the solid earth, and this heavy night of terror—ay, and this keen-pointed knife—are these but dreams, and with what face shall the waking come?"

"So, now thou fallest in my humor, Royal Harmachis. As thou sayest, we dream; and while we dream yet can the vision change. For wonderful are the fantasies of dreams, seeing that they have no stability, but vary like the vaporous edge of sunset clouds, building now this thing and now that, being now dark and heavy and new alight with splendor. Therefore, before we wake to-morrow, tell me one word. Is that vision of last night, wherein I seemed to be quite ashamed, and thou didst seem to laugh upon my shame, a fixed fantasy, or can it, perchance, yet change its countenance? For, remember, when that waking comes, the vagaries of our sleep will be more unalterable and more enduring than are the pyramids. Then will they be gathered into that changeless région of the past where all things, great and small—ay, even dreams, Harmachis—are, each in its own semblance, frozen into stone and built within the Tomb of Time immortal."

"Nay, Charmion," I replied. "I grieve if I did pain thee; but o'er that vision comes no change. I said what was in my heart, and there's an end. Thou art my cousin and my friend; more I can never be to thee."

"'Tis well—'tis very well," she said; "let it be forgot. And now on from dream—to dream." And she smiled with such a smile as I had never seen her wear before; 'twas sadder and more fateful than any stamp that grief can set upon the brow.

For—though, being blinded by my own folly and the trouble at my heart, I knew it not—with that smile, for Charmion the Egyptian died the happiness of youth, fled the hope of love, and burst asunder the holy links of duty. With that smile did she consecrate herself to evil, did she renounce her country and her Gods, and trample on her oath. Ay, that smile marks the spot where the stream of history changed its course. For had I never seen it on her face, Octavianus had not bestridden the world and Egypt had once more been free and great.

And yet 'twas but a woman's smile!

"Why lookest thou thus strangely, girl?" I asked.

"In dreams we smile," she answered. "And now 'tis time; follow thou me. Be firm and prosper, Royal Harmachis!" And bending forward, she took my hand and kissed it. Then, with one strange look, she turned and led the way down the stair through the empty halls.

In the chamber that is called the Alabaster Hall, of which the roof is upborne by columns of black marble, we stayed. For beyond was the private chamber of Cleopatra, even the same wherein I had seen her sleeping.

"Abide thou here," she said, "while I tell Cleopatra of thy coming," and she glided from my side.

For long I stood, mayhap in all for half an hour, counting my own heart beats and, as in a dream, striving to gather up my strength to that which lay before me.

At length came Charmion back, her head held low and walking heavily.

"Cleopatra waits thee," she said, "pass on, there is no guard."

"Where do I meet thee when what must be done is done?" I asked, hoarsely.

"Thou meetest me here, and then to Paulus. Be firm and prosper. Fare thee well."

And so I went; but at the curtain I turned suddenly, and there in the midst of that lonely lamp-lit hall I saw a strange sight. Far away, in such a fashion that the light struck full upon her, stood Charmion, her head thrown back, her white arms outstretched as though to clasp, and on her girlish face a stamp of anguished passion so terrible to behold that indeed I can not tell it! For she believed that I, whom she loved, was passing to my death, and this was her last farewell to me.

But of this matter I knew naught; so with another passing pang of wonder I drew aside the curtains, gained the doorway and stood within Cleopatra's chamber. And there, upon a silken couch at the far end of the perfumed chamber, clad in wonderful white attire, rested Cleopatra. In her hand was a jeweled fan of ostrich plumes, wherewith she gently fanned herself, and by her side was her harp of ivory, and a little table whereon were figs and goblets and a flask of ruby-colored wine. Slowly I drew near through the soft, dim light to where in all her glowing beauty lay the wonder of the world. And, indeed, never have I seen her look so fair as she did upon that fatal night. Couched in her amber cushions she seemed to shine as a star on the twilight's glow. From her hair and robes came perfume, from her lips fell music, and in her heavenly eyes all lights changed and gathered as in the ominous opal's disk.

And this was the woman whom I must slay!

Slowly I drew near, bowing as I came; but she took no heed. She lay there, and the jeweled fan floated to and fro like the bright wing of some hovering bird.

At length I stood before her, and she glanced up, the ostrich plumes pressed against her breast as though to hide its beauty.

"What! friend, art thou come?" she said. "'Tis well; for I grew lonely here. Nay, 'tis a weary world! We know so many faces, and so few there are whom we love to see again. Well, stand not there so mute, but be seated." And she pointed with her fan to a carven chair that was placed nigh to her feet.

Once more I bowed and took the seat.

"I have obeyed the Queen's desire," I said, "and with much care and skill worked out the lessons of the stars; and here is the record of my labor. If the Queen permits I will expound it to her." And I rose, in order that I might pass round the couch and, as she read, stab her in the back.

"Nay, Harmachis," she said quietly, and with a slow and lovely smile. "Bide thou where thou art, and give me the writing. By Serapis! thy face is too comely for me to wish to lose the sight of it!"

Checked in this my design, I could do naught but hand her the papyrus, thinking to myself that as she read I would arise suddenly and plunge the dagger to her heart. She took it, and, as she did so, touched my hand. Then she made pretense to read. But no word did she read, for I saw that her eyes were fixed upon me over the edge of the scroll.

PILES! PILES! PILES!

Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment is the only sure cure for Blind, Bleeding or Itching Piles ever discovered. It never fails to cure old chronic cases of long standing.

Judge Coons, Maysville, Ky., says: "Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment cured me after years of suffering."

Judge Coffinbury, Cleveland, O., says: "I have found by experience that Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment gives immediate and permanent relief." Sold by J. J. Orr.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic researches, however, has proven this to be a fact, and result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to the applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet of this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. VINEGAR BITTERS

Grandest Modern Discovery.

Triumph of Pharmacy.

The only true practical

ELIXIR OF LIFE AND HEALTH.

Is one that promotes digestion, improves the appetite, cleanses the liver, purifies the blood, and stimulates brain and nerves without injurious reaction, and one that may be taken alike by adult or infant. Profane compounds, made of vile rum or bad whiskey, sweetened or flavored, under the titles of bitters, tonics, &c., produce effects far worse than the disease for which they are taken.

Vinegar Bitters is a pure tonic, a nervine without being narcotic, a blood purifier without poison a liver tonic without purging, and above all, a life-giving stimulant without alcohol. The only medicine with such powers in the world.

A GENUINE TEMPERANCE BEVERAGE,

far surpassing alcohol in any shape as a tonic, and it might be called

LIQUID LIFE,

since it stimulates, invigorates and regulates digestion, nutrition, secretion, excretion, respiration, and all the functions whereby life is maintained—we literally take in vitality in spoonsful.

It is not too much to assert that the equal of Vinegar Bitters does not exist, and no counterpart or compound with similar virtues has ever been known.

CALIFORNIA,

if remarkable for nothing else, would be immortalized by the production of the medicinal fruits, roots and herbs of which this Bitters is composed. Many of them used by the Indians and the medical profession in the treatment of chills and fevers, rheumatism, catarrh consumption, neuralgia, headache, liver complaint, kidney disease, laundice, gout, piles, boils, skin diseases, &c., &c., too numerous to mention, but easily understood when the action of the Bitters on the vital fluid is remembered. The discovery was partly accidental but the present

PERFECT BITTERS IS THE RESULT OF SCIENCE.

Millions of sufferers have gratefully and gladly endorsed, during the past quarter of a century, the wonderful success of this

PHENOMINAL TONIC OF THE WORLD.

In order to meet every probable demand, two formulas of the same ingredients are now put up.

THE OLD STYLE IS STRONGER, SLIGHTLY BITTER AND MORE CATHARTIC.

THE NEW STYLE, PLEASANT TO THE TASTE AND EXPRESSLY ADAPTED TO DELICATE WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

REMEMBER,

There is no disease of low vitality, debility of functions, or nervous prostration for which

VINEGAR BITTERS IS NOT CURATIVE.

and its singular power over the lower organisms renders it the implacable foe of

THE DEADLY MICROBE AND OMNIPRESENT BACTERIA

in malarial diseases, cholera, consumption, internal diseases, &c., and so great is its power as a germicide that it is an

UNEQUALLED VERMIFUGE.

A book could be written of its virtues, and another of testimonials but it is only necessary to remember its general action upon the liver, blood, brain and nerves, to realize its use in a majority of the ills that flesh is heir to, and that no family should ever be without a bottle of

FIFTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

Both Houses of the National Legislature in Session.

Numerous Bills Introduced in Both Houses — Business Is Now Fully Under Way.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11.—A memorial was presented in the Senate yesterday by Senator Spooner to prohibit boards of trade and other mercantile bodies and individuals from fixing the values of the products of American farms by sales for future deliveries. A Federal election bill was introduced by Senator Chandler to provide against unfair elections in Congressional districts. Senator Turple spoke on his resolution regarding trusts, and said trusts were the gigantic sin of this age and generation. The finance committee reported adversely the bill providing for the organization of National banks with less capital than $50,000. In secret session the nominations of Robert P. Porter to be Superintendent of the Census; Commissioner Groff and Assistant Commissioner Stone and Recorder Townsend of the General Land Office, and Commissioner of Pensions Raum were confirmed.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12.—In the Senate yesterday Senator Call introduced a joint resolution authorizing the President to begin negotiations with the Government of Spain for the establishment of a republic on the island of Cuba. The naval affairs committee made a favorable report on the bill for the relief of the sufferers by the Samoan Disaster. Senator Ingalls introduced (at the request of an association of soldiers of Kansas and Indiana) a service and disability pension bill.

A man who has practised medicine for 40 years, ought to know salt from sugar; read what he says:

TOLEDO O., Jan. 10, 1887.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co.—Gentlemen:—I have been in the general practice of medicine for almost forty years, and would say that in all my practice and experience have never seen a preparation that I could prescribe with as much confidence of success as I can Hall's Catarrah Cure, manufactured by you. Have prescribed it a great many times and its effect is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they would take it according to directions.

Yours Truly,
L. L. GORSUCH, M. D.
Office, 215 Summit St.

We will give $100 for any case of Catarrh that can not be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Taken internally.

Painful Boils.

About three years ago I was troubled with poison in my blood, very irritating and painful boils breaking out all over my body. For two years I suffered with them, trying all sorts of remedies, and doctor's prescriptions without avail. Becoming disgusted with doctor's, and medicines, I had used up to this time, I concluded to try S. S. S. and the result was far beyond my expectations. A few bottles left me in better health than I had been since childhood. I consider S. S. S. the only medicine that will throughly purify poisoned blood.

T. K MAYFIED, Horse Cove, Ky.

A Valuable Tonic.

I have used Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) with good results. As a tonic, it is valuable; as a blood purifier, it is reliable. Rev. J. H. JEFFERSON, Winston, N. C.

Keep it as a Family Medicine.

Mr. J. J. Bradley, writes from Harrison, Ga., under date of September 22, 1889. Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) has been freely used by my family with the best and happiest results. A half dozen bottles entirely relieved my sister of a severe case of scrofula. My wife has frequently found her blood purified and her health improved by S. S. S. I also had a scrofulous affection that has been entirely cured by taking a few bottles of Swift's Specific (S. S. S.)

NEW YORK WEEKLY HERALD

The New York Weekly Herald, at one dollar per year, is the best and cheapest family paper in the United States. During the year 1890 it will even exceed itself in the variety of its contents and its efforts to please its subscribers. New features will be added to its regular departments, including first-class illustrations. Its well-known specialties are: Practical farming and gardening, progress in science, woman's work, stories by the best authors, literature and art, choice flashes of wit and humor, exclusive news for veterans. Information on all subjects. Address, James Gordon Bennett, New York Herald, New York City. Only one dollar a year. Clubbed with the Tecumseh HERALD for two dollars.

THE ATLANTIC FOR 1890.

Sidney, a new serial novel by Margaret Deland, author of John Ward, Preacher, in The Atlantic for 1890. Over the Teacups, a series of papers by Oliver Wendell Holmes, in the Atlantic for 1890. Felicia, a serial by a new writer, Miss Fanny Murfree, sister to "Charles Egbert Craddock," in The Atlantic for 1890. Some Forgotten Political Celebrities, a series of papers by Frank Gaylord Cook, in The Atlantic for 1890; also stories, poems, travel, sketches, essays, papers on education, Politics, art; etc., by the best American writers. Postal notes and money are at the risk of the sender, and therefore remittances should be made by money-order, draft, or registered letter, to Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 4 Park Street, Boston, Mass.

N. Y. TRIBUNE FOR 1890.

During 1890 the New York Tribune will be greatly improved in quality and made more lively, fresh and readable than ever before in its history. Among the special contributors during 1890 will be Andrew Carnegie; Gail Hamilton, Terence V. Powderly, Chauncey M. Depew, Senator John J. Ingalls, Mrs. John A. Logan, Rev. Dr. John R. Paxton and others. Other contributors will be announced hereafter. The articles will cost many thousands of dollars and appear in The Tribune only.

SOLDIERS' STORIES.

The Tribune will also print, in addition to its regular G. A. R. and S. of V. page, a number of entertaining stories of actual experience in the war, not less than 25 in number, each a page of The Tribune in length, by privates and officers of the Union, of a rank not higher than than that of captain. Veterans are invited to contribute to this series of stories. Every tale accepted will be paid for at regular newspaper rates. Prizes of $250, $150 and $75 will be paid for the best three. Manuscripts must be enclosed to "The Tribune, New York," and inscribed "Soldiers' Department."

PAPERS ON FARMING.

In addition to our regular and extremely able agricultural department (two pages a week), The Tribune will print a number of long and carefully prepared articles on particular branches of farming, written by practical experts. Farmers who want to make money out of their farms must read these special contributions in The Tribune. The best Tribune ever seen will be supplied to readers during the coming year. A large number of desirable and novel premiums are added to our list, and they are offered at terms which will enable our readers to obtain them practically at wholesale rates. Send 2 cent stamp for our 30 page catalogue.

VALUABLE PRIZES.

One hundred special prizes will be distributed on May 1, 1890, among the club agents who have, up to that date, sent in the largest 100 clubs of local weekly and semi-weekly subscribers. These prizes will include a $700 piano, a $200 cabinet organ, a $150 solitaire diamond, a free trip to New York, with expenses there paid, etc., etc., etc., being worth a total of $2,440. Prizes are fully described in our new 20 page catalogue; send 2 cent stamp for a copy. Sample copies of the Tribune free.

Subscription rates: weekly, $1 a year. Semi-weekly, $2. New subscribers receive the paper until January 1, 1890, free. Daily, $10 a year. Library of Tribune extras, 12 numbers a year, $2. The Weekly Tribune clubbed with the HERALD at $2.

SANTA CLAUS.

This new high-class weekly is just the thing for grandfathers and grandmothers, uncles and aunts, to give those bright boys and girls in whom they are so much interested. Better than any other present, because it goes fifty two times a year. It is beautiful, practical and interesting. The best writers and picture makers in Europe and America contribute to it. Santa Claus helps boys and girls who help themselves. How does it help them? It offers $1 200 in prizes. Any subscriber may compete; and $120 may be won on any first prize. Send for particulars.

During 1890 the "Story of Columbus" will be told—a splendid thing for teachers to have scholars reading in school. THE HERALD FOR 1890.

On the 25th day of May last the HERALD entered upon the fortieth year of its publication. The 15th day of November last completed fifteen years under its present management and we can truthfully say that the paper never had more friends or truer ones in Northern Lenawee than it has today. It never had a larger subscription list than now, and its prospects for a long career of future usefulness and influence were never more promising. But, like Cæsar, we are ambitious. We aim for a larger list and a wider field to swing in, and our terms for 1890 have been adjusted with that purpose in view. The offers we now present are more attractive and substantial than usual and the variety is such that every man who takes any kind of a newspaper can be accommodated. Read them carefully and note the advantages offered and then pass in your subscription before the opening of the new year.

OFFER NO. ONE.

We have made arrangements with that wide awake illustrated farm magazine, the American Farmer, published at Fort Wayne, Ind., and read by nearly 200,000 farmers, by which that great publication will be mailed direct to the address of any of our subscribers who will come in and pay up all arrearages on subscription and one year in advance from date, and to any new subscriber who will pay one year in advance. The regular subscription price of the American Farmer is $1.00 per year. It costs you nothing. The two papers at our full rate of $1.50 per year.

OFFER NO. TWO.

The modern magazine may be taken as embodying the best literature of the world, as the magazine editor pays the highest prices to novelists, scientists, statesmen, soldiers and even kings and princes for the best they can furnish in the literary line. The well edited magazine becomes an educating influence in the family circle whose importance cannot be overestimated. The special arrangements which we have made with the Cosmopolitan presents very unusual inducements. That magazine, though only in the tenth month under its new management, is already recognized as one of the most interesting publications of the day. You can obtain a magazine which gives you in a year nearly fourteen hundred pages of reading matter by the ablest writers of the world, including six hundred pages of illustrations that are unsurpassed in point of interest and execution at its regular price, only $2.50, and the HERALD free.

OFFER NO. THREE.

Ropp's Commercial Calculator is a practical arithmetic for practical purposes. It contains a large variety of useful, accurate and convenient tables, together with simple, short and practical methods for rapid calculations. It is a veritable vade mecum for the farmer, accountant, or merchant. It surpasses all books of a like character that have ever fallen under our notice. It is bound in limp leather, is of a size convenient to carry in a large pocket, and is sold for $1.00. Any subscriber paying up arrearages and one year in advance, or any new subscriber paying one year in advance at full rates, $1.50 per year, will receive a copy of this book free.

OFFER NO. FOUR.

The tendency of the times is to lower prices, except in those cases in which competition is killed by trusts. The HERALD is not a believer in trusts, but holds to the good old fashioned doctrine that competition is the life of trade. Hence we offer a liberal reduction in rates for the coming year. We have adopted both a cash and a credit rate. You can pay your money and take your choice. We will furnish the HERALD alone

THE FARM AND HOUSEHOLD CYCLOPEDIA.

544 Pages! 249 Illustrations!

This book is a complete ready reference library for farmers and housekeepers, being filled with useful facts, hints and suggestions upon all subjects pertaining to rural and domestic affairs, embracing the results of experiment and research by scientific and practical men and women in all civilized countries. It contains the cream or substance of more than a dozen ordinary agricultural and household books, and is the only first-class work of the kind ever sold at less than six dollars. It is a book to be consulted every day in any emergency, and to be read at all times with interest and profit. It is such a book as every farmer and housekeeper needs and ought to have, supplying the universal want of a reliable counsellor upon every topic relating to the farm and household. The work is profusely illustrated, and is divided into two general headings, viz., THE FARM and THE HOUSEHOLD, each of which occupies half the book. These are again subdivided into a number of departments, as follows:

Rural Architecture, Fences and Gates, Field Crops, Fertilizers, The Garden, Orchard and Vineyard, Small Fruits, Live Stock, The Poultry Yard, The Dairy, The Apiary, Farm Implements, Around the Farm, Cooking Recipes, Ladies' Fancy Work, Floriculture, The Home Physician, The Toilet, The Laundry, Hints and Helps.

All of the above subjects are fully and ably treated in this valuable book. It is a vast storehouse of useful facts, hints and suggestions of the utmost value to farmers and housekeepers, and no man who has a home and an acre or more of land can afford to be without it.

HUMAN NATURE.

If you are interested in the study of HUMAN NATURE and Character, and the Improvement of yourself and others in any way, we would like to call your attention to the PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL AND SCIENCE OF HEALTH, a well-known magazine which has been published for fifty years, and is devoted to all that will improve men Mentally, Morally, or Physically. It is the only magazine of its kind published in this country, and in every way the most important.

The specialty of PORTRAITS of distinguished, or notorious persons, with studies of their character and sketches of their lives, which has always been a marked and attractive feature of the JOURNAL, will still lead the host of good things prepared for the reader.

No one can study themselves or others and not be greatly benefited by the results, and therefore no one can afford NOT to read the JOURNAL. A knowledge of HUMAN NATURE would enable us to understand ourselves and others and to avoid many of the disappointments in life.

TERMS.—Monthly at $2 a year, or 20 cents a Number. To each new subscriber is given either the PHRENOLOGICAL BUST or NEW PHRENOLOGICAL CHART Premium. When the premiums are sent, 15 cents extra must be received with each subscription to pay postage on the JOURNAL and the expense of boxing and packing the Bust, which will be sent by express, or No. 2, a smaller size, or the Chart Premium, will be sent by mail, postpaid.
